Nixon Sees POW's Returning With High Heads

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — President Nixon said Monday American prisoners of war are returning home with "heads high...knowing we had accomplished the objective of the United States" in preventing a Communist takeover of South Vietnam.

The POWs "can step off the plane...knowing that they have not fought in vain," Nixon told newsman after making an appearance at the Jackie Gleason Inverarry Golf Classic. He spoke while sitting in a golf cart with Gleason at his side as a light rain fell on the 18th fairway.

Repeating the term he has used frequently since the settlement, Nixon said "peace with honor" in Vietnam "could not have been achieved had it not been for the support of millions of Americans."

Diary For POW Has Tragic Ending

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press Writer

FAIRHAVEN, Mass. (AP) — Lt. Cmdr. Fred Purrington arrived in the Philippines Sunday to find a diary written by his father telling him what he had missed during six years in a prisoner of war camp-- and a postscript from his sister saying that his father died less than two months ago.

Purrington's father died Dec. 30, discouraged over renewed bombing of North Vietnam and fearful that his son's release was still far off.

His mother died more than a year ago, but Purrington was never officially told. He apparently sensed the death when his mother stopped writing letters to him and his father began.

Purrington called his family after his release Sunday, said his sister, Elizabeth Purrington, and "he was too emotionally charged to talk about it then. He said 'We'll talk about that when we're together.'"

"We're just trying to keep this happy until he gets home," Miss Purrington said Monday. "There'll be plenty of time for that after."

Purrington's father, Henry began keeping his chronicle of day-by-day family happenings in Fairhaven soon after his son's plane was shot down over North Vietnam in October, 1966.

The father bought a boat last summer so he and his son could go fishing together, said Miss Purrington. He even began taking flying lessons so he could experience that with his son.

Now Purrington's sister is the only member of his immediate family still alive.

Miss Purrington said she was reluctant to talk about the deaths with her brother until he got home.

Before their mother's death, in May 1971, she said, "Mom always used to write the letters. When she suddenly stopped and Dad started writing, he must have assumed it. But as far as I know, it was never really confirmed to him."

"When he called, he said, 'I know about Mom.' That was all that was mentioned about it" Miss Purrington said.

When she found out her brother would be arriving in the Philippines, Miss Purrington mailed him his father's diary. She added to it a letter telling of his father's death.

Town Dedicates Report To MacLeish

CONWAY, Mass. (AP)-This western Massachusetts town has dedicated its 1972 town report to Pultizer prize winning poet Archibald MacLeish.

In an 800-word dedication read at the Saturday night annual town meeting, town officials congratulated MacLeish on turning 80 this year and thanked him for "good works and countless kindnesses."

MacLeish, who won the Pulitzer prize twice, and his wife Ada purchased what they call the "uphill farm" here in 1928.

MacLeish, writing from the Antiguas where he makes his winter home, told the town that the dedication was worth "more than 10 Pulitzer prizes."

Since moving to this community of 1,070, MacLeish has written several works about Conway, including a play called "An Evening's journey to Conway, Massachusetts."

The 1972 town report, a listing of who died, who was born, who was appointed, and what was spent, also included a 1973-1974 budget of $704,000.

University Chorale Performs At UConn

By AVIS YUNI

The University Chorale represented UMass in the Intercollegiate Choral Festival held at the University of Connecticut in Storrs, Conn. this past Saturday.

Five colleges participated in this event-Boston University, Brown University, Southern Connecticut State College, University of Connecticut, and University of Massachusetts- sending a combined total of 300 singers, 53 of which were from UMass.

The five combined choirs with their 300 members performed with instrumentalists two works for the about 750 people who attended the concert in the Albert N. Jorgensen Auditorium.

Second in the program they performed Alleluia, Sing a New Song by Jacobus Gallus in which the students were divided by school into three choirs which sang individually and simultaneously during ts work. As one group, all 300 singers also ended the concert with Te Deum, K. 141 by W. A. Mozart.

Each choir also performed individually. The University of Massachusetts Chorale presented three of the works they had performed in their concert on campus in December. Under the direction of Russell E. Falvey who is replacing Dr. Richard DuBois while he is on sabbatical, they performed Ascendit Deus by Peter Philips, Nun danket alle Gott by Johann Pachelbel, and Cantique de Jean Racine, Op. 11 by Gabriel Faure. Karen Thomas conducted the group for Ascendit Deus and was pianist for the other members.

The University of Connecticut Concert Choir under John Poellein performed two modern works. With the use of dramatic visual effects such as a black-out, flashlights, slides, and varied choir positions in the auditorium, they performed two selections from Michael Hennagan's The Family of Man-The Creation with its text from The Bible and James Joyce, and People with a text by Carl Sandburg. They also performed Keet Seel by Barney Childs.

Robert Mollison conducted the Brown University Chorus in Tibi laus by Peter Philips, Die Himmel erzahlen die Ehre Gottes by Heinrich Schutz, and Valiant-for-Truth by Ralph Vaughan Williams.

The Southern Connecticut State College Choir presented Credo by Michael Horvit; Three Fuging Tunes-Invitation by Jacob Kimball, Evening Shade by Stephen Jenks, and Spring by Daniel Belknap; Lovers Love the Spring by Arthur Frackenpohl; and Festival Song by Hassidic. Harmon Diers conducted the group.

Conducted by Joseph Huszti, the Boston University Chorale performed Ave Verum Corpus by William Byrd; Tenebrae factae sunt by Francis Poulenc; and Schaffe in mir, Op. 29, No. 2 by Johannes Brahms.

The program was begun by the University of Conn. Brass Quintet which performed two works by Johann Pezel, Sonata 22 and Three Dance Pieces. The University of Conn. Brass Ensemble also took part in the concert.

Dinner was provided for the choir members by the UConn Student Union Board of Governors, as well as a social hour with drinks after the concert.

The Intercollegiate Choral Festival dates back to 1952 when Trinity College in Burlington, Vermont, began to sponsor an anrfual Intercollegiate Choral Festival under the direction of Dorothy B. Hunt. When Hunt retired in 1967, the festival began to be held on a different campus each year.

The festival provides an opportunity for New England Choirs to come together on a non-competitive basis to hear each other perform, to combine voices in performing one or two choral works, and to interact with students from other campuses. The respective conductors receive a chance to exchange ideas and plan for future choral events.

N.E. Congressmen Set Up Caucus

WASHINGTON (AP)-A union of congressmen and senators intended "to see that New England gets what's coming to it" will open Thursday.

The New England Congressional Caucus, made up of 12 senators and 25 congressmen, will unify political pressure for federal attention and money to help solve New England problems.

"The main thrust," said Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass., "will be to see that New England gest what's coming to it."

It will have a professional research wing, called the New England Economic Office, to analyze the region's problems.

The caucus plans to meet every other Wednesday for breakfast. Among its first concerns will be oil imports and the effect of the federal budget.

The caucus will be directed by Jill A. Schuker, 27, a former aide to Rep. Michael J. Harrington, D-Mass.

It is intended, she said, to be "a supportive mechanism for the entire New England delegation. Bipartisan is the potent force of the caucus, and the worst mistake we could make would be to get into partisan controversy."

The research office will be headed by Paul A. London, an economist who has worked on the Senate Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee.

Whose Genes To Screen?

The lecture will be given at 8 p.m. in the Main Lecture Hall, Academic Building, Hampshire College.

Strike Force Head Refuses Comment

BOSTON (AP)-Edward F. Harrington, head of the Justice Department's New England Strike Force on Organized Crime, has refused comment on reports he will resign this week.

Harrington declined comment on the reports early Monday, but said he would issue a statement Tuesday.

Harrington has headed the force for the past two years, succeeding Walter T. Barnes, the force's first director when it was organized in 1969.

Raids organized by the strike force had netted numerous persons subsequently charged with gambling activities.

Harrington reportedly will resign to enter private law practice with some of his former Justice Department associates.

Campus Carousel

Paper Drives Point Home

By TONY GRANITE

ADD CRUSADING EDITORS...Northern Illinois University's Northern Star has just completed a three-part series investigating misuses of state cars by university personnel.

Investigative reporter Bruce Gill found "hundreds of examples of state cars recording 20 to 40 miles over what state maps report the trips to take and more than 200 examples of state cars exceeding even that."

Misuse most often is "cars taken home and used for personal affairs." And although the administration says it does not like to allow state cars to travel out of state, Reporter Gill discovered three state cars were driven to Canada on a six-day junket that totalled 4,067 miles for the three cars.

MORALE IS HURT among Physical Plant people at the University of Connecticut, according to the Daily Campus, because of an investigation of thefts there.

Campus police are investigating rumors of "wrongdoing" involved with the alleged thefts of University-owned building materials.

ALSO IN CONNECTICUT, the University of Bridgeport is issuing "listeners licenses" to any area resident wishing to attend 750-series courses of the six UB colleges.

The Scribe reports that a flat fee will license the auditor to sit in the classes of his choice for the semester. Only restrictions are availability of space and permission of the instructor.

CAMPUS MAIL deliveries have been tested by a concerned Daily Reporter staffer at Mankato (Miss) State U. And he found them wanting.

It took 22 hours for a piece of inter-campus mail to travel two blocks.

To test the speed and accuracy of deliveries, the newspaper sent letters to 14 randomly selected instructors and department heads.

I Ching For Municipal Managers

Living the Labor Agreement, a course designed to help municipal managers deal with labor unions on a day-to-day basis, will be offered in March by the Institute for Governmental Services, UMass.

The course will be taught twice at the UMass campus--Thursday and Friday, March 1 and 2, and Thursday and Friday, March 15 and 16. Each of the two-day sessions will be followed by a one-day session a month later.

Mr. Paul Door, a labor relations consultant in private and public sectors, will conduct the course for senior and middle management municipal executives or administrators. Focus will be on practical solutions to daily problems of applying the contract once it has been negotiated.

Overnight accomodations (at the UMass Campus Center) and course fee for those attending will be taken care of by the Intergovernmental Personnel Act of 1970. Enrollment will be limited. Persons interested should contact Mrs. Mary Risciotti, associate training coordinator of the IPA program of the UMass Institute.

Free Concert Tomorrow

The UMass Trio will present a concert tomorrow at 8:30 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

Trio members are: Estela K. Olevsky, pianist; Julian Olevsky, violinist; and Leopold Teraspulsky, cellist.

The program will include works by Copland, Beethoven, Bezanson, and Arensky.

Members of the Trio are internationally acclaimed instrumentalists and have appeared in the University campus concert series as soloists and in chamber music programs in past seasons, with public and press acclaim. The public is invited; admission is free.

Italian Summer Program Now Taking Applications

Applications for the University's 1973 Summer Program in Italy are now being accepted, according to Professor Anthony Terrizzi, Director of the Program. Enrollment is limited to 65 students and, since the Program attracts a greater number of applicants from other colleges and universities each year, those interested are urged to apply early. Closing date for application materials is March 15.

Although the Summer Program in Italy is not geared specifically to any one discipline or to language study, Italy--its language, its history, and its people--is the focus of all courses, and each acquires an added dimension by virtue of the fact that it is taught in the country itself. The courses which will be offered in 1973 are: Art 255-Baroque Art and Architecture in Italy; History 203-Urban Life in Medieval and Renaissance Italy; Anthropology 261-Peoples of Europe: The Western Mediterranean: Italy; Italian 291-Italian Literature in Translation; and Italin 110-Elementary Italian. In addition, Italian majors and other qualified students may arrange to take independent study in Italian literature. Students take two courses for a total of 6 credits.

Classes are held in the Bologna Center of John Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies. This building, which is thoroughly air-conditioned and one of the most modern in Bologna, is located in the heart of the University of Bologna and is close to the center of the city.

The group will arrive in Bologna on June 17 for a brief orientation. The summer school session is of seven weeks duration including field trips to nearby cultural centers. After August 8 students will be free to explore both Italy and nearby countries. Those wishing to remain in Bologna may, of course, do so at their own expense. Departure for the United States will be August 24.

The estimated cost of the Program is $875. This amount includes air transportation to and from the United States, tuition, health and library fees, travel and lodging in Italy and should cover most meals in Bologna whether paid directly by the Program or by the student himself. Expenses for the free travel time at the conclusion of the seven week session are in addition to $875 and should be budgeted for.

Students interested in obtaining information about or in enrolling in the Program are invited to attend an informal meeting tomorrow, Feb. 21, at 8:00 in the Campus Center 901. Those who cannot attend this meeting should contact Professor Terrizzi, Herter Hall 429, at their earliest convenience.

New Orleans Police Say Essex Was Alone

By JERRY ESTILL
Associated Press Writer

NEW ORLEANS (AP)—Police Supt. Clarence Giarrusso said Monday the evidence is "overwhelming" that Mark Essex was the lone sniper responsibible for the shootings last month which resulted in eight deaths at the Downtown Howard Johnson Motel.

A 10-page "status report" on the police investigation—first official word on the probe—said: "It has not been definitely determined if Essex did or did not have one or more accomplices or coconspirators."

However, Giarrusso made it clear in an hour-long news conference after the report was issued that police are doubtful Essex had help.

Essex was killed atop the hotel by policemen firing from a helicopter, and police, operating through the night on the assumption—referred to in the report as "a reasonable belief"—that there was more than one sniper, continued to shoot at the building long after Essex was killed.

However, when policemen made it to the roof more than 24 hours after the shooting started Jan. 7, they found only Essex's body. A subsequent search of the hotel turned up no one.

Speculation that Essex was not alone in the hotel incident was based on reports in three main areas— word from a man wounded by a sniper that Essex was not the man who shot him, reports of the helicopter taking fire after Essex was shot and reports of shouting from the roof after Essex was killed.

Robert Bemish, who played possum in an eighth-floor swimming pool for about two hours after being shot, told police the man who shot him had a goatee.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Leo wants to know what's up front—Leo is concerned with the show, with pageantry, with the theater life. For Leo, all the world could be a stage and Leo strives to be the leading actor. John Barrymore, who was a Leo, knew this and told it to his biographer, Gene Fowler. Back problems often plague natives of this zodiacal sign. But walk, limp or crawl, Leo makes it to the center of the spotlight. The show does go on where Leo is involved.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): What has been kept hidden could appear with explosive suddenness. Be ready to confront one who poses as a mystic. Insist on factual information. Press hard for understanding, not nebulous assertions.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Stress the practical. Take cash and let credit go. Capricorn does have your best interests at heart. Avoid temptation to cancel medical, dental appointment. Clear away emotional debris. Face facts as they exist.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Finish rather than initiate project. Deal with Aries. Get rid of burden not rightly your own. Find out where you stand with member of opposite sex. Emotional involvement is highlighted. Maintain balance.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): New deal is in offing. You are under pressure but hold on—by sticking to it you gain advantage. Older persons review your cause and case. Leo becomes ally. Member of opposite sex does turnabout—you are due for surprise and stimulation.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Hunch, ability to get finger on pulse of public—these are emphasized. One who is progressive pays meaningful compliment. Individual who is prejudiced shows true colors. Key now is to adhere to principles. Keep ultimate goal in sight.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Highlight humor, versatility. Financial gain results if you utilize alternatives. You could lose if you stick with losing proposition. Message will become crystal clear. Sagittarius is involved. Read, write and advertise.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Tear down in order to rebuild. Refuse to be blocked, restricted by mere tradition. Be daring, progressive. Move with the times. Your cycle is such that new moves, independence, originality are due to bring success.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 11): You now are able to dig deep and dredge gold mine of information. Utilize powers of perception. Sleuth work now pays dividends. Don't be satisfied with secondhand reports. Go to source. Play "20 questions."

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Friends act in manner that is unusual. Taurus, Libra are likely to be involved. You could be disillusioned with one who claims to speak only the truth. What you discover makes that individual less than truthful. Stick close to home.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be selective. Choose quality. What appears to be easy or a shortcut may be the opposite. Pisces is in picture. You can transform illusions into realities. Key is to believe in your potential. You will understand.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You are handed opportunity which appears to come out of the blue. Actually, however, an older individual pulls some strings. Know it and be true to your principles. Integrity is your ally. Keep communication lines open.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Finish what you start—what you have learned in recent past can be put to constructive use. You receive an accounting. Sense of being and balance is accented. Money situation improves. Check for hidden resources.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY a change in domestic scene is indicated, with September indicated as key month. You are affectionate, attached to parents, resentful of those who appear to threaten your security. This applies to you more so than to the average individual. You often find yourself drawn to those born under the zodiacal sign of Cancer.

Women Gymnasts Down Canadians

Before an overflow crowd in the Boyden auxiliary gymnasium the women's varsity gym team rallied to beat the Montreal Silouettes. The final score was UMass 93.5 and Montreal 83.0 points. This win brings the team's record to four wins with no losses. The young Canadians had some rough goings on the bar and beam events and lost their early lead.

The vaulting event saw some disappointing performances by UMass girls fall to the outstanding performance of the Silouettes. The Canadians took four of the top five spots, with thirteen-year-old Gayle Wendeboron winning first place. Wendy Hotte, also thirteen, was second, fifteen-year-old Grace Goodhue finished fourth, and twelve-year-old wonder Beverly Hush captured fifth. Jeannine Burger, performing below par, was UMass' only bright spot as she finished in third place.

On the uneven bars there was a complete turn around of events. UMass kept its cool and swept all the top five spots. Gail McCarthy finished fifth, Heidi Armstrong was underscored and finished fourth, while Jeannine Burger struggled to complete a third-place routine. Betsy East was tough and took second place with a well completed set. Margie Combs completed a non-stop routine and nailed down the winning spot. At the intermission the score was UMass 47.1 and Montreal 41.7 points.

The balance beam was a pretty good event as UMass took the top three spots and the Canadians took the fourth and fifth places. Margie Combs, though somewhat shaky, performed a good routine and finished third. Thanne Poth was a very pleasing performer and thrilled the crowd with a front walkover and a high somersault dismount. Thanne was second to teammate Anne Vexler who dismounted with a difficult gainer flip. Anne did her best routine this year and earned first place.

The floor exercise event was again a strong one for UMass. Alicia Goode, who seems to get better with every meet, finished fifth. Thanne Poth finished fourth, Jeannine Burger remained awake long enough to place second and Anne Vexler again rose to the occasion and finished first. Anne's high leaps and unique music were very entertaining.

This coming Friday evening, February 23rd, the varsity will have to sharpen up its performances because they will be hosting Westchester State College in an eastern regional meet. The meet will begin at 7:30 p.m. in the Boyden auxiliary gym. All are invited. Admission to students is free. On Saturday the junior varsity travels to Keene for their third meet this season.

Wilkes/Army Hand Wrestlers Double Loss

By JOHN BOCK

WILKES BARRE, Pennsylvania—Just about every athletic team likes to travel. The UMass wrestling team is the exception to that rule as they traveled to Pennsylvania last Saturday to absorb their third and fourth loss of the season.

In the last two parts of the three match triangular the Minutemen were stopped 23-17 by the Army Cadets and 30-4 by the Wilkes College Colonels. In the first part of the tri-meet Wilkes turned back a late rally by Army to beat them 22-16.

In the match against Army after Dave Amato beat Rusty Key 9-3, UMass didn't win again until the 190 pound bout. At 126 Larry Reynolds ran into the strongest 126 pounder in the East in West Point's Jim McArdle and dropped a 3-2 decision to him. McArdle is built like a wall and try as he might Larry couldn't budge him.

Mike McGlaughlin turned in a very respectable performance against Jack Schonover at 134, even though they tied. Schonover was hurt a few weeks ago and was thought to be lost for the season and didn't even wrestle against Wilkes. But Army figured they needed their best man, put him in and the best he could do was tie.

The next five weights were all Army's as they collected 37 points to UMass' 16 and a pin besides. Absorbing the losses for the Minutemen were Steve Rome at 142, Cliff Blom at 150, Steve Benson at 158, Chris Cadwallader at 167, and John LaStella at 177.

The last two bouts kept UMass in the match and made the score close as John Connolly (190) and George Ireland (Heavyweight) pinned their Cadets. Connolly stuck Army's Senior Captain Nage Damas. Damas finished fourth in the East last year at 167 and was moved up from 177 to wrestle. After a scoreless first period in the heavyweight bout Ireland showed the rafters to Bob Johnson at 2:45.

The last part of the three ring circus got under way at 8:00 P.M. and close to four thousand fans were on hand to see the Colonels experience no trouble with the Minutemen as they won eight out of ten bouts and drew in the other two. Picking up ties for UMass were Dave Amato and Steve Benson. In Amato's 118 pound bout he had Jay McGinley on his back for most of the first minute and a half of the second period but only picked up three points. The end of the match strangely saw the riding time in McGinley's favor and thus the tie. Amato told this reporter that McGinley told him after the bout that there was no way he could have had the time to get the point to tie.

The rest of the team looked respectable enough and never quit even when they were behind, but found the defending Middle Atlantic Conference Champs worthy of their third place NCAA Small College ranking. The closest match was at heavyweight as George Ireland was ahead 3-2 and jousting for a takedown and got taken down and lost 5-3.

It might be a long way to Tipperary but the distance to Wilkes is also something to sing about.

Commentary

Strike Three!

By STEVE DeCOSTA

Strike? Not again. We couldn't be so lucky two years in a row. Especially here in New England. With playoff interest running so high for both the Celtics and Bruins who among us will miss the watered-down version of professional baseball to be offered this year at Fenway Park? Last year's respite from the national pastime was regretable only in the sense that it didn't last long enough. April without baseball would be a welcome situation on the already jammed sports calendar for that month.

—The new pinch-hitting rule in the American League will remove one of the last reasons for regarding baseball as a thinking man's game. Arguments and discussion between armchair managers will be reduced to virtually non-existent and irrelevant outbursts of emotion and baseball chauvinism. No longer will it be an important managerial decision to pinch-hit for the pitcher with bases loaded and two outs in the seventh inning with the team trailing 1-0. The new rule will reduce the role of the manager to a point where he will now act as a sophisticated babysitter, co-ordinating efforts of differing individuals throughout the long, self-destructive season.

—Another drawback to the new rule is that it will reduce the elements of upset and surprise in an already too predictable game. Gone will be the days when a pitcher, always regarded as a chump by the opposition, can aid his own cause, and surprise everyone in the ballpark by doing so. I'll never forget sitting in Fenway Park watching Sonny Siebert drive in six runs with a homer and two doubles while personally destroying the Orioles. Or what about Atlanta Braves hurler Tony Cloninger flooring everybody by hitting two grand slams in one game (but that was in the National League and the rulesmakers seem a little more sensible over there). Over all, this is just another attempt to water down an already washed-out sport.

—The St. Louis Cardinals recently reported a new hike in ticket prices for this year. Bleacher seats in Busch Stadium will now cost the outrageous sum of four dollars. In all practicality, policies such as these literally disenfranchise baseball's most important group of fans-the kids. Whatever can be said about the Red Sox, they are still one of the best buys in sports. A kid in Beantown can squander a buck from somewhere and cash it in at Fenway to watch his heroes. That's what it's all about.

HEATHER FEATHER–Every Saturday night Heather Feather, all 389 pounds, smashes her wrestling opponents but she says, "I'm really a lover. I wouldn't hurt you." Heather, who is shown before a match at Detroit's Cobo Hall, keeps in shape by eating cheese and sausage pizza. Heather, who is really Peggy Jones, says she has two sisters who outweigh her.

Splish, Splash

Amid rumors that two members of the 1964 Hungarian Olympic Team would soon join the squad, the UMass Water Polo Club organized for the Spring Season last week. Coach Bill McCafferty outlined the training schedule and announced the formation of The New England Water Polo Conference. The Conference includes UMass, BC, BU, UNH, and Lowell Tech. Plans are underway for a water polo clinic at Northeastern and additional varsity and JV games with Harvard, MIT, Brown, and the New York Athletic Club.

Since the Physical Education Department has refused to pay for caps, the club moved to request equipment funds from the Student Senate. Henry Maclean, Jon Nordby, and Dave Conroy were named Co-Captains.

The coed club is composed of undergraduates, graduate students, faculty and staff members. Anyone in the University community with moderately good swimming skills is welcome to join. The club is currently working out at 11:15 Tuesday and Thursday in the Boyden Pool with Coach McCafferty. Additional practice sessions are at 8:00 Tuesday and Thursday with Associate Coach Sid Schiff.

Although the club has several former stars from Hawaii, California, Canada, and Europe, many of its members have never played water polo before. The competition is low key and everyone plays about an equal amount of time during the games. Last fall club members got into good shape and had a good time.

Frazier Takes Dive

ROTONDA WEST, Fla. (AP) — Race driver Peter Revson stroked to tennis and swimming victories Monday in the Superstars sports competition as boxer Joe Frazier suffered another quick knockout.

"My main intention is to prove that fellows in auto racing have to be good athletes, too," said Revson, a 33-year-old graduate of Cornell.

The handsome bachelor outgunned sleepy-eyed hockey star Rod Gilbert 6-1 in the tennis finals and overtook pole vault record-holder Bob Seagren with a stretch drive to win the 100-meter swimming showdown.

Ten noted athletes are participating in a two-day sports festival at this real estate development on Florida's lower west coast. They are barred from entering events for which they are famous.

Revson earned $6,000 for his two triumphs.

Pro bowler Jim Stefanich of Joliet, Ill., edged baseball slugger Johnny Bench by one stroke with a 41 in the nine-hole golf event for a $3,000 check.

Each man participates in seven events of his choosing. The winner of each gets $3,000 with $2,100 for second, $1,200 for third, $600 for fourth and $300 for fifth.

The overall point leader for two days in the $122,000 competition picks up another $25,000. The top five finishers in each event are awarded points on a 10-7-4-2-1 basis.

Revson was clocked in 1:18.2 for 100 meters, followed by Seagren in 1:19.4, skier Jean-Claude Killy in 1:27.4 and tennis ace Rod Laver in 2:04.5. Gilbert was fifth after being disqualified for touching the pool's bottom.

Frazier, who lost his world heavyweight championship last month in a second-round knockout, didn't last as long in the pool as he did in the ring against George Foreman.

Smokin' Joe hit the pool like an enraged whale, but was 10 meters behind after the first 20 meters of the race. He stopped all together hallway through the 50-meter heat, throwing up his hands and saying: "I quit!" "I know I was in trouble when I put my trunks on," Frazier said. "I just wasn't made for water. I almost drowned out there."

Others entered in Superstars are pro football quarterback Johnny Unitas and 6-foot-9 basketball star Evlin Hayes.

Bench outfumbled Stefanich on the final hole of the golf event. The bowler drove out of bounds to wipe out his two-stroke edge, but the National League's Most Valuable Player then shanked his second shot out of bounds to give it back.

Bench was leading his heat in the swimming competition, but suddenly tired and was disqualified when he walked the final few meters in the shallow end to finish second.

Pucksters Fall To UVM 5-4

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

UMass, they said, was the only team left in division II with a shot at beating the unbeaten Catamounts of Vermont. Well, the continuation of the best rivalry in the division was witnessed by some 2400 fans at the luxurious Springfield Civic Center last night, and the Minutemen, after spotting the cats three—quickies in the opening period, fought back, but could not quite catch the Catamounts and left Civic Center on the short end 5-4. As a result the Cats will probably go on to win the division with an unblemished mark. The Minutemen are 9-4-2 in Division play.

Lonnie Avery came within an eye-lash of scoring the equalizer as his shot from close-in hit the post with about four minutes left in the game. The minutemen, it seemed, had been cheated. The puck just wouldn't go in after a great effort by Avery.

At this stage of the game, the Minutemen realistically should have been out of it. They were in the game almost solely due to the unbelievable net play of Chuck Rheault who stopped 49 shots on the night. Maybe 12 or 15 outstanding stops. The only way the Cats (or anyone) could have beaten Rheault was when he was down and out of the play. This was Chuck's position in 4 of the 5 UVM goals.

At any rate, the Cats jumped out in front to stay with three quick goals between 6:06 and 8:00 of the first period; Miller, Castle, and Mallette scoring, in that sequence. Seemingly the Minutemen were in the process of being blown out early.

The UMass fans came to life at 12:11 of the period when Pat Keenan found daylight after picking up a nice pass from Billy Harris. For Keenan, the faking out of the opposition goal-tender is a mere formality. The Minutemen were on the scoreboard.

Eighty four seconds later the Minutemen closed the gap to one while UVM was a man short. Lonnie Avery set up Keenan in front of the net and Keenan's momentum carried the puck to its destination. UVM 3, UM 2.

The second period was a definite mismatch: UVM vs. Rheault. Chuck managed to come out of nowhere on occasion to stop everything the Catamount forwards could throw at him, except a slapshot by Bill Koch. Rheault even got a piece of that one, but the puck trickled on in to the net. UVM 4, UM 2.

Lonnie Avery brought the Minutemen back to within a single goal beating Steve Eckerson, as he came pouring in on the goal from Eckerson's right at 8:29.

Wright scored a minute later for the Cats but the Minutemen got that one back at 13:55 as Michael Ellis scored on a powerful slapshot from the right point.

The Minutemen continued to apply pressure but were unable to tally the equalizer and thus, were forced to settle for a tough 5-4 defeat while also giving the Catamounts a sweep of the season's series. It was the end of a disappointing weekend for the pucksters who now maintain a 10-9-2 mark (9-4-2 within Division II).

Friday night the Minutemen were downed 5-3 by Bowdoin at Brunswick, Maine, as Keenan's two and Jimmy Coleman's goal went for naught.

The Minutemen came back Saturday with a laugher over hapless Colby (8-3) as Keenan tallied a hat trick. Riley, (2) Stuart, Lynch and Coleman, also tallied for the victors.

Rhody Falls; Vermont Tonite

By MARTY KELLEY

Kingston, R.I.—Yeah' even the Cowbell stopped by . . . UMie Mike Slobokin tapped it all night long next to Dave Gee on the drums . . . They were super . . . The UMass basketball team was not . . . But Kingston, thank God, is in the past . . . And only through a series of near miracles, did the Kingston affair fail to put emnity between a Yankee Conference title and a trip to New York City...The plot has thickened . . .

Jack Leaman will long remember his 65-63 gift in Kingston. Now he's got seven wins in succession and he needs five more for a Beanpot and another NIT watch. He'll get another gift tonight but he won't have to work as hard or worry as much as he did for his present over the weekend.

It's Vermont at the Cage...No problem . . . With eight minutes to play, Chuck Olsen will be in the lineup . . . And it's a good thing, the Minutemen are tired . . . Damn tired.

"Boy, it's a sign of a good team when we can play this lousy and still win", said Tom Austin following the Ram win. "The only basket I got was that goal tending call and even that wasn't going in". But Tommy wasn't the only one who had a rough night Saturday. Take for instance Jimmy Burke.

The only thing Jimmy defensed all weekend was the German measles. Burke spent the evening at SAE -listening to his favorite sportscasters while his team barely got out of capricious Keaney Gymnasium alive. Jack certainly could have used Jimmy but not to be sarcastic . . . it was nice to win without you, Burky . . .

Why? Because the Minutemen showed depth and duplicity to offset obnoxious Robbie Young, Steve Rowell (held to 10-13 points below his average) and Abu Bakr . . . The kid's name is Billy Endicott and if Massachusetts does get past the Harlem River this winter, thank Mr. Endicott. Billy overworked his scholarship with 25 game leading points and as Coach Leaman remarked later, "gave me 30 great minutes of basketball". From there John Murphy read the script.

"I thought Billy was simply outstanding", said Leaman of the 6'3 Sommerville sharpshooter. "I thought Rick Pitino did a great job getting the ball to Billy and I think that's the most shots he took in a game (16). And although Leaman said it was the three D's (Defense, Disciple, and Desire) that carried the Minutemen to victory, he certainly didn't sell John Murphy short.

"John played very poorly in the first half and when Charlie Peters fouled out, I put him back in and he decided then and there that he wanted to play, and he did". "Murph" had a key steal, a rebound to match, a bucket to tie it, and an offensive rebound hoop to win it, and a spectacular bat away of a driving layup with 8 seconds to secure it . . . That's all . . . You might say that John made his presence felt in the last two minutes . . . And the 3700 partisans, minus a loose crew from SAE and a few other UMies, weren't that happy . . . (I bet that crew from SAE goes to Durham, Portland and Orono with us this weekend . . . I'll bet em' a keg) . . .

But Tommy Mac probably had the best and most accurate anecdote following the fray. "You know coach," talking to Leaman, (and to be honest I didn't hear him but I believe Jack) "if this was last year's team, we would have lost this one". Leaman, who had 8 last season by the sum total of 33 points, just winked.

And so with a little help from their friends, the Minutemen are all alone in the race for the Beanpot. Not only did the game keep spectators at Kingston in suspense, but so did the PA announcer. He kept giving us jabs from Orono as he repeatedly kept us abreast of the UMaine-UConn drama eventually won by the hosts, 110-105 in double overtime. And so the 2 year undefeated reign in Orono remains for the Balck Bears until the Minutemen lay seige this weekend . . . If they can do it in Philly, they certainly should be able to turn the trick in Orono, although the setting is far less political.

"If we can't go up there and beat New Hampshire and Maine, then we don't deserve to go to the NIT and possibly face the likes of Maryland and Jacksonville". Leaman added that he has to take care of the Conference first and that tonight and the upcoming weekend death march to the hills carries out that thought . . .

But Rhode Island gave Jack something to worry about. He can sip his tea confidently tonight but as far as the weekend goes, he'll need improvement from his forward line that had problems negotiating with the Rams. "Our front line was weak and we had to rely on defense and rebounding to win this one", said Leaman.

So the NIT game plan continues . . . Rhody is out of the way . . . Vermont is in the way . . . On the bus ride home this weekend we'll pretty much know . . . Enjoy the Cage tonight . . . The last hurdle's just around the corner . . . It's a long ride home from Orono . . .

Trackmen Place Third

By WALT POWERS

The UMass indoor track team, looking very uncomfortable in the role of defending champion, had difficulty in nearly every event, and slipped to third place in Saturday's Yankee Conference championship meet. The meet, held at Durham in New Hampshire's antiquated field house, saw a powerful UConn team, winning nine of the thirteen events, roll to a record setting victory. B.U., showing exceptional depth and quality in the short and middle distance races, won the other four events and finished second.

The Minutemen never could build up the psychological momentum that carried them to victory a year ago. Weak overall competition in the field events was insufficient to neutralize UConn's domination of the field, and B.U.'s strength in the short and middle distance races hurt UMass more than UConn. The team effort, as a whole, was flat. The distance men, usually a UMass strong point, had an off-day and the injury-weakened relay teams had one of their worst afternoons of the season.

Nevertheless, there were a number of encouraging performances. Sophomore Mark Hughes, jumping competitively for the first time in over a month, finished fifth with a jump of 6'2". This tied his lifetime best. Another sophomore, Ed McAleney, finished fourth in the shot-put with a throw of 46'2-1/2". That was the extent of the UMass scoring in the field.

Curt Stegerwald, a freshman hurdler, held his own in the two elimination heats, then just missed nipping UConn's Steve Webster in the finals. Jim Hennessey, impressive in the trials, finished fifth. Co-captain Tony Penleton ran his fastest sixty yard dash of the year, but it was only good enough for fifth place in a tough, record breaking field.

Steve Levin also ran his fastest race of the season in the 600'. But B.U.'s James Taylor was just a little too good. In the 1000' veteran John Maloney couldn't outkick UConn's Jim Verdon and B.U.'s Allan Carr-Lock, two of the best in New England. Freshman Peter Byron, running in the unseeded heat, finsihed fifth.

The Minutemen did well in both the mile and the two-mile, but it was far short of what they'd expected, and Bill Gillin, who ran in both races, was clearly disappointed. In the mile, sophomore Randy Thomas, the defending champ, finished second, Bill Gillin, third, and Paul Catano, fifth. All three had run faster on the same track only a week before. Freshman Tom Maguire tried hard in the two mile, but furious gun-lap kicks by UConn's Bill Cantin and Peter Bortolotti (Maguire's former high school teammate) kept him from winning. Cantin, who also won the mile, became the first distance "double" winner since John Vitale in 1968. Randy Thomas was fourth.

AROUND THE TRACK

Despite the short (eleven laps per mile) track, and cramped conditions in New Hampshire's antiquated field house, four conference records were broken, and another was tied. B.U.'s Ford Dennis became the first Yankee Conference long jumper to reach 24 feet, and also, along with Nigerian teammate Ajayi Akinkuotu, tied the conference dash record at :06.2. B.U. set another record by winning the two-mile elay in a time of 7:47.4.

UConn's Ron Evans was by far the biggest star of the meet though. Evans, last year's NCAA decathlon champion, scored in five events, and won three. He broke the conference record in the pole vault with a leap of 15'5-3/4", and set another record by high jumping 6'9", winning the event for the third straight year.

Howes, Theilman Win In Election

By HOWARD BLOOM

Merle H. Howes defeated two opponents and won a third term as Amherst Selectman yesterday, as a record low voter turnout made it to the polls for the Amherst town elections. Other major races included those for school committee and town meeting member.

Howes, who ran on a platform pledging "reasonable and controlled town growth", defeated his opponent, 26 year old George S. Scheurer, in each of Amherst's seven precincts. Scheurer was even defeated, although by only a few votes, in Precinct 2, which includes all of the Southwest dorms and the Lincoln Apartments. Student voter registration there is higher than in any other Precinct.

The unofficial vote count in the selectman's contest was: Howes—1729, and Scheurer—1042. Eric Walgren, who campaigned as a write-in candidate, eceived two votes.

In the race for school committee, there was one mild surprise as incumbent Nat Reed, defeated last November in his bid for state representative, could only manage second spot behind Marylou Theilman, who campaigned on a platform of getting the parents of school children more involved in the decision-making processes in the schools.

Two other candidates contested for the two available school committee seats, Frederic L. Cheyette and Harold B. Gatslick. Cheyette came in a close third behind Reed.

The unofficial tally for school committee was: Theilman—1350, Reed—1267, Cheyette—1165, Gatslick—976.

Five students were successful in their bids for town meeting member, with the majority of the student candidates going down to defeat. All were elected from Precinct 2 for the town meeting which will begin during the second week of March.

All members of the Precinct 7 Eight were defeated, as were the two student candidates running in Precinct 3. The poor showing by these students was being blamed on the low turnout at the polls by the college voters, who total 3000 in Amherst. Less than 10% of this group made it to the polls, estimates had it.

Officially, only 25.7% of the registered voters in Amherst exercised their right yesterday. Town Clerk Estelle Matuszko had predicted a moderate voter turnout, but Tuesday's showing fell far short of her expectations. A large turnout was expected to benefit Scheurer, who had been counting on the student vote to help him defeat Howes.

Throughout his campaign, the UMass graduate student had stressed the need for better rent conditions for tenants, less traffic congestion, his opposition to "Amherst Fields", and an end to the unrestricted dumping of sewage in the Connecticut River.

But Howes, putting great emphasis on his six years of experience on the Board and his intimate knowledge of the workings of town government appealed to more voters.

The election had been billed as a "break-the-ice" election, as far as getting students directly involved in the workings of Amherst's government. The students reasoned that if they could get just a few of their candidates for town meeting elected this year, as well as Scheurer, it would make it easier for those who ran in subsequent years. But the results fell short of their expectations.

MSP May Represent Faculty

By CINDY GONET

The Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) may file to be the collective bargaining agent for the UMass campus within a week.

"I would not be shocked if, at the end of a week, we have the 30% of the faculty needed to petition for the election of a collective barganing agent," said Arnold Schneider in an MSP meeting held yesterday afternoon.

This week marks a full-fledged rive for A&D cards (authorization and designation cards), which name the MSP affiliated with the Massachusetts Teachers' Association (MTA) as agents to petition for recognition as bargaining agents by election among the faculty.

Said Schneider, "By filing an A&D card, you're actually consenting to the election, not to any agent's recognitition. We're already 20% of the way there, with well over 400 cards."

At the maximum allowable length of time, the MSP is permitting two weeks for the petitioning process, and the election process may begin on April 15.

In petitioning for A&D cards, the MSP members spoke of faculty members belonging to minorities who proved hesitant about signing for an election for collective bargaining agents.

Much discussion at the meeting focused on equal departmental representation. MSP policy presently is guided by the National Education Association (NEA), an affiliate. The NEA has a firm liberal policy in regard to minorities. At the MSP meeting, it was unanimously voted to make recommendations to all committees on policy relating to minorities.

Other business taken up was policy dealing with publicity of MSP/MTA activities. Many of the faculty expressed concern over an article which appeared in yesterday's Collegian. The impression may have been conveyed that the MTA was buying the MSP.

To eradicate any false assumptions, the MSP voted to make it policy that all publicity notices must first be filtered through a publicity board. Policy also dictates that it is mandatory that all personal interviews convey words which attribute to personal opinion.

Selectmen Approve Hitchhiker Station

By ED FOGARTY

The Amherst Board of Selectmen voted last night to establish an experimental courtesy pickup station for hitchhikers on South Pleasant Street, between Walnut and Hitchcock Road. If the experiment proves successful the Board may expand the pickup stations to other locations.

Jake Bishop, Chairman of the Subcommittee on hitchhiking, advised that the pickup stations would involve no construction. A sign will be erected to indicate a location for hitchhikers to be picked up.

The pickup station is aimed at reducing the danger of accidents due to the hiker, the driver, and to innocent third parties. It is also to alleviate traffic congestion at major intersections such as Route 9 and Route 116.

Allen L. Torrey, Town Manager, expressed doubt as to the legality of establishing pickup stations on state roads. The Board voted to have Torrey write to the Mass. Dept. of Public Works about with the Five College Bus System to improve their service.

"The situation is a really bad placing pickup station signs on state highways.

The Board also voted to consult William Malone, Chairman of the Citizens Advisory Committee, added that the present Five College System is a two-loop system where a traveller many times has to get off one bus to pick up another to get to his location.

"Why would anyone wait 15 minutes to get there when he can get there in 25 by hitchhiking?" asked Malone.

Bishop and the Board discussed what Bishop called the necessity of stopping hitchhiking in Amerst Center. Bishop said that hitchhiking causes congestion in Amherst which results in potential problems for the fire station and the business district.

The Board voted to ask UMass to extend current bus service into the evening and to send a letter to the UMass Student Senate asking them to work with the Board to solve the hitchhiking problem.

The Board said it had asked the Student Senate to attend last night's meeting. No Student Senate representative was in attendance.

The Board also took under consideration a recommendation by Richard Howland, UMass student attorney suggesting implementing a 'chit' system as used in some European countries for hitchhikers.

In further business the Board voted to take under advisement an application for a Wine and Malt Common Victualer license by Mr. John Ennis, Attorney for the Newman Center. The license would allow the Newman Center Cafeteria to sell wine and malt beverages with meals.

Brad Parker, manager of the Village Inn, objected to the application. He pointed out that the Newman Center does not pay taxes and "wouldn't it be wiser to give

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery

Geophysicist And An Activist

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

While everyone on campus knows that he exists and occupies an office "somewhere" in Whitmore, few people know anything about the chancellor of this University other than his name.

What follows is the result of an interview with Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery. The first part is a short biography of his life, the second his views on a number of current campus and university issues.

On reorganization: It would be detrimental to "regionalize the students."

Randolph W. Bromery, 47, was born in Maryland. The high school he went to was segregated, so he spent his four years "hammering", as he puts it, studying to be a machinist and metal worker. Vocational courses, Bromery says, were the only public education available to black men in Maryland at that time.

After high school he worked briefly in a machine shop until World War II and the draft intervened, sending him into the service.

At the war's end with the enactment of the GI Bill, Bromery entered the University of Michigan. Two years into college, however, he transferred to Howard University summer school to be near his mother who, the doctors said, was soon to die of muscular dystrophy. The summer turned into a year and by then Bromery decided to finish off at Howard, graduating with a degree in mathematics and a minor in physics.

After graduation, he joined the U.S. Geological Survey as a mathematician, later being "converted" to a geophysicist.

During those first years with the Survey the "world changed" Bromery says. His B.S. didn't carry the weight it once had so in 1956 he entered American University, Washington, D.C., as a part-time student, still working full-time with the Survey. In 1962 he graduated with a masters in geophysical geology and oceanography.

In 1962 Bromery received an in-service scholarship and entered John Hopkins University, graduating with a doctorate in geology and a minor in oceanography and physical geology.

After graduating from John Hopkins, Bromery received a number of offers from colleges and universities to teach, but except for a five-year stint at Howard teaching night school, Bromery didn't seriously consider accepting any offers, though he by now had the Ph.D. and publishing record required by most universities.

Bromery came to UMass almost by a fluke. In New England as head of the Survey's geophysical work, Bromery received an offer from "a Boston university". While in Boston for an interview, he was invited by UMass to give a paper at a conference being held on campus. At the conference, he was offered a position and in 1967 found himself on campus as an assistant professor.

In 1968 he became chairman of the Geology Department, in 1969 he became special assistant to then Chancellor Oswald Tippo, and in 1970 became Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs.

Then came the turbulent fall of 1971. Tippo, involved in a budget dispute with the then new university president, Robert Wood, resigned. Bromery was appointed acting-chancellor to a campus having ferverish visions of a UMass with a lot of building and nothing to put in them.

That didn't happen and in 1972, after a long search procedure, Bromery was named permanent chancellor.

Not that that is all he does.

Bromery still teaches a course in geology and works for the Survey. He is also active nationally in a number of black organizations.

He has recently been appointed to the board of directors of Rev. Jesse Jackson's PUSH (People United to Save Humanity), a Chicago based organization that was described by Newsweek as "pressuring white corporations to hire black workers and patronize black businesses." In his capacity as a member of PUSH's board, Bromery, along with the president of Howard University, runs the educational component of PUSH.

". . . Everything you're doing has to be done."

A spin-off of his involvement in PUSH, Bromery and a number of other black educators and professional people are drawing up an agenda of the educational needs of blacks in the United States.

Bromery says it will serve a number of purposes including; a clear definition of the problems, some solutions, suggest financing, and make projections as to where black talent is needed, both in and out of the black "geographical" community. It will also, Bromery says, "point out what we feel this country's obligation for the education of black people."

Bromery has also just been appointed by Secretary of the Interior Rogers Morton chairman of an advisory committee to the secretary. The committee will deal with increasing the participation of minorities in the earth sciences and within the Interior Department.

Queried on how he manages to fit all his activities in and still be chancellor, Bromery leaned back, laughed for a moment, then grew quite serious. "Everything you're doing has to be done."

The University, Bromery feels has to have national visibility. It is not, he says, a provincial institute. When the chancellor of the university hits the national media, in whatever capacity, his institution does too, Bromery feels. While he does have a commitment to UMass, Bromery adds that he also has a commitment to the black community nationally and, when time allows, will do more in that area.

A number of issues are facing the campus now, the resolutions of which will effect the direction of UMass for some time to come. What follows is the chancellor's views on a few of the most current and the general status of the University.

UMass-Bromery feels UMass has done a good job up to now, but has made the mistake of not letting the state know about it. More has to be done internally, Bromery feels, to create new programs and modify existing ones, so students will feel they are better off when they leave than when they came. A lot of students who get degrees haven't benefitted, Bromery says, but have just been given a piece of paper.

Reorganization-UMass isn't a regional institute. 62% of the students are from east of Worcester. It would be detrimental, Bromery says, to the University and the Amherst campus to "regionalize the students." The

Professional Association Discusses Job Security

By NANCY BASMAJIAN

A meeting of the newly formed UMass Professional Association last night established the Association's bylaws and discussed a University policy that directly affects the members of the Association.

The Trustee-approved policy provides employment security and employee evaluation and procedures, and longer-term contracts and professional leave for professional non-academic University personnel. This policy will place the non-academic professionals on a comparable level with the academic professionals in the University.

Paul Meade, Association moderator, opened last night's meeting, and Speaker Katy Gilmor followed with remarks on the policy that was approved by the Board of Trustees on January 31 of this year. The Board's approval came without consultation with any of the University's professional non-academic staff. The Professional Association's membership is composed of these non- academic University staff members.

Ms. Gilmor outlined the various committees that have been formed within the Association. They are the Personnel Committee, concerned with tenure, working conditions and job security; the Professional Development Committee; the Membership Committee; and the Collective Bargaining Study Group.

Emphasizing the need of feedback on these committees Ms. Gilmor continued, "It is essential for them to know what kinds of practices have developed in each department." She concluded with, "I believe our role will be more extensive than it has been in the past," referring to the role of the University Profess. non-academic staff in policy making.

Discussion ensued as the Association members aired dissatisfactions with the policy as approved by the Trustees.

The policy, entitled Personnel Policy for Professional Non-Academic Staff, lacks any provision for an employee appeals system. Such a system was recommended in a 1971 report to then-Chancellor Tippo, known as the Conlon Report. The Conlon Rerpot, headed by Professor Conlon, initiated the formation of the policy now in question, but that was the extent of professional non-academic staff involvement in the making of the policy. The Trustee approved policy is a product of the University administration under President Wood.

Chief among expressed concerns with the policy at last night's meeting was the lack of an appeals system. When one Association member complained and emphasized the need of a system of appeals, the reply was that grievance cases so far have been based on common sense. According to one member, "We need our own grievance committee, and we ought to publicize it." The Association members were in agreement on the idea of a grievance committee.

Also in question was the policy's method of employee evaluation. "Nowhere has the employee been given warning that his performance is below par," commented a member who said that employees are simply given notice, not allowed to improve upon recommendations.

Ennis retorted that the Newman Center served as a center for many civic functions in town.

In further business, the Board voted to appropriate $19,073 for the implementation of the SCOG (Select Committee on Growth) to report. The money will be used to institute the Comprehensive Planning phase of SCOG.

Legal Aid Reform Proposed

By BILL BALLOU

The Student Senate Governmental Affairs Committee last night reported favorably out of committee a bill designed to reform the office of Attorney for Students. The bill, an amended version, of one submitted to the Governmental Affairs Committee by an ad hoc subcommittee chaired by John Stevens, aims basically at giving students a greater voice in undergrad legal services.

The original bill, as proposed by Stevens' subcommittee, had met with the opposition of Dick Howland, the present Attorney for Students. Howland had said during last night's committee meeting that he could not "live" with the bill as presented to Governmental Affairs. At that time it seemed that if the bill, as it stood, was passed by the Student Senate it would have resulted in Howland's resignation.

However Howland and Stevens, in a late-night meeting, reconciled personal differences and, according to Stevens, "minor differences in the bill". This resulted in Howland changing his opposition to support for the bill.

What the bill basically does is set up an expanded "office of legal services" which is supposed to "provide counseling, advice, representation, and education to the student body of UMass concerning all legal matters."

Stevens says that the bill, if passed, will "reform the office of General Counsel to include greater student input."

The bill features a Legal Services Office Governing Board that will decide on general policies and provide ongoing evaluation of the Legal Services Office.

The Governing Board was one of the most controversial sections of the bill and the final proposal that will go before the Senate tonight is an amended version of the one which had been set-up by the subcommittee. Changes include a change in the number and composition of board members and a change in the Board's duties as search committee for personnel to staff of the proposed Legal Services Office.

The amended board is larger than the one in the original proposal and contains more undergraduate non-senate representation. It will still serve as Search Committee for the Director, but the Director has more influence in the choosing of other staff than he did in the original version.

Howland had contended that the Board responded to a "non-existent need" before the amendments. Stevens had said that the Board would be concerned more with "policy" than "individual cases."

Even though the bill is not on tomorrow night's Senate agenda, it is expected to be taken up by the Senate at the meeting. Proponents of the bill have indicated that they think it has a good chance of passing.

Bromery: The Role of UMass

University, he says, serves the Commonwealth, not just western Massachusetts.

Bromery wouldn't comment on the specifics of the plan saying all he had seen so far was a draft, and would wait until the governor submits legislation to the general court. What his own role will be in either fighting or support reorganization, Bromery said, will be determined by the president's office and future events.

Reorganization would dive Massachusetts into five regions, each with its own board supervising all education from the elementary to post-secondary level. Above the regional boards there would be two statewide boards, one for elementary education and secondary, the other for education.

Fiscal '74 budget-Better than the '73 budget Bromery said, but not all that is needed. The University, he says, did moderately well in teaching positions, but badly in support areas, secretarial, travel, equipment rental and purchase areas. There is more money for library books, Bromery said, but added what was needed was not just funds to fill a building but money to make the library quality right for a campus of this size and diversity.

Work study, federall funded, will be seriously hurt by Nixon's new budget. In-state financial aid has not increased enough to cover the numerical increase in the student body, which will mean spreading out what is at hand among a greater number of students. Inflation has also cut into the funds.

Few Attend Food Services

By MARY MULLOY

Only five interested students last night attended the meeting of the Food Services Committee, a subcommittee of the Service Department of the Student Senate. Committeeheads Danny Caruso and Donna McCarthy cited lack of student participation and interested as the principal reason why changes are not being initiated within the food services.

Currently, the committee is still in the formation stage; however, those present expressed the hope that more students would become involved, as much legwork and feed-back from students is necessary to accomplish their goals.

The Committee plans to:

1) investigate the types of food service plans in other universities of comparable size in the hope of arriving at a better method.

2) discuss with Attorney Howland the legality of forcing students to purchase a meal ticket and not allowing refunds on meals not eaten or the transferral of meal tickets.

3) set up a student advisory board to work with Mr. Stoneham, the director of Food Services.

4) enlist the aid of the infirmary to discover how many illnesses can be related to dining commons food.

5) ask Mr. Stoneham whether the comments made on "Bitch Day" were ever answered, and why it is cheaper for commuters who purchase stubs on a weekly basis.

Committee members expressed interest in the ideas and help of the students on this campus. However, they realize the futility of mere talk and are striving towards long range proactive goals rather than short term reactions.

The Food Service Committee will hold weekly meetings on Tuesday nights, at 7 p.m., in Room 177, at the Campus Center. Next week, they will invite Mr. Stoneham to an open meeting to give students an opportunity to direct questions to him.

Budget OK's NES Proposal

By BRIAN COYNE

The Student Senate Budget Committee continued its review of funding rationales submitted by student organizations in its weekly meeting last night.

The committee also approved the final budget proposals from Northern Educational Services (NES) and the Amateur Radio Association.

Groups whose rationales were approved included the University Day School, Poverty Committee, Boltwood, Project, Northampton Volunteers, Black Mass and Armenian Club.

The committee recommended against the funding of the Young Socialist Alliance (YSA). Paul Doran, committee chairman, was opposed to funding, expressing the opinion that funding the group would lead to supporting many more such politically oriented groups. He said, "This would open the door to many other groups.

The student activities fee is too high already." Representatives from YSA charged that the opposition to funding stemmed from political bias.

The final vote on the proposal will come in the Senate in the near future.

The University Day School is planning to institute a toy lending library next year and for this reason was funded.

Education about and research into the problems of the poor in the United States were the major goals advanced by the Poverty Committee in its request to the Budgets Committee.

The committee unanimously approved the rationales of the Boltwood Project, Black Mass and Northampton Volunteers. Boltwood emphasized their extreme need for transportation money if they are to remain in existence.

Damage Billing Overhaul Pondered

By DENNY MATTEAU

The East Area Business Office proposed last night to overhaul the Student Damages Billing system, saying the present system "is one which operates from a basic premise of guilt by association...(and) is difficult to administer effectively."

The proposal was made by the office (which is in charge for the entire campus besides Southwest and the Student Union complex) at a meeting of the Student Senate Rents and Fees Committee.

Under the new system, money would be collected from students at the beginning of the year, and the less money spent for damages, the more would be available for other uses--such as recreation or buying new equipment.

CCEBS Meeting

There will be a mandatory meeting of all CCEBS (Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students) juniors today at 6 p.m. in the Campus Center. A notice of the location will be posted in the center.

Laos Reaches Cease-Fire

VIENTIANE, Laos (AP) — The royal Laotian government announced Tuesday it has reached agreement with the Communist Pathet Lao on a cease-fire after more than a decade of Laotian fighting overshadowed by U.S. and North Vietnamese intervention in the tiny, landlocked kingdom.

The official Vientiane government radio said the agreement would be signed at 11 a.m. Wednesday–11 p.m. Tuesday EST–in the office of 72-year-old Premier Souvanna Phouma. It gave no details of the agreement.

The government radio did not say when the cease-fire would become effective. Some reports, including one from the official Soviet news agency Tass, said it would be at noon Vientiane time Thursday.

The bilateral agreement comes 25 days after a Vietnam peace agreement was signed in Paris by the United States, North Vietnam, South Vietnam and the Viet Cong. A cease-fire was declared in Vietnam Jan. 28, and the following day President Lon Nol proclaimed a unilateral truce in Cambodia.

But the shooting and bloodshed have not stopped in either Vietnam or Cambodia. While U.S. warplanes have halted their attacks in Vietnam, they have continued raids in Laos and Cambodia.

A spokesman for the U.S. Defense Department, Jerry W. Friedheim, said in Washington that U.S. bombing operations in Laos have not yet halted.

"To the best of my knowledge, it is going on today," Friedheim said.

Lt. Cmdr. Medford D. Dorsey, information officer for the U.S. Pacific Command in Honolulu, refused to say whether the American strikes were continuing. The command issued a statement saying only that more strikes were carried out Monday.

The United States has been bombing in Laos since 1964. The Defense Department lists more than 300 American servicemen missing there.

Supreme Court Stops Anti-ITT Action

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court yesterday turned back a move by consumer crusader Ralph Nader to reopen a government antitrust suit against International Telephone and Telegraph Co.

In an 8-1 ruling the justices agreed with a federal district court in Connecticut that the government did not have to reveal why it had decided to reach a settlement with ITT.

Nader's appeal represented an effort to give the public a greater opportunity to participate in antitrust actions against large business. Only Justice William O. Douglas voted to grant him a hearing.

The 1971 agreement permitted ITT to keep the Hartford Insurance Co. but called for divestiture of three other firms with annual sales of more than $1 billion.

Nader and an associate Reuben B. Robertson, III, said the government's reason, which they said was to spare ITT and its stockholders great financial hardship, surfaced only because the suit became an issue during Senate hearings on the nomination of Atty. Gen. Richard G. Kleindienst.

The Supreme Court in another action declined to review the conviction of Sirhan Bishara Sirhan for the murder of Sen. Robert F. Kennedy in Los Angeles in 1968.

Sirhan's lawyers claimed in an appeal that police had searched his mother's home unconstitutionally after the shooting and there was new evidence that he did not fire the fatal bullet.

Kennedy was slain just after he had won the California Democratic presidential primary in his quest for the party's 1968 nomination. Sirhan was sentenced to the gas chamber, but when the California Supreme Court barred capital punishment he was resentenced to life imprisonment.

His appeal was turned down without comment or dissent.

Meanwhile, six appeals were granted review. All will be considered next term.

Among the more significant:

1-A black worker in Denver claiming he was fired for racial reasons is seeking the right to have his lawsuit considered by federal courts even though a labor arbitrator has ruled the discharge was "for good cause."

2-The Justice Department wants a federal grand jury in Ohio to be allowed to use material gained without a search warrant in a gambling investigation.

3-New York officials are trying to reinstate a law that required public contractors to testify fully before grand juries investigating bribery and other crimes. The case concerns plans for a domed stadium in Buffalo.

US Report Says

60,000 S. Viets Still Homeless

By EDITH M. LEDERER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP) — More than 200,000 South Vietnamese were driven from their homes by intense fighting during the first 19 days of the cease-fire and about one-fourth of them still can't go home, a U.S. report disclosed Tuesday.

"The great majority were forced to leave their home areas for only a few hours or a couple of days and have since returned to begin reconstruction," the official report said.

But an estimated 60,300 persons still cannot return because of continued fighting, it added.

"These are the people you have to worry about," an American source said.

The report said only about 15,000 persons driven from their homes have registered at government refugee camps "although more will probably do so if they cannot return home soon."

There are 632,300 persons in refugee camps throughout South Vietnam. American experts estimate between one million and two million others could be eligible for refugee relief.

These one million to two million, many uprooted in the 1972 enemy offensive, are either living with relatives or have taken refuge in the cities, where they lose eligibility for relief.

The largest number of refugees from fighting after the cease-fire came from Tay Ninh Province northwest of Saigon.

American sources said some families in Hau Nghia Province west of Saigon and Chau Doc Province at the western edge of the Mekong Delta lost their homes for the third time this year, the latest in fighting after the cease-fire.

Hau Nghia was one of the areas where Communist-led forces sought to seize clusters of hamlets in a land-grab operation that began before the cease-fire took effect and continued afterward. Chau Doc is across the Cambodian border from the headquarters of the North Vietnamese 1st Division, which has moved back and forth across the frontier.

The report covered the Jan. 28-Feb. 15 period and was based on information from American and South Vietnamese officials in the field. It was prepared for use by U.S. officials at all levels in Vietnam and Washington.

Equality Ratification Sought By Feminists

By PEGGY SIMPSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Feminists are determined to get the equal rights amendment ratified by Aug. 26 on the 53rd anniversary of the constitutional amendment giving women the vote.

That determination received added impetus at the just-completed National Organization for Women convention.

Ann Scott, NOW's vice president for legislation, said the feminists will adopt more high-powered, visible tactics and "will stop being nice about it."

While the letter-writing and polite personal visits will continue she said NOW members will picket and demonstrate to push 11 more states to ratify the amendment.

The concentration will be on Ohio, Illinois, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Washington, she said.

Wilma Scott Heide, NOW's president, told a news conference Tuesday that she is encouraging the organization to take radical steps to rid society of sexism and racism.

But she said this does not mean the feminists necessarily will take bizarre actions or any that will lead to violence.

NOW will attempt to isolate sexism and racism within all institutions in society, she said, whether they are economic, education, religious, political or health oriented, and "as part of our radical commitment take every step necessary short of violence" to correct these imbalances.

She said she believes NOW has finally made its case as the equivalent of the NAACP for women with the additional goal of helping men free themselves from restricting sex role stereotypes as well.

"Sex role stereotypes just as race role stereotypes deny us individuality, civil liberties and civil rights," she said.

During the NOW convention backers of the equal rights amendment swapped ideas and strategies at a series of workshops.

'We Stuck It Out'-Nixon

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — President Nixon predicted Tuesday history will prove that America was right when "we stuck it out" in Vietnam and said the settlement there brightens prospects for lasting world peace.

Addressing the South Carolina General Assembly, the first state legislature to adopt a resolution hailing the Vietnam peace accord, Nixon said the United States ended its role in the war with honor and with the respect of allies and adversaries alike.

"Because of what we did in Vietnam it is my firm conviction that the United States can now exercise more effective leadership in the cause of world peace," the President said.

It was the chief executive's first full-fledged public address in the nearly four weeks since the Vietnam accord was signed, and White House aides arranged for him to give it in a state that Gov. John West called "the heart of American patriotism."

The President read a letter he said he received from a California mother whose son died in Vietnam. The mother, whom he did not name, praised the "honorable peace agreement."

Marcos Urges New U.S. Treaties

By STAN SWINTON
Associated Press Writer

MANILA (AP) — President Ferdinand E. Marcos urged on Tuesday that the long-planned negotiations on the fundamental treaty relationships between the United States and the Philippines begin next month.

A State Department task force is studying the U.S. negotiating position and Washington is believed to feel April would be the earliest possible starting date.

"We want to meet not later than March," Marcos said in an interview. "It is best both governments sit down."

The Philippine president said treaties to be negotiated are:

1. An economic pact to replace the Laurel-Langley Agreement, an amendment to the Philippines' 1935 constitution which guaranteed Americans equal rights with Filipinos in land ownership and public utilities investments.

Last month, Marcos proclaimed a new constitution that leaves open the question whether Americans can own property. A new treaty is needed to clarify this.

2. An agreement on U.S. bases, including the huge Clark Air Base, now processing released American prisoners of war from Vietnam, and the strategic Subic Bay naval base.

Both U.S. and Philippine sources expect the bases to be maintained but with nore recognition of Filipino interests. A responsible American source said, "The 1946 bases agreements was the first made after World War II and is pretty colonialistic. It can be smoothed out and be better for both countries."

3. A new military assistance pact. The Philippine armed forces use only American weapons. Some of Marcos' advisers believe this island nation should broaden its source of supply to end total dependency on the United States.

4. An extradition treaty. Marcos put particular emphasis on the need for such a treaty as soon as possible. None now exists.

Congress May Refuse Newsmen's Immunity

By JOHN CHADWICK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) —Sen. Sam J. Ervin, Jr., chairman of the Senate subcommittee investigating freedom of the press, predicted Tuesday that Congress would refuse to give newsmen unqualified immunity from prosecution.

"I don't believe Congress will pass an unqualified privilege bill," Ervin said after hearing widely divergent views on whether legislation should be passed to protect newsmen against disclosure of confidential sources.

The North Carolina Democrat emphasized at the outset of his Constitutional Rights subcommittee that "to write legislation balancing the two great public interests of a free press and the seeking of justice is no easy task."

Ervin considered by many to be the Senate's leading authority on constitutional law, also took a strong stand against any federal legislation applying to proceedings in state and local courts. He said he believed the Supreme Court would rule it unconstitutional.

"Many senators who are favorable to protective legislation, like myself, might well oppose legislation which tried to cover the states," he said.

Ervin disclosed that he was introducing a bill, with Sens. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., and James Pearson, R-Kan., as co-sponsors, that would give newsmen protection against disclosing confidential information in federal court or grand jury proceedings unless it affirmatively appeared they had knowledge tending to prove or disprove the commission of a crime.

Thousands Protest Antipoverty Cuts

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thousands rallied at the Capitol Tuesday after a day of protests against cuts in antipoverty funds and the closing of the Office of Economic Opportunity.

Many had spent the day lobbying in congressional offices against the cutbacks.

Rep. Bella Abzug, D-N.Y., told the crowd at the rally on the Capitol grounds to mobilize "against the horror budget" submitted to Congress by President Nixon.

"Your presence here today is a statement that this country belongs to all the people, not just millionaires who get subsidies even for their mistakes."

"Your presence here today is a statement that this country belongs to all the people, not just millionaires who get subsidies even for their mistakes," she said.

Mayors Protest

Among the protestors was a group of mayors seeking to prevent a big reduction in federal grants to the cities. Mayor Moon Landrieu of New Orleans, representing the U.S. Conference of Mayors, said reductions should be made in federal spending. "But the battle shouldn't be fought on the sweat, on the backs of the poor who live in the cities," he said.

Administration Defends Cuts

While the protestors gathered, two administration officials appeared before the Senate Appropriations Committee to defend budget cuts. Treasury Secretary George P. Shultz and Roy L. Ash, head of the Office of Management and Budget, said Congress voted so much money last year that Nixon was left with no alternative but to make cuts.

The crowd at the rally on the Capitol grounds was peaceful and attentive.

Capt. L. H. Ballard of the Capitol police estimated it at eight to ten thousand long before the steps and walks became jammed with people.

Rep. Herman Badillo, D-N.Y., told them a president who claims election by a new majority has created a new minority and "the New Minority Nixon has formed is a minority of the poor."

"I Am Not A Beggar..."

Mayor Kenneth Gibson of Newark told them, "We are not here as beggars. I'm not a beggar, I'm a man. I'm here to get what is mine.

"Don't tell me your country can't deal with the people in Newark when it can deal with the people in North Vietnam," he said.

In other developments:

The House Agriculture Committee approved a bill to restore a rural program of grants for water and waste disposal projects. The program recently was ended by the administration.

Food Costs Jump Highest In 20 Years

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Agriculture Secretary Earl L. Butz said Tuesday that the cost of eating jumped 2 to 3 per cent in January for the sharpest monthly gain in 29 to 25 years.

"Consumers are being misled about farm prices by big-city newspapers and the urban press," he told an agricultural outlook conference.

Butz said the January rise, to be disclosed in a forthcoming report by the Labor Department, will be interpreted by some reporters as an annual rate of 24 to 36 per cent in consumer food bills.

Such a projection, Butz said, "is grossly unfair," and does not take into account seasonal variations and volatility of farm prices.

More POWs Home Today

By The Associated Press

Two more released prisoners of war began their long flight home Tuesday, due to arrive in Massachusetts early today and bring to five the total of POWs returned to New England since the cease-fire was signed.

Air Force Capt. Joe Milligan, 31, of Annandale, N.J., and Navy Lt. Cmdr. Fred Purrington, 31, of New Bedford, Mass., took off from Clark Air Base in the Philippines early Tuesday, military spokesmen said.

Both men were in a group of 20 POWs released Sunday by Hanoi.

Milligan was en route to Westover Air Force Base in Chicopee, Mass. to join Air Force Capt. Edward Brudno, 32, of Quincy and SM, Sgt. Arthur Cormier, 38, of Bay Shore, N.Y., who arrived Saturday.

Purrington was to continue on to Boston Naval Hospital, where Cmdr. Leonard Eastman, 39, of Bernardston, Mass., has been readjusting to living in America since last Friday.

Milligan and Purrington, both bachelors, were shot down over North Vietnam in separate incidents— Purrington in October, 1966, and Milligan in May, 1967.

The only member of Purrington's immediate family still living is his sister, Elizabeth, of Fairhaven, Mass. His mother died in 1971, and his father died Dec. 30, 1972, days before his son's imminent release was announced.

Milligan is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph S. Milligan of Annandale.

Cormier and Brudno have been spending considerable time with their families while they also undergo debriefing and medical examination, according to Maj. Richard Cox, a spokesman at Westover.

Nostalgic Reruns On Campus

By BILL WINTER
Associated Press Writer

CINCINNATI, Ohio (AP) — Roll over, Beethoven, you're wanted on campus along with Sherlock Holmes and monster movies.

Booking agents for entertainers, lecturers and movies say college students' tastes are returning to the classics and nostalgia.

Bach, Beethoven and Brahms are beginning to grab some of the attention riveted for the past few years on hard rock, the agents say in tones alternating between pride and surprise.

"There seems to be a swing toward cultural things," says Lucy Lapage of Royce Carlton, Inc., a New York firm.

"Poetry readings are becoming much more popular," adds Alison Vogel, who represents the Hurok Speakers Group of New York. "Now they--the students--want poetry, Renaissance music, dance.

"And they're looking for more balance," she said. "If they had radical speakers before, now they want conservative ones so they can hear both sides."

Eugene Remels representing United Films, distributor of horror movies and film classics, says collegians are "turned on to a nostalgia thing.

"One of our popular items," he says, "is the original series of 12 Sherlock Holmes films with Basil Rathbone."

The agents gathered here over the weekend to barter and bargain with students from throughout the nation at a conclave called the National Entertainment Conference.

Their primary goal was to arrange bookings for talent on college campuses, and agents reported a brisk business. "It goes along with the mood of the country, a general lifting of the spirit of things," said one agent.

Students and campus talent coordinators from throughout the nation attended. Some are working with budgets ranging from over $290,000 per year, others with sums as little as $4,000.

The conference is sponsored by a 13-year-old group called the National Entertainment Conference. Universities in the Carolinas formed the group to seek economical ways to carry out student entertainment programs.

Anti-Abortion Bill Passes In Rhode Island

By TERRENCE HUNT
Associated Press Writer

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — A bill designed to reinstate Rhode Island's strict anti-abortion prohibition was approved by the state Senate Judiciary Committee Tuesday.

The measure, which would establish that life begins at the instant of conception, was endorsed on a 10-4 vote after a hearing at which a minister, an attorney and two women rights representatives argued against the bill and a doctor spoke for it.

Shortly before the 2-1/2 hour hearing, the sponsor of the bill, 71-year-old Sen. Erich A. O'D. Taylor, D-Newport, put a four-page pamphlet entitled "Death Before Birth" on each of the 50 senators' desks.

Pass The Bill

Tonight a bill will come before the Student Senate which will reform the office of General Counsel. The Senate hopefully will see the merits of the bill and pars it.

The major impact of the "Legal Services Bill" will be the formation of a strong board of governors comprised mostly of students which will decide on general policies for the legal services office.

The board will consist of nine students and a faculty member (the faculty member must be a lawyer). Student members will include the Speaker of the Student Senate, who will chair the committee, the Attorney General of the Student Government Association, a representative from the student judiciaries, five undergraduate non senators, and the Treasurer of the Student Senate, in a non voting role. Any decision of the board may be appealed by a 2/3 vote of the Student Senate.

It appeared at last night's meeting of the Governmental Affairs Committee that there was going to be a major rift between the committee that evaluated the office of general Counsel and the Attorney for Students. The problem has now been solved, and both sides support the amended bill. It is now up to the Senate to do its job and pass the "Legal Services Bill" with the agreed upon amendments.

Cost Of Relief

While sitting in my favorite stall of the Ladies' Room in the Campus Center, I had this weird sensation that something was not the same. As I glanced around my metallic relief center, I noticed it. The toilet paper dispenser was different.

I sat there for two minutes in spaced-out confusion. Why would anyone want to change the toilet paper dispensers? What was wrong with the old ones? Was this change part of the Campus Center's Interior Decorating Service? Or were the old ones called back to their factory because of defective mechanism? Anyway, with my curiosity up (and my pants too by this time) I decided to check things out.

At the Maintenance Department, located in the bowels of the Campus Center (no pun intended), I met Ralph the pinball machine man, who offered to help me out. So, I explained what I had just discovered.

"Oh, yeah," said Ralph, "I noticed the change in the Men's Room. But you want to know something? They're not in the Student Union bathrooms. I was in the one down by the Hatch and there was no change. I guess they're only in the Campus Center."

Curioser and curioser. I spoke with Craig Stuart, former Operations Manager of the Campus Center. It all boils down to this.

There are approximately 70-100 toilet paper dispensers in the Campus Center-Student Union. In the three years since the Campus Center has been open, 30 of the dispensers have been damaged beyond repair. Each toilet paper dispenser costs $20. Inside the dispenser, the rollers, sans papier, costs $1 and 100 of these rollers needed replacing. I never realized that relief was such a costly habit. Anyway...

Stuart said the he had contracted the Georgia Pacific Company, which makes the new dispensers, through the Standard Paper Company. The deal works as such: we buy the paper, they provide the dispensers. Not only do we get free dispensers, but, if they are bent, folded, or mutiliated in any way, we also get free replacements. As an added extra, Georgia Pacific is providing the free toilet paper dispensers with free rollers.

Now all this sounds too good to be true. So I mentioned casually to Stuart that the new toilet paper was narrower than the old paper. And then he told me that there are 1,000 sheets more to the roll than the old paper. This allows for less changes by the maintenance staff. Also, the new rollers are designed for easier installment because they just drop in.

The new toilet dispensers are on a trial basis on the concourse level of the Campus Center for the time being. If all goes well for a month, then all the dispensers throughout the Campus Center-Student Union will be changed to insure uniformity in servicing the bathrooms. (Right now it's a bit of a hassle for the maintenance people.) Stuart said that if the new dispensers can take the traffic of the concourse level, which by far are the busiest bathrooms in the University, then they can take anything.

And the new paper is softer than the old stuff, too.

Gun Control Needed

A meeting was held at the Massachusetts State House, last Thursday, to consider the feasability of a state law banning the possession of handguns by private citizens. As usual, all the local gun clubs and their sympathizers voiced objection to this proposed "violation of Constitutional rights". Others claimed that gun control is a national issue and should be decided on that level. All the old cliches were passed around and the hearing accomplished little besides the tragic realization that we had all been through this before. I refuse, however, to be discouraged by the lobbyists, the gun salesmen and the super patriots, and will continue to state the case for gun control, with the hope that some day it will become a reality.

As is well known, the source of the controversy lies in Article Two, of the Amendments to the Constitution, which states: "A well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed". This Article, according to the opposers of gun control, grants every citizen the right to "keep and bear arms". I contend that it does no such thing. It is an Article concerning the Militia, "the right of the people" being synonimous with "a well regulated Militia". I submit that it does not grant the right to bear arms to all citizens, but only when it is "necessary to the security of a free State", and then only by a "well regulated Militia". This is, of course, an interpretive argument, and I am not trying to steal the show from the Supreme Court, but I feel that the "right to bear arms" has been taken too literally for too long.

Another and less theoretical approach is the fact that well over one-third of the murders committed each year in the United States are the result of the use of a handgun. They are easily obtainable, easy to conceal, and simple to operate. Good or bad intentions have nothing to do with it, for the fact that a gun is within reach is very often reason enough for using it. Some will contend that they need a gun for "protection", and it is sad and ironic that they usually end up protecting themselves from another handgun. At the very least, anyone possessing a gun of any type should have no qualms about registering it with the state. Many oppose registration on the grounds that it will lead to further infringement on their rights. They seem to forget that non-gun owners have rights also, one of which is protection from those who own guns and use them indiscriminately.

In Japan, the murder rate has dropped drastically as a result of gun control legislation. In England, where even police officers do not carry guns, there is a sizable difference in the murder rate as compared with the United States. We Americans, of all people, should not have to be reminded of the tragedy that accompanies indiscriminate gun ownership. It has become a disease as dangerous and crippling as a cancer, and it has reached epidemic proportions. Government action to insure the well being of all citizens, through proper legislation, is long overdue. The Federal Government has thus far reneged on its responsibility to react positively to this national crisis.

This latest proposal for the Commonwealth to assume the responsbility may go the feeble way of all others, unless we do our part to insure that a bill is either brought before the legislature, or put on a statewide ballot. We should make our individual feelings know to our State Representatives and Senators, and perhaps put an end to the special government treatment that the National Rifle Association and other lobbyist groups have enjoyed for much too long. Massachusetts can set a national trend by passing much needed legislation on this subject. We have been first before, and with some genuine effort, we can be first again.

Abortion: A Paper Law

By SUSAN BERGERON
MARK CERASUOLO

Two weeks ago, the Supreme Court made a historic decision regarding a woman's right to terminate an unwanted pregnancy. The ruling, while sounding very good on paper, is exactly that: a paper law. Abortions are no more available now than before the decision. This is not due to any "difficulty" in setting up clinics or a "matter of time"; all it takes is a clean room, a suction machine, and a qualified nurse. Rather, the "Right-to-life" and "Friends of the Fetus" type groups are mobilizing ther forces to nullify the hard-won victory. The Catholic Church hierarchy has vowed to repeal the right of women to control their own bodies and lives. The right wing anti-abortion groups are well financed, and it is clear they will not give up their battle with women.

At the moment, the battle's main focus is in and around the Chicago area. Cardinal James Cody has threatened with excommunication all Catholic women obtaining abortions. Bart Heffner, a church appointed "Guardian of the Unborn" (no shit) leveled an injunction against thirty women who were to receive abortions. By the time the injunction is lifted, their pregnancies will be too far advanced for medical treatment. State Representative Henry Hyde is urging and soliciting support for a constitutional amendment restricting abortions. The Catholic Church has taken children out of parochial schools, packed them into busses, and shipped them wherever needed to give the impression of "mass supprt" to anti-abortion demonstrations.

An interesting aspect of this renewed wave of reaction is that for the first time the "Right-to-Life" campaign is actually directed towards women. Before the Supreme Court decision, the right-wing groups activities ignored women and concentrated on the male Catholic Church hierarchy and bureaucratic officials. Their attitude was that women didn't even rate direct confrontation in the effort to maintain this grip over the control of female lives. The main tactic was distributing expensive glossy brochures filled with gross photographs of the alleged "results of abortions". Alleged; as when a group of female abortion activists examined them, they contacted the reactionary groups and inquired as to the sources of the illustrations. After getting a runaround, a group of doctors were enlisted to examine the pictures. They discovered that every one had been faked. Now, however, their strateby has changed. They must deal directly with the victims of their repression, and their method is to portray women who obtain abortions as "murders".

As mentioned earlier, the struggle to uphold and enforce the Supreme Court ruling has been concentrated in the Northern Illinois and Indiana area, the largest Catholic diocese in the world outside of Rome. However, women can expect the same type of reaction against their right to choose here in Massachusetts. At the time of this writing, there is only one hospital in the state performing available, low-cost abortions. While it is true that abortions have been given in some Mass. hospitals for years at around 125-200 dollars, the restrictions of requiring the signatures of two psychiatrists and two doctors have placed the cost far above the reach of most women. The question of clinics is answered by the recent case of the Florence Crittendon House for Unwed Mothers. Ever since it was founded, the house was held a hospital license. A while ago, they applied for a license as an abortion clinic. The Public Health Department stalled on the request. When the Supreme Court handed down the abortion ruling, the people at Crittendon House thought they would finally get an answer. However, the Health Department is still stalling. Florence Crittendon House is one of the founders of the United Fund. When they applied for the abortion clinic license, funds from United Fund were cut off! This case will set the precedent for future clinics.

Clearly, it is quite evident that the struggle of women to control their own bodies has only begun. The "Right-to-Life" forces are relatively small in number, but extremely well financed, and their friends include many important, powerful bureaucrats. Disregarding the fact that a Harris poll taken in late 1972 showed that 64% of the people in the country were in favor of legalizing abortion, these groups have vowed to wrest away the victory from women. They have a long record of repression and harassment behind the. The fight to turn legalized abortion from a paper law into a service available to every woman, if anything, will be of greater magnitude now than in the past. It will take a great deal of work if this law is not to run the same route as the Civil Rights Act, which was passed in 1954 and still being ignored in many parts of the country today.

The abortion decision was not something handed out of the sky by black-robed justices for no particular reason. Rather, it was the result of two hard years of work by many abortion groups, led by the Women's National Abortion Action Coalition. By organizing marches and demonstrations, educationals and workshops, and by directly pressuring state and federal officials, WONAAC played a major part in pressing the Supreme Court for the repeal of abortion laws. Now WONAAC's activity is in the area of defending the hard-won victory, and enabling women to receive abortions easily, conveniently, and cheaply or free. This will entail many legal battles, along with defending the liberalized law against the reactionary groups and and repressive legislation. WONAAC is currently establishing a chapter on the UMass campus. The Amherst Women's Abortion Action Coalition (AmWAAC) will work to transoform the law into a reality, through court cases, legal confrontations, and mass public support. It will give educationals, forums, obtain speakers to educate university and community women on how to fight for and obtain abortions. The struggle of women to control their own lives and bodies without church and state inference is more crucial now than ever. We urge all women to help build AmWAAC into a force to defend a woman's right to choose.

Alcoholism And Cultural Myths

To The Editor:

Whether or not it was his intention, Dean Tucker's editorial concerning the eighteen-year-old drinking age serves to perpetuate several senseless and pervasive cultural myths.

The first of these is the intimation that alcoholism or any chemcial excess is somehow correlated with greatness, especially in terms of artistic achievement. Whether this is true or not seems highly questionable, perhaps because no real data is available and also due to the fact that those who have achieved and have been persons of excessive habits are very conspicuous. Mr. Fitzgerald and Mr. Faulkner stand out not merely because they were alcoholic but because they were great artists. Whether their alcoholism was inextricably a part of their creative forces cannot be answered simply. However, what is most unnerving about the entire romantic concept of the "rum-soaked eyeball" as seer of truth is not that there is a possible correlation between the two, but that the connection is so often misconstrued to make alcohol appear to be a causative agent. Truly if that were the case none of us would let a dry moment pass.

Entire subcultures have been founded surrounding the hope that chemical agents may somehow enhance awareness. Six or seven years ago Timothy Leary had enormous appeal because his particular potion created new and different effects. But would it not seem absurdly laughable if today Norman Mailer were to announce the advent of the "Cult of the Hops?" It would seem insulting to his capacity for greater inanities. It would also seem equally insulting to assume that any eighteen year old who has ever stepped outside his door is naive enough to believe alcohol is possessed of such transcendental qualities.

The second point to be dealt with is the idea that "there are probably many people drunk right now because they are absolutely sickened by the way our society is run and how it looks." This seems to be in keeping with the notion that "our society" is run by someone "out there" and that those nasty neon signs are not products of human effort but have simply popped up in response to Mr. Out There's glee in making our lives miserable.

It is a great pity that we are so alienated as to abandon all thought of ourselves as being a part of the neon wasteland. If it is so intolerable then attempts at change can be begun only with the realization that the "out there" really resides within every individual. No genius is going to spring forth and make the world a happier place.

What is utterly sickening is that many of those who attribute to themselves a sensitive awareness of the ugliness apparently feel that this achievement bestows them with the right to childishly indulge themselves in martini-ed cocoons and to pooh-pooh the way things are. Unfortunately many people lead lives far more arduous than those of students and can't afford the sophisticated euphoria of booze.

The myth that society exists as a group distinctly separate from discreet individual entities is the same kind of sophomoric thought that seeks to find magical solutions in pill popping and drink sipping. Come, now. Santa Claus has passed us by and we are left clinging to two highly superstitious beliefs that when honestly considered don't seem to hold water. Or scotch.

Memory Refresher

To The Editor:

Your article on collective bargaining by the faculty in yesterday's Collegian interested me greatly. May I suggest that Professor Walter Denney, spokesman for the Massachusetts Society of Professors, is prone to abstraction and exaggeration when he states that "We're concerned with every single aspect" of what goes on at UMass. One wonders how much money the Massachusetts Teacher's Association would allocate to improve food in the dining commons.

Mr. Denney, and his associates, might be successfully charged with white-washing the fact that faculty interests are not exactly the same as student interests and probably never will be. Mr. Denney and his friends also seem to forget to mention that if collective bargaining were instituted on this campus the main item under negotiation would be working conditions for the faculty. Included under working conditions might be new and stricter degree requirements for students. Also, students would have no legal rights to sit at these negotiations.

I hope that this letter might serve to refresh Mr. Denney's memory and bring him to address the issue of how the students fit into his scheme.

Literary Deadwood

To The Editor:

The yearbook isn't everything, but at least it's something. I am by no means saying that the yearbook is a fantastic literary creation, although it has been rated one of the best college yearbooks in the country. What does appear to be a fact is that the yearbook is one of the very few tangible things we have to show for our student activity tax.

It would be one issue to eliminate the student tax altogether, on the other hand if we are going to start by eliminating such literary duffs as Yahoo, Drum, Spectrum and Harambe whose total budgets exceed that of the Index.

I've been at this university for three years now and in that time I've managed to get my hands on two issues of Yahoo and one issue of Spectrum. I must admit that I did not like what I saw. Once I found an issue of Drum on the floor of Machmer and it gave me the impression of being a Blackman's badmouth booklet. It's possible that Harambe has never been published.

The students on this campus pay over thirty dollars a year in student activities tax and outside the few individuals in the homophile league and other extraneous organizations, about all the students have to show for their money is the Collegian to help them get through lunch and a yearbook to take home to their parents to show them they really did attend school. If we are going to cut publications out of the student budget and start putting them on subscription, let's start with some of the literary deadwood that no one sees. Let's keep the Index.

Mass Poisoning Of Rats

To The Editor:

Another ecololgical disaster is taking place right here in Amherst. It seems that since Jan. 8th the town has been 'mass poisoning' rats at the dump. This type of poisoning calls for a poisonous layer of chemical to be spread over the dirt which covers trash, and for trash to be spread upon this poison. In theory, a rat feeding upon the trash eats the poison and dies. The death of the rat being the sought after result.

The problem with this type of poisoning, as pointed out by the recent backers of a bill to prevent wide scale mass poisoning of coyotes in the midwest, is that it is totally indiscriminate in the animal it kills, and that it can, when in sufficient concentrations, be dangerous to humans. Not only are rats killed, but animals which feed on the rats, or also feed on the trash, or even drink the water in the general vicinity, also die. That next glass of tap water you draw probably contains some of that same poison in trace amounts. Sure, you won't die, at least not for a while, but no one knows the long range effects of this type of use of poisonous chemicals. One would think that chemicals such as DDT would have taught us a lesson. Apparently not.

This is not just a gripe letter from an ecologist. I have a solution to the problem of rat control. I cannot claim credit for the solution, as it is being used in nearby communities, as well as towns across the nation. The dump should be opened, on days which it is closed to the public for dumping, to shooters. In this way, the rats could be killed, and at the same time harmless wildlife left untouched, making a safer, cleaner environment for us all.

Safety rules should be established, and posted, and shooters and varmit hungers welcomed as a viable solution to an ecological problem.

The Word Is Purebred

To The Editor:

With reference to Alan chapman's good shot of "Century, a thoroughbred Morgan---------" issue of 2/15/73:

I have a lot of respect for my good friend George Hawthorne, and for the program being offered by the Dept. of Veterinary and Animal Science, but there "just ain't no such thing" as a thoroughbred Morgan!

There are Thoroughbreds (Man of War, Nashua, Swaps, etc.) and there are Morgans (Century, Flintlock, etc.).

Purebred is the word for the fine registered Morgans being raised and trained and shown on Campus.

Are Coeds Important?

To The Editor:

Either your commitment to equality between the sexes is half-hearted, or your headline-writers aren't paying close enough attention to what they write. I refer to your article on Deb Peck in the February 15 issue of the COLLEGIAN. You rightly refer to Deb as Ms. Peck in the story, but your headline reads "Coed Continues Peace March."

Women students at the University of Massachusetts are not "coeds". Using the term to describe female students implies that men are the only important students, the only real students on campus. At Amherst College, where I attend school, the twenty-odd women exchange students are "coeds" and should be termed such, for they are, as the word suggests, token objects accepted into the fold to satisfy the social needs of the male students here, to satisfy the needs of the important students here. But at a university like UMass which does not institutionalize sexism, at a school for people rather than for men or women, either all or none of the students should be called "coeds".

Alcoholism Checklist

Hearing the phrase 'drug problem', most people immediately envision a person strung out on barbs or heroin or ups. Take a trip to the Bluewall. Check out what's happening there. Some people are passed out or pretty near to it, some causing trouble, some sitting foetal-crouched over beer, some regulars who come by daily to have a few.

Alcohol is a drug. It's odd that people somehow don't regard it as one. It is by far the most abused of the available drugs. It is also the most confusing because 1) it is socially acceptable yet 2) one person out of 12 that use it gets addicted to it. There is no way to tell in advance who will become addicted and who will not.

The following checklist of signs of alcoholism is distributed by the Worcester County Council on Alcoholism, Inc.

Be honest with yourself.

1. Do you feel the need for a drink at any definite time during the day?
2. Do you have blackouts or periods of amnesia while drinking?
3. Do you miss school or work or fall short in exercising any duties as a result of drinking?
4. Do you take a drink to settle your nerves?
5. Do you take a drink the first thing in the morning?
6. Do you drink alone?
7. Does anyone who cares about you ever criticize your drinking?
8. Do you start promising not to drink the way you have been drinking?
9. Do you drink before going out to a party where you know there will be drinking?
10. Do you ever find yourself gulping drinks while others are drinking slowly?
11. Do you seek out excuses for drinking or for celebration?
12. Is your drinking harming your family in any way?
13. Is drinking making your home life unhappy?
14. Do you deny your drinking?
15. Do you go on frequent drinking sprees?
16. Do you experience moments of remorse following a spree?
17. Do you begin to lie about your drinking?
18. Do you try to space your drinks and always fail?
19. Is drinking clouding your reputation?
20. Is drinking disturbing the harmony of your life?
21. Is drinking endangering your health?

If you answered YES to any one of the questions, there is a definite warning that you are beginning to have a problem with alcohol.

If you answered YES to any two of the questions, the chances are that you are a problem drinker. If you answered YES to three or more of the questions, you are definitely a problem drinker.

If you or your group would like to pursue this article and/or alcohol information by rapping or in a workshop, call John or Linda at Room to Move (in the Student Union) at 545-0400 or 545-0401.

Milkman Wins $1 Million

BOSTON (AP)—A Winchester milkman won $1 million in the 11th drawing of the Massachusetts state lottery's "Million Dollar Game" Tuesday night.

Robert J. Taylor, 40, who runs a milk route in East Cambridge for the H. P. Hood Inc. dairy was present for the drawing at the Sheraton Boston Hotel ballroom with his wife Susan.

"It's just unreal," said the newly-made millionaire, announcing he wouldn't be making his usual milk run Wednesday but did not plan to retire.

The father of two girls, 4 and 6 years old, and "a boy on the way," said he planned to use the winnings to build a house on land he owns on Cape Cod. He will get the money at the rate of $50,000 a year for 20 years.

Second prize of $100,000 went to Douglas T. Rice of North Adams, who said he bought his winning ticket jointly with his employer, Edward B. Nassif. Nassif operates a pharmacy and is an agent selling tickets for the lottery.

Both men were at the drawing and said they would use the winnings to build a new pharmacy, because the existing one was taken in an urban renewal project.

Edgar Smith (above in photo) is an ex-convict who "is trying to make more people aware of the corruption in the prison system." Along with Jackie Silva and Sheriff Buckley, he will speak on prisons tonight at 8:00 in the Student Union Ballroom. The discussion is presented by DVP.

DVP To Present Talk On Prisons, Reforms

A panel discussion on the problems of prisons and prison life will be presented tonight in the Student Union Ballroom at 8:00 p.m. Presented by the Distinguished Visitors Program, the panel will consist of Edgar Smith, Jackie Silva, and Sheriff John Buckley. The moderator will be Larry Dye.

In their own way, all of the members of this panel are struggling for improvements in our present prison system.

An ex-convict, Edgar Smith is trying to make more people aware of the corruption in the prison system. "The failure of the states to make an effort to learn from the men they have confined is a disgrace. Since a majority of the crimes are committed by men who have already been in prison...tells us that we desperately need changes in our correction system. My cynicism on the "system" is that which routinely gives a black rapist or murderer the death penalty, while most white rapists and murderers wind up with a couple of years. This lousy system allows the junkies and muggers to own the city streets while the cops are guarding the Russian Embassy or disguising themselves as hippies to infiltrate the college campus." So claims Smith who spent nearly 15 years in solitary confinement, convicted of murder. While in prison, Edgar Smith educated himself and wrote Brief Against Death and A Reasonable Doubt, in which he presents a case for his innocence and argues the value of capital punishment.

A person very involved in Prison Rehabilitation is Ms. Jackie Silva. She is the co-ordinator of the Change program which engages UMass students with the prisons of Boston. Actively involved in the Third World Studies, Ms. Silva works as a counselor at Boston University.

"The Reformer", Sheriff Buckley is famed as having one of the more progressive plans for reforming the prison system in the United States. By initiating legislature dealing with the better training for correction officers and the closing of the houses of correction, the Sheriff realizes a need for change. Buckley encourages more community involvement (i.e. Halfway House) as an improvement.

Larry Dye will moderate the panel; himself being active and involved with the J.O.E. and M.A.R.Y. programs on campus. The panel will welcome, in fact request, questions from the audience. Tonight will be a time when questions can be answered and people can be made aware of the corruption in the prisons.

Following the discussion with this expert and diverse panel, a reception-coffee hour will be held in the Student Union Art Gallery. Everyone is welcome, there is no admission charge. Attend this experience at 8:00 p.m.

Homosexuality Questions

DRS. McCASHIN AND KLEIN

Homosexuality is an are of much concern and confusion. We hope in a number of columns to address those questions that are most often asked about the subject. We start this week by addressing the following questions:

Is homosexuality a disease and can homoseuality be successfully treated?

Q. Is homosexuality a form of mental illness?

The primary obstacle to resolving the current debate on this question is the concept of "mental illness" itself. Originally developed out of strong humanitarian and civil libertarian motives to improve the lot of people who were psychologically disorganized the concept of mental illness has ironically been misused by some in the service of oppression. Examples of such abuse range from the use of mental institutions as political prisons to the more subtle problems as labeling as "sick" those whose life styles or behaviors significantly out of sync with the established order.

The "medical model" is of dubious value in the conceptualization of emotional difficulties except in those cases where there is an obvious organic cause. Although mind and body functioning are always interrelated the overwhelming majority of the problems we work with are more effectively understood by exploring the dynamics of family and social life. Regardless of ones "political" position on the question of homosexuality there can be no doubt that one's sexual orientation has psychological causality. Evidence fo genetic theory of homosexuality is weak. Consistencies in familial and social histories of homosexual strongly support the notion that sexual orientation is learned. Whether or not homosexual behavior constitutes "mental illness" depends ultimately on how it is labeled. Clearly, statistical normalcy is an inadequate index of psychopathology. Cultures revere some forms of "abnormality" (e.g. a genius level of I.Q.) and scorn others. Homosexuality is a form of "illness" only so long as we wish to define it as such. The question then cannot ultimately be determined by professional psychotherapist. The attitudes of the larger society determine which forms of behavior shall be accepted and which forms shall be denegrated.

Q. Can Homosexuality be successfully treated?

The poor success rates for psychological treatment of homosexuality are well know, particuarly when this has been a well established behavior for a long period of time. These rates are, however, misleading. The difficulty in treating homosexuality is a motivational one. The "symptom" unlike depression or anxiety is pleasure-producing rather than pain-producing. The "patient" often seek out treatment more because of seconday conflicts, such as family disapproval and the complications of a homosexual life. It is for similar reasons that the success rates are low in the treatment of drug addiction. Here again the sympton is consciously gratifying and motivation for change is suspect. In cases where the motivation for change is high and the willingness to work in therapy is strong and constant, homosexuality can and has been successfully treated.

Drs. McCashin and Klein will accept questions in strict confidence for possible appearance in Your Head. Send or bring your questions to Mental Health, Machmer 303.

Peace Corps Talk On Africa

This Thursday night, February 22nd, at 7:30 in Room 113, Stockbridge Hall two veterans of the Peace Corps will report on their services in Africa. John Hatch, at present a graduate student enrolled for a Masters Degree in Education, was a volunteer in Tanzania 1963-65 as a teacher. In 1970 he visited Kenya and 1971 Ethiopia to participate in teacher training seminars and served as an advisor for the socio-economic development of these countries.

Shep Wheeler, at present a Masters Degree candidate in the School of Business Administration, served during 1970 and 1971 in Cameroon, working with coffee and other produce marketing coops. After completion of his degree, Shep Wheeler plans to rejoin the Peace Corps for a further assignment in Colombia, South America.

The informal presentations will be illustrated by slides and followed by a discussion. This meeting will provide you with an opportunity to receive firsthand information on the services in Africa. Future volunteers, prospective candidates of the Peace Corps and interested students are invited. Refreshments will be served.

CASAIC NOTICE

CASAIC has announced that a new advisor has been appointed to their office for those students considering application to graduate school.

Outreach Plans Conference

By CYNTHIA NADREAU

The Center for OUTREACH Programs is sponsoring a conference of approximately 30 agencies and community programs for students who may volunteer to work and, at the same time, satisfy needs for an experience related to one's major academic field.

Some of the agencies which will be represented at the conference, to be held Thursday afternoon, Feb. 22 in 163 Campus Center, include the Northampton Nursing Home, Meadowlark Nursery, Headstart, and the Child and Family Services of Springfield.

If the kind of work you want to do is not represented at Thursday's conference, then OUTREACH will find something for you at their tables set up in 163 Campus Center, or students may go directly to the OUTREACH office in 318 Arnold House. Their phone number is 545-2021.

OUTREACH also provides full time internships, as well as volunteer or paid service positions. They will try to provide a faculty sponsor, either in the student's major department or in some other area, such as fulfilling elective requirements.

OUTREACH is an excellent opportunity for students to further investigate the career that their major is leading into.

The services of OUTREACH provide information on off-campus service projects, and assist students individually or in groups, in helping them establish their own student-run volunteer programs.

People in the community are becoming increasingly aware that when they need help, OUTREACH Volunteers come through. OUTREACH is especially anxious to work with agencies, groups, and individuals who cannot get help anywhere else. Great emphasis is placed on service to the lower income groups.

Typical OUTREACH programs include work with miners in Appalachia, migrants in Illinois and New Jersey, Native Americans in California and Oregon, school lunch programs in Washington, D.C., and other programs for the afing, prisons, the women's movement, and political action.

FAC Manager Resigns

Terry Charles Schwarz, manager of the University of Massachusetts-Amherst Fine Arts Council since 1968, has submitted his resignation, effective the end of the current academic year.

Schwartz stated that he was leaving the University "for personal and professional reasons and that his plans for the future are indefinite at this time." "My five years at the University", he said, "were enriching ones in terms of being able to work with a wide variety of students and faculty; and I was gratified with the development of a broad and well-supported program of professional fine arts activities for the Amherst campus, as well as for the citizens of Western Massachusetts generally."

In accepting Schwarz's resignation, Jeremiah M. Allen, dean of the Faculty of Humanities and Fine Arts, said Mr. Schwarz "has made a significant contribution to the campus, and our cultural life here is much richer for his presence. His departure will be a loss."

Prof. Melton M. Miller, Jr., a member of the Fine Arts Council for six years and currently its chairman, said, "My five years work with Mr. Schwarz has always been a most pleasant and rewarding experience both personally for me and for the Council."

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

Sagittarians often brood about the past, about what might have been instead of concentrating on what could occur. Cancer shares this characteristic but to a different degree. Gemini is most likely to live for the moment. For Taurus, the credo is likely to be, "The future is now." Leo has a tendency to blend the past, present and future. Let me know your sign and how you view time.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Decision is made regarding partnership, contract, marriage. What occurs is apt to be unorthodox. Take nothing for granted. Use experience. Apply past lessons. Heed words of older individual. Cement relationship. Tie loose ends.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Stick to practical matters. One you respect observes your efforts. Streamline procedures. Libra individual plays important role. Accent is on health, employment, the way you relate to those who share your interests.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Young persons tend now to respond to you in erratic manner. Highlight creativity. Be "in touch" with those who encourage your efforts. Stress independence, originality, your own style. Affair of heart is featured.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): What was a roadblock is removed. Welcome chance to change status quo. Conditions at home base require renovation. Know it, accept it and act accordingly. Aquarian could figure prominently. Shake free of lethargy.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Accent versatility. Stop feeling there is but one procedure. You are stronger than might be imagined. Favorable agreement is in offing. Key is to communicate, to state needs, to make additional contacts.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Steady approach is necessary. Guard valuables. Get an accounting. One who promises much may not be in position to deliver. Money advantage is yours--but you must check fine print. Financial situation will improve.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You receive numerous compliments. What you do now is apt to have your individual style. There will be dynamic changes. Member of opposite sex is involved. Stress independence, originality. Lead now rather than follow.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Events take on brighter hue. What appeared nebulous becomes solid. Taurus, Libra persons are featured. Heed inner voice. You will now what to do. Sense of direction returns. You no longer are afraid to be yourself.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Many promises are featured. Key is to see what is solid, what is empty. Bring forth powers of perception. Pisces could aid. Relative plays instrumental role where hopes, wishes are concerned. Unorthodox procedure succeeds.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your natural abilities are appreciated--gain results. You get more responsibility, but rewards also are greater. Involvement with older individual is emphasized. Check your own needs. Be sure you know what it is you really desire.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You make connections with persons at a distance. What appeared far away becomes attainable. You seem able now to beat the odds. Your ideas click. Fine for submission of scripts, formats, concepts. Travel is in picture.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Strive for greater self-sufficiency. Being aware of self-interest is not same as selfishness. Know it and act accordingly. Mystery is unraveled. What you were afraid of proves to be without substance.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have great sense of humor and a tendency to do too much at once. October will be one of your most important months of 1973. You are sensitive, creative, a natural actor or actress. Self-expression is a necessity. You gain through writing.

J.V. Hoopsters Roll Over Newbury J.C.

By WALLY CLARK

You could tell it was going to be one of those games. Newbury J.C. showed up with their full squad of six players and the Minutemen J.V.'s appeared minus their coach, Fan Gaudette. The Minutemen finally won by a score of 68-49.

The opening jump set the pace for the game. Newbury J.C. was called for a jump violation giving the ball to UMass. The Minutemen and Newbury J.C. then proceeded to try and outdo each other by seeing who could commit the most turnovers. After a UMass time out with the score tied 8-8 the Minutemen ran off 8 straight points and were never headed again.

The Minutemen held a decided edge in the rebounding department in the first half, with Ed Rodriguez doing yeoman's work under the boards to go along with his 6 first half points. The Minutemen substituted early and often with everybody seeing action. The first half finally ended with UMass enjoying a ten point margin, 32-22.

In the second half, the Minutemen erupted to score 14 of the first 16 points to put the game out of reach. With Greg Duarte controlling the boards at both ends of the court and pumping in 10 second half points the J.V.'s were home free. The bench emptied early with all regulars receiving an early rest.

With the subs having the game well in hand, the Minutemen coasted home to an easy 68-49 victory. The most Newbury J.C. could counter with were a few bombs from Peter Norton from out around 3 point range and numerous trips to the charity line.

Greg Duarte led the team with 16 points and 17 rebounds. He was followed by Tony Williams and Mike Stokes who had ten points apiece. Dan Donovan made his presence known by hauling down 13 rebounds. All in all it was still a welcome victory for the Minutemen who have had their troubles of late and who needed a laugher to help restore their confidence in the drive for a winning season.

Gymnasts At Cage Tonight

A well disciplined Navy squad outscored a sub-par UMass team last Saturday, 158.1 to 157.7. The loss was foreshadowed by disappointing performances by all the UMass contestants in Floor Exercise. Two strong routines were thrown by Steve Scuderi (8.6) and Rich Seikunas (8.7) on the Pommel Horse, but it was not until still rings that the Minutemen put together three good scores and won an event from the Mid-shipmen. Seniors Jay Aronstein (9.35) and Dan Spier (9.05) and a freshman to watch, Bruce Mawhinney (8.65), were responsible for closing the Navy lead to 1.50 at the half.

Jack Fabbricante (9.30) led a strong team effort on long horse, but it was to no avail as Navy won the event 27.25 to 27.20. Steve Scuderi (9.05), however, led the UMass parallel bar team to a 26.05 to 25.25 catch up event win with the help of Bill Broullet (8.6) and Dan Spier (8.4). Down by only .8 of a point, victory was within grasp of the Minutemen, but it slipped away as four of UMass's five performers faultered on the horizontal bar: and the Mid-shipmen turned in routine scores of 8.25, 8.90, and 9.35.

The gymnasts host Springfield College at the Cage tonight starting at 8:15. Springfield College always has a strong gymnastics team, and they usually have their best performance of the year against UMass. It's been quite a dry spell since the Minutemen (Redmen) have tasted victory over the Chiefs, but based on this season's performances by both teams, UMass must be considered the favorite.

Co-captain, Jay Aronstein displays a Maltese Cross. Aronstein has been the high scorer in every meet he has been in this year. The UMass gymnasts are favored tonight against Springfield College, at the Cage beginning at 8:15. (Photo by John Calabria)

AQUAMAN CARL ZULIK splashes to victory in the Butterfly competition in last Saturday's swim meet against Rhode Island. Zulik came up with his best time of the season (2:39.6) and the Minutemen won their first meet of the year, 80/33. (Photo by John Neister)

Swimmers First Win A Team Effort

By JANIS AHMADJIAN

A Victory!!! (and it's about time too). The Minutemen Swimmers finally ended their losing streak Saturday as they completely swamped the Rams of URI 80/33 here on home territory. The weeks of hard practice paid dividends in their first win of the season.

The 400 Individual Medley Team of George Kwiecien, Bob Okolita, Tom Smith, and Dick Blaisdell paved the way for the Minutemen victory with a time of 4:09.4. This win really psyched the team. Butterflyer Smith was the key man in that race for it was up to him to make up lost time that URI's fast Freestyler gained.

From then on it was UMass all the way! Minutemen swimmers grabbed most of the high point places in the events letting the Ram Freestyle Relay team win out of courtesy in the last event.

The next event on the agenda, the grueling 1,000 Freestyle was won by Duncan Loomas (time 12:08.5) with Spencer Sullivan in third.

Ron Boucher was just touched out of first by URI Larson in the 200 Freestyle. Jack Tyler placed third. The fast 50 Freestyle sprint was won by Pete Ouellette (time 23.7) with Blaisdell scoring second. Marc Dagnese won the 200 IM (time 2:14.1) with Okolita third.

The tough going 200 Butterfly Carl Zulik overcame with a time of 2:39.6 (his best time to date, 10 seconds knocked off).

Dagnese again proved the fastest in the 100 Freestyle (52.6 time) and Ouellette second.

Kwiecien swimming his best time of 2:18.9 won the 200 Backstroke with Kevin McGinn in second.

Another distance event, the 500 Freestyle found Markson of URI in first with Minutemen Loomas, second and Sullivan, third.

Tom McGinn grabbed first in the 200 Breaststroke (time 36.2) and Okolita second.

In the Diving competition a UMass strong point all season found Paul Lelito first and Jeff Crouse second in both the one and three meter events. Lelite performed a beautiful reverse layout and Crouse an inward one and a half to highlight the competition.

Coach Manfredi stressed the good team effort shown and expressed his thanks to the Girls Swim Team members who help out at the meets with the organization process.

This is the last home meet for graduating co-captain Bob Okolita.

Sixty-Six And No. 1

(AP) — UCLA continued its firm hold on the No. 1 position in the national college basketball rankings Tuesday and got no dispute from its unbeaten pursuer, North Carolina State.

"No, we don't feel underrated at all," said N.C. State Coach Norman Sloan. "UCLA is a great team and deserves to be No. 1.

"Until it loses a game, UCLA has to be rated No. 1. In my opinion, no other team--not even ours--deserves a No. 1 vote."

Like UCLA, which is riding a 66-game victory streak, North Carolina State has a perfect season record, 21-0. But the two teams cannot meet because N.C. State is under a year's probation for recruiting practices and is ineligible to compete in the National Collegiate Athletic Association championship tournament.

In the latest poll by The Associated Press, UCLA received 39 first-place votes from a panel of 41 sports writers and broadcasters with the other two going to N.C. State.

Sloan said neither he nor his team ever stewed over the fact there can be no head-to-head confrontation between the two undefeated major college powers.

"We only discuss things that are possible," Sloan said. "We never discuss UCLA. I have watched the team on television and have been greatly impressed."

Long Beach State, 21-1, remained in third position, followed by Minnesota, 16-2; Marquette, 20-0; North Carolina, 20-4; Providence, 18-2; Maryland, 17-4; Houston, 18-3, and Indiana, 15-5.

Providence moved from eighth to seventh and Maryland from 10th to eighth while Houston fell from seventh to ninth. Selectors vote for 15 teams, on a 20-18-16-14-12-10-9-8-7-6-5-4-3-2-1 escalating point basis.

Julius Tops

NEW YORK (AP)-Julius Erving is continuing his torrid scoring pace in the American Basketball Association, scoring 79 points in two games to raise his average a full point during the past week.

Latest statistics by the ABA give the Squires' ace an average of 31.72, more than three points better than his closest challenger, George McGinnis of Indiana, who dropped a fraction to 28.66.

George Lehmann of Memphis took over the three-point field goal lead with 23 in 50 attempts for a .460 average.

Artie Gilmore of Kentucky continues to be tops in three important categories. He leads in rebounds with an 18.11 average, two-point field goal percentage with 55.8 and blocked shots with 215. Ron Boone of Utah is the free throw leader, 86.8 per cent, and Bill Melchionni of New York is No. 1 in assists, 7.6.

Cagers Whip Catamounts, 82-48

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

The UMass pep band continued its rendition of William Tell overture and the hoopsters sluggishly upped its string to eight straight with a 82-48 waltz at the Cage last night.

Maybe it was thoughts of last weekend in Kingston or next weekend's sojourn to Durham and Orono, but whatever it was, the Minutemen slowly racked up the playing time. Coach Leaman afterwards attributed the methodical play to the fact that the cagers were coming off a tough and physical win against Rhode Island. He happily noted afterwards, "We played well enough to win and that is what counts."

The Vermont Catamonts were no match for the Minutemen and that fact was well known before the game. A small crowd of 2200 suffered through what was just a little tougher than an intersquad scrimmage. Vermont, which was fourth a few weeks in a national poll by Basketball's Basement (lists the 10 worst teams) and who knows how far they have moved upwards since, displayed its style. No Catamont had more than 3 baskets or 7 points, as their leading scorer, Joe Greco, is on the injury list.

Coach Leaman used this game as an opportunity to let all play and no one was in the lineup for more than 25 minutes. The press accounted somewhat for the opening lead, but it did not resemble the defense that had ravaged opponents early in the win skein. Vermont moved the ball pretty well and during the first half were only interrupted from their attempts by occasional steals by Rick Pitino, Bill Endicott or Al Skinner.

Endicott and Skinner provided the early firepower. On Endicott's first swish from the corner, his defender dropped back astonished that he would attempt it. The 6'2 frizzy haired sophomore pumped in 4 of 6 in the first stanza and contently watched from his ringside seat for most of the next half.

The man with the moves from West Hampstead, NY also had the respect of the Cats. Skinner constantly left his shadow in a state of suspended animation with his fancy stepping. In about a half's work, the man took game honors with 17 points.

The clincher for the half, was the dealing of the big men. Tom Austin, resembling Don Quixote with his squire, used the solidity of Charley Peters in the post to score twice in a row with a give and go layup. The next hoop, was a copy of Endicott's bomb by Austin.

John Murphy ended the half with an instant replay of his game saving block at Kingston. Only this time, it was at the expense of 6'4 Terry Green. Murphy stole rebounding honors by snatching 15 caroms to go with his 10 points.

For 6-1/2 minutes, the effect of Leaman's remarks during the intermission shone through, but the second half shutout ended when the Cats answered the hoopsters 16 points surge to 58-29 with a bucket.

The rest of the way was just a matter of letting everyone get a chance to perform. Senior Chuck Olsen came on in the last eight minutes to get an ovation rivaling that of Skinner's when the starting lineup is announced at the start.

The Bears Will Be Phloemed

Caribou Country—At last glance Orono, Me. listed one gas pump, a Drug store, a Howard Johnson's a Ski shop, and one economy size university. Life in this last glaceral village is usually two days behind with communication problems. But their college basketball is as prized as their slopes and in at Pat's, the tundra's answer to Mike's, they still are wondering what a UMass partisan looks like . . . And who's to blame.

Set apart nearly six hours with your fastest Peter Pan, UMass hoop teams have done the Orono gig alone. And why not . . . who the hell would be crazy enough to make the trip. It's a worthless voyage. But times have changed the tempo this winter and this weekend the Minutemen embark on the roughest individual journey in the history of UMass basketball. To Durham on Friday and Orono on Saturday and if Jack gets em' both he'll get his third sojourn to New York City in four years as well, a Yankee Conference title to boot.

With an 8-2 Conference slate and eight wins in a row following last night's comedy with Vermont, the Minutemen could return home with a ten game streak, the title, and an NIT berth contingent on wins over Northeastern and Fordham. Those will be more academic than you think . . . NIT . . . NIT . . . NIT . . .

But why go it alone Minutemen. But who the hell is crazy enough to follow . . . Is there anyone. Are there any insane fans on this campus who would go. Do you want to go? If you do there's a way . . . And there's much more than that that meets the eye is the weekend ski trip for the title and the NIT bid . . .

As a fan you could enjoy traveling with the team on Friday morning to Durham. That afternoon you could tour the campus and stop off at this super bar called the Wildcat for dinner and a few pregame brews (half dozen or so) . . . Then scream at all the funny UNH people and hop on the bus to Portland to spend the night with the team at the Crossroads Inn. Rooms are $15 a couple but use the old NIT ethic and cram in 8 to 10 . . . So you spend a buck for a rack (cheapest one you'll ever get).

Then the fun starts. After surveying the fish hatcheries in Orono you hit the happy hour at Pat's . . . Get rowdy drunk and then take your caravan to the game against the Black Bears. Now remember, the UMainies haven't seen a UMass hoop fan for a decade so look sober 'til the first whistle. And then with Mike's Cowbell and Dave's drums and the beat of the three cheerleaders who said they'd go . . . Raise some serious hell . . .

Could you imagine the look you'd get . . . The sellout crowd will be phloemed . . . They won't know what to do . . . In the meantime, Jack's Jackols will proceed to give the Black Bear players a bit of the mesmerization from the UMass fans . . . and the Beanpot shortly will be theirs. A little company in Orono goes a long way . . . And then it's off to Pat's to celebrate the title and the certainty of the NIT bid . . . Goodnight . . .

You ask about cost? Vic Fusia said if we could get 50 crazy clowns to go, you could get a bus that would leave with the team and return after the game Saturday night and per person the cost would be about $13 . . . You'll spend that on booze this weekend anyway.

Hey, the room, the campus tours, the funny looks in the Maine gym, the Cowbell, Pat's!!!, meeting Tom McLaughlin in person, the title game, eight in a hotel room in Portland, freedom from your parents for a weekend, clean sheets, it's all part of the sport experience . . . a preview to that Walt Disney adventure at Madison Square Garden . . . Take that Durham-Portland-Orono trip. It will be a mild high . . .

To reserve tickets and sign up for the bus call the Ticket Office immediately . . . Leaman, the team, and I will love you for it . . . It could be a helluva time at the Hotel Friday night . . . All on campus are invited . . . no sex discriminant . . .

Already at least a 10 groupies from SAE who think they are getting a keg from me, have said that they will be in Maine. Bobby Warner is taking his van to Orono to see the title game and hopefully Bobby and his rowdy bunch won't be alone.

BOSTON (AP)—The streaking Boston Celtics, led by John Havlicek, Paul Silas and Dave Cowens, won their seventh consecutive game Tuesday in a 107-97 National Baksetball Association victory over the Phoenix Suns.

The Celtics, who began their streak 10 days ago, boosted their record to 51-12, the best in the league.

Havlicek, shaking off a knee ailment and a bruised ankle, sparked the Celtics with 26 points. Silas, acquired from Phoenix last summer, hit for 19 points and grabbed 22 rebounds.

Cowens gave Havlicek and Silas plenty of help with 20 points, including a key layup and ensuing free throw late in the game as Goston shook off a Phoenix challenge. Cowens also had 14 rebounds.

The Celtics took a 24-20 first period lead, fell behind 52-50 at the half and then moved in front 78-72 at the three-quarter mark. Phoenix closed to within three points, 94-91, with five minutes left, but Boston pulled out of reach with seven consecutive points.

Charlie Scott topped Phoenix scorers with 25 points. Connie Hawkins managed only 10 against the tough Boston defense.

Legal Services Governing Board Created

By STEVE FINE

The Student Senate voted last night to create a legal services Governing Board that will oversee the operations of the Legal Services Office.

The Board would be charged with deciding on the general policies and provide a continuous evaluation of the Legal Service Office.

The make-up of the Board would consist of the Speaker of Student Government Association, the Attorney of the Student Government Association, a member of the Student Judiciaries, 5 undergraduate non-senators, one faculty member, who must be a lawyer, and the Treasurer of the Senate who would be non-voting.

The Senate also decided to defeat a motion by President Larry Ladd to endorse the Board of Trustees decision of May, 1972, in which they denied academic credit to the participants in the ROTC program and to begin night-time bus service for the Student Senate Bus Service.

In essence the new Governing Board for legal services will increase the size of the legal services office. Presently, the office is supposed to "provide counseling, advice, representation, and education to the student body of UMass concerning all legal matters."

According to John Stevens, sponsor of the motion, it would increase the interaction between the student body and legal services.

"I basically see non-senator undergraduates on the board as the important part of the bill. In this way, student input will be increased into legal," he said.

He also said that Legal Services was now able to involve itself in litigation in the courts. This aspect is described in the bill as follows, "Staff Attorneys shall engage in affirmative legal action on problems that are common to large numbers of students, to the end that 'law reform' or 'class action suits' or other relief may be obtained in their behalf".

Richard Howland, who now would become director of Legal Services, had opposed the original bill proposed by Stevens at a Governmental Affairs Committee on Monday night. Howland had said at the time, he could not live with the bill as it was written at the time.

Howland and Stevens ironed out these differences in late night discussions. Howland reaffirmed this last night at the Senate meeting in a letter to the Senators. In it he said, "The bill that John Stevens has advised me that he will present including some post-committee suggestions, supplies a legislated relationship between my office and the Senate which should have exited heretofore. As I understand the bill, it represents a reasonable compromise of different views both of which intend to provide quality legal service to students."

One of the amendments to the bill that was approved last night gave Howland the power to recommend people for the Governors Board to hire.

In defeating President Ladd's motion to endorse the Trustees 1972 decision, Senators questioned who should decide what is worthy of academic credit.

Ladd questioned whether it was appropriate for the University to grant credit for ROTC, since a Faculty Senate Committee had recommended to revoke credit last year because: 1) the university was a place devoted to reason, and the philosophy of ROTC was coercion and violence; 2) ROTC's curriculum was not under the control of the University but rather the U.S. Military. Ladd said this was also true for the hiring and firing of professors, where any teacher at ROTC could be replaced by the decision of the Secretary of the Army.

Nick Apostola said he saw Ladd's reasoning as naive. He said that he saw the only people being hurt by the endorsement of the Trustees vote would be the people who go to ROTC.

Matt Tackeff, not a member of the Senate, said taking away credit could be considered "book burning". "Who is to decide for me what is academic credit and what is not," he said.

When the vote was taken, 34 people opposed endorsing the Trustees' decision, 20 voted for, and 2 abtained.

The motion to extend the Student Senate Transit Service was explained by the Senate Treasurer Robert Chiller. Chiller said that he had talked to Robert Godding, Manager of the service and they had decided to increase the bus runs to 11:00 at night.

The cost he said would be $2400 for the rest of the semester.

In other action last night, the Senate approved the rationales of the yearbook, Index, and the Student Attorney General.

Under the yearbook rationale, the 1974 Index would be offered to students on a subscription basis. In answer to a question, he said it was expected that the number of students subscribing to the yearbook the first year would not drop below eight to ten thousand.

The office of Student Attorney General, created by the General Laws of the Student Government Association, helps provide legal counsel for students in disciplinary and other matters.

Twenty five advocates work for the Student Attorney General.

Also passed were the rationales for the University Day School, and Medical Emergency Loan Fund, and the Middle Eastern Culture Community of Amherst.

The University Day School said it would like to "continue to support and expand" its Toy Lending Library to provide more educational equipment.

The Medical Emergency Loan Fund was set up "primarily to help those people who need abortions," and loans are made to any UMass undergraduates or graduate student in need of one.

The Middle Eastern Culture Community of Amherst said it intends to start programs to sponsor presentations by guest lecturers and others to "foster an interest in and an exchange of information about" the peoples and cultures of the Middle East.

The community also intends to publish a newsletter.

A group called the Committee on Poverty was defeated. The group would havehelped communities to organize themselves against poverty, and educate the student body to support these efforts.

New Transit Service:

Overnight Success Story

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

Overloaded and under increasing demand, the Student Senate Transit Service's off-campus routes have become an overnight success.

A few problems have arisen, according to Bob Godding, Transit Service manager, but will be resolved without changing schedules or interrupting service. Otherwise, according to Godding, the new system is running perfectly, and in such demand that up to 60 people are at times crammed into the multi-colored buses that have seats for only 31.

The overcrowding of the buses, particularly on the Belchertown, Sunderland and South Deerfield routes, will be relieved by "recommitting" buses that are now used on low passenger on-campus routes to those three off-campus routes. Service, Godding says, on and off the campus routes will not be interrupted.

Despite the fact that roughly 5,500 people now ride the buses daily, a near capacity figure, Godding is interested in hearing proposals for expanding the service. While range is limited, "not Montague", Godding is asking for letters and petitions proposing new routes. If there is enough demand for a route, the Transit Service can petition the Department of Transportation for an additional grant.

The program is currently funded by the U.S. Department of Transportation, the University and the Student Senate. The lion's share, however, is the federal government's coming out to $500,000.

The Student Senate, though, is considering a bill which would provide funds for some night runs. The demand for evening runs came from Senate's Women's Committee, a result of the rape situation around campus, Godding says.

The biggest problem the service has, however, is local children riding the buses to and from school. Under the conditions of the grant, only UMass students, employees, faculty and guests are allowed on the buses, making the presence of the children semi-illegal according to Godding.

In addition, there is a safety problem, in that cars are not required to stop when the buses stop, as they are required to do for school buses. Godding says there have already been "near accidents".

He is now on the process of contacting school principals and parents, requesting them to not let children ride the buses.

The Transit Service employs 115 paid student drivers, one of which is Nathan Nickerson. Nickerson drives the UMass to Belchertown Center route three times a day twice a week from 4 to 6 p.m.

He drives an "express bus" which makes no stops between stations. The only complaint Nickerson says he has received is that the buses are not on time; which he resolved by suggesting to passengers they synchronize their watches with University clocks.

Things have since been fine Nickerson reports.

Convict, Sheriff Agree On Prisons

By MARK VOGLER

An ex-convict and the sheriff of Middlesex County, Wednesday in a press conference agreed that "prisons are an ill to society" and that the "crime rate can only be curbed by dealing with the problems on a community level."

"Prisons should be abolished," Sheriff John Buckley said. "They don't work very well, except for exceptionally violent offenders. Putting people in cages doesn't work."

Hailed by his colleagues as having one of the more progressive plans for reforming the prison system in the United States. "The Reformer" sheriff said that better treatment can be offered in the community.

Edgar Smith, a 39-year-old ex-convict who spent nearly 15 years in solitary confinement at Trenton Stat Prison, New Jersey after being convicted for murdering a 15-year-old girl, agreed with Buckley that "the people should be kept in the community."

"There's no sense in sending a kid who lives on Long Island all the way to Attica," Smith said.

"The problem is that prisoners are not learning from their punishment how to live in the community. They are learning how to live in jail–learning how to survive in jail. And it serves no useful cause when they're put back out on the street."

Sheriff Buckley said that a person leaves Prison in one of two ways. "He either comes out like a lamb and stands in line for welfare or he comes out like a tiger and ends up in a morgue where there's no one there to claim his body."

"If you're lucky, a person comes out the same way he came in," Smith said.

"But most times an individual becomes hardened and comes out worse. Since he can't get back at the people who mistreated him in prison, he goes out and gets society. He goes out and gets the man on the street."

Both men said that there is little the criminal justice system can do which will have a significant effect on the crime rate.

Sheriff Buckley said that prison reform legislation is under close security in Massachusetts and added that regulations will be set in the future to safeguard against improper practices. "In the future, prisons in this state that don't meet the standards are going to be closed," he said.

Buckley said that one of the most ideal techniques of reform offered in his county is "bringing the victim and the offender together."

"This is correction. Once a week we have the two parties sit down and discuss the nature and seriousness of the crime and how it affects the victim."

Buckley said that the prison and jail system in Massachusetts is considered "average" as compared to the rest of the country.

He said that the major obstacle of prison reform in Massachusetts is "political". "The smart politician in this Commonwealth won't get involved in prison reform, it's too controversial.

"His eyes are on Washington, not here. He doesn't want to get mixed up in Massachusetts politics because it's too rotten. This is why we're just average."

Buckley credited the state's interest in prison reform as coming primarily from the young, liberal generation. "Until we have a middle class in this Commonwealth who are willing to fitght it out, then we'll remain the same," he said.

Right To Know: What Limits?

By JOAN FASSNACHT

A University of Massachusetts dean, professor and two students discussed "The Mass Media and Foreign Policy: What Limits to the Public's Right to Know?" in the second of a series of Great Decisions panel discussions last night in the Noah Webster House Lounge. Luther Allen served as moderator of the show which was broadcast live over WFCR radio at 7:30 p.m.

Dean Alfange, Jr., dean of UMass behavioral and social sciences, began the discussion by presenting his views concerning the freedom of the press versus the government's need for secrecy in some negotiations.

He said that the public must know what is going on in order to guide and limit the directions of foreign policy. They receive their information through the press, which obviously plays a great role because of this. Yet, there does exist a genuine need for secrecy during some negotiations between countries. A hostile press may result in a breakdown in talks and negotiations.

Alfange views Vietnam's greatest contribution as this–when the New York Times published the Pentagon Papers, many Americans changed their opinions of the United States as an all-benevolent power. Because of this, it is now demanded that the press keep the people more informed on every aspect of every situation.

Frank Faulkner, formerly a civilian correspondent for U.P.I. in Vietnam, is currently an undergraduate here working for a degree in B.D.I.C. Faulkner saw the Vietnam War as essentially an "information war", in which the government and the military machine ground out propaganda to circumvent the press. Reporters encounted much difficulty in obtaining information, and consequently had to develop their own sources to get scoops. Often their scoops were simply swallowed by the wealth of official information that the government released. For the public, it became difficult to separate the truth from the propaganda and make value judgements.

The third speaker, Joseph McNeil, formerly a Chief of Staff of Battle Studies for General Westmoreland in Vietnam, is currently a graduate student in political science at UMass. McNeil presented the "establishment side" of the issue concerning the Pentagon Papers and the Vietnam War. In his statement, McNeil asserted that "not every single document needed to be published (of the Pentagon Papers)". He saw this as compromising sensitive military operatives, for example, when several papers about the coup in South Vietnam made it look like the United State's puppet. McNeil then went on to defend the military's release of information. When information was delayed for a time in order to confirm its accuracy, the government was accused of hiding the facts.

Howard Ziff, former reporter for the Chicago Daily News, and now Director of Journalistic Studies here, felt that the freedom of the public's right to know what is happening is the main issue. Ziff termed himself somewhat of a "purist" concerning his support of the first amendment. No national goal can be seen as democratic, if policies and negotiations are cloaked in secrecy. Ziff also rejects the view that the government is always supported nonpartisonally and noncontroversially by the public.

The people of America began to question and to challenge previously held principles and to become involved in decision-making processes.

A half-hour question and answer period followed, in which members from the audience quizzed the panel.

Three Students Injured In Crash

Three UMass students were seriously injured early Wednesday morning after a two-car collision on Route 9 in Amherst.

One student, Stephen P. Smulka, 22, of Detroit, Mich., and Brittany Manor apartments was listed on the danger list in the intensive care unit of Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton.

Zamir Nestlebaum, 19, of Worcester, and Dickinson House, was listed in satisfactory condition, and David G. Atamantyk, 19, of Cranford, N.J., and Dickinson House, was listed in satisfactory condition in the intensive care unit of the hospital.

Police said the accident occurred on Route 9 near Orchard St. about 12:30 a.m.

Category Changes In RSO Budget Occupy Financial Affairs Committee

By ROBERTA MARTONE

Category changes in the budgets of various Recognized Student Organizations (RSO), comprised the highlight of a routine Senate Financial Affairs Committee meeting last night in the Campus Center.

Several motions were brought forth concerning the finances of the Student Activities Committee. The first group of category changes transferred sums of money from full-time payroll and postage to hourly payroll. The need for money in the hourly payroll is due to the addition of two full-time positions. The above motions were passed unanimously by independent committee action.

The next group of category changes dealt with the Computer Time aspect of Student Activities. Money is needed for rental of an office copier, cash register, typewriter maintenance and, for the purchase of additional pamphlets and subscriptions concerning computers. A total of $1,185.00 was requested and granted.

The third category change consisted of a transfer of insurance funds into other miscellaneous categories (i.e., transportation, meals, lodging, duplication). There was one objection made by committee member Chet Richardson. He said, "The administration staff was told to pick up the bill."

The last two categroy changes requested by the Student Activities Committee were requests for a transfer of money into the category of office supplies and duplication. Both motions were passed unanimously.

Steve Tripoli and Gib Fullerton, Editor-in-Chief and Business Manager of the Collegian, respectively, requested a category change concerning the salary of two new assistant editorships on the Collegian staff. The motion was opposed by Mike Gregory, another member of the Financial Affairs Committee, who said, "I would rather see Senate Chairmen paid before assistant editors." The motion will be brought before the Student Senate at next week's meeting.

Several other motions were passed. They concerned a raise in salary for a staffer of WMUA: a grant for a dinner to be given by the Black Scientist Society; and, the purchase of a stereotape recorder by the Black Mass Communications Committee.

Penal System...Something Else!

By DON BISHOP

The Penal System . . . something else!

The penal system operating in the U.S. is not and has never worked and should therefore be done away with in favor of something else.

This sentiment was the concensus among the panelists participating in a Distinguished Visitors Program panel discussion entitled: "Prisons—Realization, Rehabilitation and Reform."

This area was, however, the only one of total agreement among Middlesex County Sheriff John Buckley, former inmates Jackie Silva and Edgar Smith, and Joe Program Co-ordinator Larry Dye.

Considerable differences of opinion were in evidence on such questions as, what we should do with our prison systems and what is being acent time.

The program, witnessed by a group of over 100 people in the Student Union Ballroom, was begun with introductory statements from Buckley, Silva and Smith, followed by a discussion period conducted over oral and written questions submitted by people in the audience.

Sheriff Buckley, in his opening statement, made clear his feelings that although we can have radical reform in our prisons, we will continue to have a high crime rate and a high convict return rate, until society undertakes a major effort to understand the whys and wherefores of so-called criminal behavior.

Ms. Silva, a former inmate in Virginia, currently active in prison rehabilitation functions voiced the opinion that it is useless to talk about prison reform when the real need is to change our social system, which she feels is producing criminal behavior.

Mr. Smith, an inmate on "death row" in New Jersey for 15 years, presently attempting to make the public aware of our correctional system failings, made brief remarks about the need to change "the man" in prison, to show him why it is to his advantage to "go straight" instead of eventually ending up back in prison.

Larry Dye, although serving as moderator for the program, did make his own opening remarks, citing what he sarcastically termed the present "success rate of our prison system. The FBI has found, he said, that 75% of all juvenile offenders return to the prison system.

During the question period, Buckley, Silva and Smith responded to queries about the effects of the corrections system on both male and female inmates, the current national feelings for penal reform, the denial or protection of prisoners rights, and why prisoners riot.

In the discussion on inmates rights, Buckley noted that this was a relatively new area of the law and he cited a recent federal court decision declaring that prisoners have the same legal rights as any citizen, except where stated by law.

Smith, in response, detailed some of the legal restrictions placed upon parolees in New York State. These include the fact that parole can be rescinded for sexual intercourse with one's wife, or for working in a store where liquor is sold.

Smith stated: "They can put you back in prison for associating with suspected criminals, while when your in prison you're associating with known criminals."

In response to the question as to why prisoners riot, Ms. Silva stated that when human beings are locked up in cages like animals, society should expect that they will respond like animals would.

Smith added that in the New Jersey corrections system, a guard is automatically penalized three days work without pay for calling an inmate Mr. or by his first name. However, Guards must always be referred to as either Mr. or sir.

"Guards are treated as people but prisoners are not," he said.

One person in the audience who admitted to having been an inmate at Concord Reformatory and Walpole State Prison, stated that one place to concentrate penal reform was at the juvenile corrections level.

Buckley mentioned the state wide reforms at this level made within the last few years, but in the long run he felt it was necessary for society to be able to identify potential delinquents at a very early age, to prevent defiant development.

Ms. Silva disagreed, believing that the solution would come only when the whole of society itself had changed, so that there would no longer be any situations created among certain classes of people, which make crime a necessary fact of life.

Rhode Island Senate Tackles Abortion Statutes

By HOWARD ULMAN
Associated Press Writer

PROVIDENCE (AP)—Unusual security measures were expected to be in force today as the state Senate was poised to approve a bill to restore Rhode Island's strict ban on abortions.

An effort to take a vote on the bill Wednesday was foiled by Sen. Lila M. Sapinsley, R-Providence, who objected to the proposal by Sen. Erich A. O'D. Taylor, D-Newport, that his bill receive immediate consideration.

Senate Majority Leader John Hawkins of Providence had sought a Wednesday vote, saying "I don't want an emotional session." After the proposal for an immediate vote was blocked, Hawkins said all visitors were to be barred from the Senate floor during today's vote.

"This is to avoid any commotion," he said, adding that visitors would be allowed to view the session from the gallery above the floor.

Today's scheduled 2 p.m. session followed considerable legislative activity Wednesday on proposals to give the state an abortion law to replace the one struck down by a three-judge federal court early this month.

Caucus Approved Bill

The Senate judiciary committee brought the bill to the floor after a caucus of Democratic senators, who overwhelmingly approved the measure. The bill allows abortions only when necessary to save the life of the pregnant woman.

Hawkins said only a few of the senators attending the caucus objected to the bill, which seeks to reinstate the old law by establishing the instant of conception as the start of life. Democrats control 37 of the 50 Senate seats.

Republicans also caucused on the abortion question Wednesday and Sen. J. William Corr, GOP leader from East Greenwich, said "I assume there is more support for the bill than opposition in the Republican caucus. There was a great deal of feeling in both directions." Newsmen were barred from the GOP's normally open caucus.

Although Senate passage of the bill was virtually certain, some doubts remained as to whether it would become the law of the state.

Hawkins said he expected the House would approve the measure and that Gov. Philip W. Noel would sign it. Noel has not said what he would do if the measure made it through both chambers.

The governor said at a recent news conference he didn't think another bill filed by Taylor to set the moment of conception as the beginning of life would make it into the law books.

Cover Ruling

The Jan. 22 U.S. Supreme Court ruling striking down the Texas law and declaring that states could not prohibit abortions in the first six months of pregnancy said conflicting ideas from various authorities left the court "not in a position to speculate as to" when life begins.

"In short," the court opinion said, "the unborn have never been recognized in the law as persons in the whole sense."

It added that "We do not agree that, by adopting one theory of life, Texas may override the rights of the pregnant woman that are at stake."

The constitutionality of the Taylor proposal was questioned at an hour-long hearing on the House judiciary committee that preceded the regular House session Wednesday.

Milton Stanzler, a Rhode Island Democratic national committeeman and representative of the state chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union, said at the hearing "you are attempting to eliminate what the Supreme Court has securely set forth and clearly set forth" by proposing legislation defining the start of life.

"If you have any respect for what it means to be free in this country, if you have any respect for the system of laws in this country," he told the committee members, "you will reject" a House bill that also seeks to set the moment of conception as the start of life.

Drinking Establishment Needs SW Support

By CAROLYN CALDWELL

A meeting concerning the establishment of a place to serve beer and wine in the Hampden Dining Commons was attended by about 10 students last night.

"Unless the support is there, much better than tonight, there won't be one," said John O'Connell, Southwest business manager. "There is a real question as to whether the town will support the license."

"In my opinion a place is needed for the 5600 kids living in the Southwest area," Joel Stoneham, director of food services said. "If we don't serve alcoholic beverages, someone else is going to."

He added, "We're talking about an operation similar to the Blue Wall without the hard liquor. I think the residents of the Southwest area should draw up their proposal and bring it to us."

A student said, "We should be coming up with a plan together with the administration. We live and work here."

Another meeting will be held in Hampden at 8:00 tonight. If there is no support, the project won't be undertaken.

Earthquake Rocks Southern California

By STEVE LOEPER
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP)—A rolling earthquake shook the Southern California coast Wednesday morning, cracking plaster, shattering windows, starting several fires and inflicting property damage.

The structural damage, mainly to older buildings, was heaviest in Oxnard, a coastal city of 70,000 persons, 50 miles northwest of Los Angeles. Estimates by the State Office of Emergency Preparedness placed damage there at up to $1 million, mostly in cracked walls, broken windows and collapsed roofs.

Several minor injuries were reported.

California Institute of Technology seismologists measured the intensity of the quake at roughly 5.75 on the Richter scale and said it was centered in the ocean off Pt. Mugu, near Oxnard.

Jolting sleeping residents at 6:46 a.m. and lasting about 20 seconds, the quake recalled the 6.5 temblor of Feb. 8, 1971, in which 64 persons died. That quake, centered in the San Fernando Valley north of here, struck at 6:01 a.m.

"It felt like the end of the world," said Richard Rodriguez, 32, manager of a Mayfair market in Oxnard, who estimated damage at $10,000.

Outside of Oxnard and the rest of southern Ventura County, residents reported mostly falling plaster and broken dishes, along with tattered nerves.

Residents from Santa Barbara on the north and San Diego to the south said they felt the jolt, and shocks were noticed as far inland as San Bernardino.

"Oh, Lord, did I feel it," exclaimed admitting clerk Sarah Squirrell at Ventura County Hospital in Ventura. "It just rolled. It was terrible. It seemed to last a long time."

"It was like a slap in the face," exclaimed one housewife.

"The deeper we get into this thing, the more damage we're finding," said Oxnard police Lt. Max Ipson.

Three rock slides were reported in Ventura County and one blocked all lanes of the Pacific Coast Highway for a time but the way was open to traffic again by 8:30 a.m.

The quake occurred along the Malibu coastal fault, reported the state Division of Mines and Geology. Even though it apparently was centered close to the shoreline, authorities at the Naval Air Missile Test Center in nearby Pt. Mugu said there were no signs of high wave action.

The quake resembled a "thunderous explosion" to Larry Jenkins, an employe of the Mayfair market in Oxnard. The front windows disintegrated and merchandise was thrown to the floor.

Israeli Fighters Force Airliner Down

By ARTHUR MAX
Associated Press Writer

TEL AVIV (AP)—Israeli fighter planes fired on a Libyan airliner and forced it to crash-land Wednesday in the Sinai Desert after the pilot ignored a warning, the military command reported.

A military spokesman said about 70 passengers were killed and 13 survivors had been pulled from the wreckage. Most of the passengers evidently were Egyptian.

The spokesman said the aircraft flew over Israeli installations on the Suez Canal, separating Israeli and Egyptian troops, before Israeli air force fighters were sent to intercept it.

A spokesman for the Libyan government asserted the plane overshot Cairo's airport and then because of bad weather strayed into territory held by the Israelis. He described the plane as "shot down."

Premier Golda Meir expressed the government's "deep sorrow at the loss of life resulting from the Libyan crash in Sinai and regrets that the Libyan pilot did not heed the repeated warnings which were given him in accordance with international procedures."

Mrs. Meir apparently meant to designate the pilot of the Libyan plane without reference to his nationality. Air France announced in Paris the pilot was French, part of a five-man French crew under contract with the Libyan airline. All five were killed, the French airline said.

In Cairo, Libyan Airlines identified the plane as Flight 114 bound for Cairo from Tripoli, the capital of Libya, and said it apparently overflew the Cairo airport. The Suez Canal is seven minutes' flying time from the airport.

An airline spokesman said 116 persons, including six babies, were aboard. There was no explanation for the discrepancy between this figure and the Israeli count of dead and injured.

An Israeli source said the pilot was warned three times to land the plane, but he refused. Another source said the pilot's reply was, "I don't take orders from Israel."

The israelis opened fire and hit the plane, but a highly placed source contended that the damage was not enough to cause the crash.

The crash came just 12 hours after Israeli commandos struck seven Arab guerrillas bases deep in northern Lebanon in a drive to break up terrorist centers. The raiders killed 50 Arab guerrillas, an official report said. Arab guerrilla sources put the death toll at 15 to 26.

The military command said the plane entered Israeli air space at 1:35 p.m., penetrating about 50 miles over the Sinai Peninsula, which Israel captured from Egypt in the 1967 war.

The Boeing 727 crashed about 12 miles from the Suez Canal, the spokesman said. He did not specify the area where the plane was forced down.

Transport Minister Shimon Peres said, "There are international laws concerning civil flights and their entry into the air space of another country, even by mistake."

Peres said the Israelis acted according to recognized international law.

U.S.-China Relations Advance

By FRANCES LEWINE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—The United States and Communist China will issue a joint communique Thursday that is expected to report new strides in relations between the two nations.

The communique is the outgrowth of Henry A. Kissinger's lengthy talks with Chinese leaders in Peking, including Chairman Mao Tse-tung.

The White House said it will be made public in Peking and Washington at 11 a.m. EST Thursday.

Kissinger, who has reported to Nixon since his return from Asia Tuesday, will hold a news conference at the White House to discuss the communique and details of his visit to both Peking and Hanoi.

Kissinger's talks in Hanoi resulted in establishment of a joint economic commission to consider postwar reconstruction aid for North Vietnam.

While the White House has declined to give any details on the forthcoming China communique, it is expected to provide for improved trade relations, possibly the establishment of trade missions in the two countries.

There also have been reports that Kissinger may have made some headway in negotiating the release of three Americans held prisoner in Communist China.

Both sides have indicated the Kissinger talks in Peking Feb. 15-19 were very good and expanded the breakthrough made by President Nixon in his visit to mainland China a year ago.

While the U.S. appeared to be making significant new advances in its relations with Peking, it also had word of the chances for further improvement in relations with the Soviet Union.

It was learned Wednesday that Communist party chief Leonid Brezhnev sent a letter to Nixon hailing the peace agreement in Vietnam as having a "positive effect" on U.S.-Soviet relations. Brezhnev told Nixon the war's end could open new possibilities for future "development and deepening" of such relations "and we stand for such a course of policy."

Indochina Roundup

Cease-Fire In Laos

VIENTIANE, Laos (AP)—The divided Laotians signed Wednesday a cease-fire designed to end a decade of sporadic warfare fought with U.S. and North Vietnamese help along the fringes of the Vietnam conflict next door.

The cease-fire called for fighting to end at noon Thursday, which is Wednesday midnight EST. It gave a strengthened political hand to the Communist-led Pathet Lao rebels who have fought for years to take over the small Indochinese kingdom.

Its signing meant that in principle Cambodia remains the only country still fighting on the Indochinese peninsula which has known off-and-on conflict since World War II.

The agreement provided for withdrawal of all foreign troops, release of war prisoners within 90 days and an end to U.S. bombing against the Pathet Lao and their estimated 65,000 North Vietnamese allies in the country.

It bars introduction of other foreign troops and arms and calls for a government of national unity to be set up within 30 days.

Secretary of State William P. Rogers in Washington hailed the cease-fire as an important step toward general peace in Incochina. He confirmed that U.S. air attacks were halting. The accord should help in getting complete accounting and return of U.S. prisoners held in Laos, Rogers said.

The United States lists about 300 of its airmen missing after being shot down over Laos. North Vietnam has provided the names of only seven American servicemen and two civilians held in Laos.

The Pathet Lao official who signed the Vientiane agreement talked with newsmen afterward but declined to discuss prisoner release.

The cease-fire was greeted with the same public indifference that has prevailed through most of the decade of war in this capital city of 200,000. No street crowds gathered outside the residence of Premier Souvanna Phouma for the ceremony, attended only by diplomats and newsmen.

"Why should we get excited?" a policeman asked. "This is the third time in 20 years we have signed a peace agreement."

Nixon May Order Viet Aid

WASHINGTON (AP)—Secretary of State William P. Rogers Wednesday refused to rule out reconstruction aid to North Vietnam by presidential order if Congress fails to appropriate the funds.

He told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that no firm commitments have been made, and none will be, "without the support of Congress."

But he avoided a direct answer to an inquiry by Sen. Clifford P. Case, R-N.J., whether he "rejected" the idea of a fund transfer from other programs.

"I've never talked to the President about it, and i don't know what he intends," Rogers said.

"I'm not prepared to say now if we had money available and it was appropriate to use it, that we would not use it after full congressional consultation," he said.

Case said he personally supports the concept of reconstruction assistance, but said:

"You are making it necessary for us to make it impossible for you to do it by fund transfer."

Rogers three times called for "restraint" by members of Congress in making adverse comments on the aid issue, at least until American troops are out of Vietnam and all American prisoners are released.

He said the $7.5-billion aid figure, including $2.5 billion for North Vietnam, used by President Nixon a year ago, was merely "illustrative" of the magnitude of the problem.

He said the levels of aid to be proposed have not been decided, and that other nations are being approached for contributions. He denied that the President's budget for next year has been inflated to provide a source of aid funds.

Britain Claims USSR Built Up Defense

By ARTHUR L. GAVSHON
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP)—Britain claimed on Wednesday that the Soviet Union beefed up its air, land, sea and missile power in 1972 despite beginning talks with the Western allies on lessening tensions in Europe.

A government White Paper, or policy document, on the nation's 1973-1974 defense program insisted as a consequence of the Soviet buildup that the allies must recognize:

"Only negotiation from strength is likely to produce equitable agreements. There must, therefore, be no unilateral reduction in defense capabilities in the West."

That was advice seemingly aimed at the United States, where President Nixon is facing congressional demands for a cutback of the 300,000 U.S. garrison in Europe.

British spending in the coming fiscal year beginning April 1 will run to about $8.08 billion representing a 5.6 per cent rise over spending for 1972-1973. The amount comes to about 5.75 per cent of Britain's gross, national product.

"There is no sign that the Soviet Union is anticipating the outcome of the negotiations by a slackening of its defense efforts," the White Paper said. "The Soviet Union's defense expenditures continue to rise each year in real terms. The buildup of her strategic capabilities has continued over the last year."

These details followed:

—Ninety new silos are being built for intercontinental ballistic missiles.

—Six new missile-firing submarines have been completed.

—Russia now has 1,500 intercontinental missiles, 700 medium-and intermediate-range missiles, about 60 operational missile-firing submarines and 300 attack and cruise missile submarines.

—Around 11,600 warplanes have been widely deployed by the Russians with long-range transports active over the Atlantic, Pacific and Indian Oceans and over the Caribbean and Mediterranean seas.

—Soviet naval forces, equipped with "the most advanced weapons systems" have been deployed globally.

The British made no effort to examine or dissect China's military capacity.

Meat Expense Brings Substitution

By BOB MONROE
Associated Press Writer

Meatless days are already standard practice in many households, some price-conscious housewives said Wednesday, reacting to a government official's suggestion that they switch the menu to cheese one day a week to drive down meat prices.

Others had little appetite for the idea, including an Iowan who predicted that people will go on buying meat no matter what the price. A husky construction worker noted that it takes more than a cheese sandwhich to run a jackhammer.

The suggestion of a voluntary meatless day week was made by federal reserve board chairman Arthur F. Burns, who said he had nothing else to recommend until action to curb food costs becomes effective.

"The American public will be just as well off if it spent less on meat and more on cheese," he told a congressional committee Tuesday.

"You have to," agreed Ann Nelson, a Bronx, N.Y., housewife who feeds a family of six. "We're already doing it twice a week." She said they used fish and egg dishes as well as cheese.

"We've been doing that for a long time to save money," said Mrs. Leo Tylus, a Calumet City, Ill., mother of four daughters. But she said the price of fish has jumped from 49 to 89 cents a pound in six months.

"I mortgaged the house this week to buy a roast," quipped Judy Catton, a suburban Minneapolis mother of eight. "I think before Americans go to eating cheese one day a week, we'll have to come up with some good ways of fixing cheese."

"We only eat meat about once or twice a week anyway," said salesman Melvin Montey of Salt Lake City. "The prices have forced us to eat more rice dishes, spaghetti, macaroni and things like that."

Marge Leland of San Francisco commented, "I don't think that's a bad idea, but cheese is high, too—more than a dollar a pound. And what if the price of shoes got too high?"

USRequests Next Group of POWs

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP)—The United States asked the Communists Wednesday to free the next group of American prisoners as soon as possible and to move its field teams to subregional truce sites "to dampen major hostilities."

At a meeting of chief delegates of the United States, North and South Vietnam, and the Viet Cong to the Joint Military Commission, the United States expressed concern that the Communist side is not moving its teams into the field. The United States and South Vietnam teams are at 24 of the 26 sites, North Vietnam at five and the Viet Cong at none.

Despite this, teams of the International Commission of Control and Supervision began their move to 14 of the subregional sites Wednesday.

The deadline for these sites to be operational, as specified in the Vietnam peace agreement, is Monday.

While parties to the Vietnam agreement worked to clean up fighting there, the warring factions in neighboring Laos signed a cease-fire to take effect at noon Tuesday local time, which is midnight EST Wednesday night.

The agreement signed in Vientiane would end 10 years of conflict following breakdown of the 1962 Geneva accord designed in its time to bring peace to 2-1/2 million Laotians.

In Washington, Secretary of State William P. Rogers hailed the agreement in Laos as an important move to over-all peace in Indochina.

In testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee he also pledged that the Nixon Administration will not commit itself to an Indochina reconstruction program without support from Congress.

Rogers said the cease-fire in Laos should help in getting a full accounting of all U.S. prisoners held there and arranging for their release.

At a meeting of the subcommission on captured persons in Saigon the United States proposed that the second increment of about 140 U.S. prisoners of war be released in North and South Vietnam before next Tuesday's deadline.

Bui Tin, the chief spokesman for the North Vietnamese delegation, said the subcommission would meet again Thursday and there could be word from the Communist side then.

Wounded Vets Are 'Not Forgotten'

By JOSEPH R. TYBOR

CHICAGO (AP)—Fred Shadid, 24, held a cigarette burning to the filter between trembling fingers that once picked a guitar in a folk-rock group.

As his other hand fumbled with the flap of his faded blue hospital robe, he spoke in rapid bursts of the returning prisoners of war he'd seen on television.

Compared to the POWs, Shadid said, he got off easy in Vietnam.

Shadid was struck in the belly by fragments from a mortar shell last August, three weeks before his 13-month tour in Vietnam was due to end.

He underwent one operation in Tokyo and another at Veterans Research Hospital in Chicago. Maybe one more and then he can use the music grant he received to Northern Illinois University.

"Sure," he said, "sometimes I feel like a forgotten veteran, "but it's not because of the attention the POW's are getting."

All of the veterans interviewed at Veteran's Research Hospital said basically the same thing—that the returning prisoners deserve everything they can get for all their years in captivity.

Shadid said, for example, that he'd be glad to see the former prisoners accept the wardrobes, automobiles and lifetime tickets to major league baseball parks, notwithstanding the more than 100,000 wounded like himself who returned to a pale welcome with only scars and disability payments.

Compared to captivity as a POW, Shadid said he'd rather be without limbs, or better, dead.

Attorney For Students

Guidelines For Drinking

By DICK HOWLAND

In order to try and present a more orderly dialogue on legal issues affecting students, the Collegian will present this column weekly. Any reader is invited to address questions of general interest to this column in care of the Collegian. I will answer every question and those that have general application will be printed.

The age of minority for drinking purposes will be 18 on March 1. The following section is taken from "A Student's Guide to Massachusetts Law" which was prepared by the Attorney for Students Office and will soon be published by the Student Senate. The purpose of this guide and of this column is to try to provide general legal information which can help students avoid legal problems prospectively.

ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES

A person convicted of drunkenness (public or private) may be punished by (1) imprisonment for not more than thirty (30) days or; imprisonment for not more than six (6) months; or (3) a fine of not more than fifteen (15) dollars. (Ch. 272 Sec. 48). It is extremely unlikely, however, that a person will be given any jail sentence unless he/she has been chronically convicted of the offense. After July 1973, public drunkenness will no longer be a criminal offense.

Breathalyzer - A person has the right to demand a breathalyzer test or blood test only if he/she has been arrested for operating a vehicle under the influence of alcohol. If you are arrested for public or private drunkenness you may ask for a breathalyzer or a blood test but you have no legal right to it and probably will not be given it. The Breathalyzer is not evidence of drunkenness. It is statutory evidence of the precise crime of "operating under the influence" only.

Operating under the Influence - Operating a motor vehicle under the influence of alcohol (or drug) is punishable by a fine of not less than $35 nor more than $1,000 and/or by imprisonment for not less than two (2) weeks nor more than two (2) years. Upon conviction of this crime one's driver's license is automatically suspended for not less than one year. (Ch. 90 Sec. 24)

When you are arrested for operating a motor vehicle under the influence of alcohol the police will ask your permission to do a breathalyzer test. Refusal to take the test results in automatic suspension of your license for ninety (90) days. (Ch. 90 Sec. 24(f).) The test may be given under these circumstances only:

a) "that such a test or analysis was made by or at the direction of a police officer;

b) "it was made with the consent of the defendant;

c) "the results thereof were made available to him upon his request; and

d) "the defendant was afforded a reasonable opportunity, at his request and at his expense to have another such test or analysis made by a person or physician selected by him." (Ch. 90 Sec. 24(e).)

WHAT CONSTITUTES "UNDER THE INFLUENCE"

"Under the Influence" is defined by statute as 0.10% alcohol in blood by weight or 0.10 grams per 100 c.c. blood. For all practical purposes, for the average human being, this means that if you consume between three and four units of alcohol in one hour, you will be legally intoxicated if you drive. One unit of alcohol is one shot (1-1/2 ounces) of liquor or whiskey or one and a half average mugs of beer (one sixteen ounce can) or one average glass of wine. Do not confuse "proof" which is percentage of alcohol by weight in the beverage with the amount of alcohol consumed. The "units" are correct equivalents. The body dissipates alcohol at the rate of about 0.015% per hour. There is no short cut to time required! Coffee, milk, eating before drinking all have some brief effect on slightly reducing the rate of assimilation of alcohol, but they do not and cannot induce sobriety.

Therefore, if you drink four units in one hour, you may expect to have 0.105% alcohol in your blood and be legally unable to drive. In two hours if you consume five units, you are still legally unable to drive! In three hours if you consume five units, you are still legally unable to drive! So if you are driving, your absolute limit any evening must be between four and five whiskey drinks or 6 to 7-1/2 beers in three hours or much less if consumed in a shorter time!

Minority

The other relevant laws pertaining to alcohol are those which concern the relation of persons under 18 years of age ("minors")* to alcohol (but these laws do not concern solely persons under 18).

1. The consumption of alcohol by a minor is not prohibited by law.

2. For a minor to "transport or carry on his person"† any alcoholic beverage is punishable by a fine of not more than $50. The exact meaning of "transport" and "carry" is unclear in this context; however, a minor would probably have to "transport" alcohol in a car as operator of the car to violate this law. (Ch. 138 Sec. 34c.) If carried in a bag or pocket, any arrest would appear to involve an improper search.

3. The sale or delivery of alcohol to a minor or for the consumption of a minor is punishable by a fine of not more than $200 and imprisonment for not more than six months. (Ch. 138 Sec. 34A.)

4. A minor who makes a false statement about his age to procure the sale or delivery of alcohol, or anyone who makes a false statement to obtain alcohol for a minor is subject to a fine of not less than $10 and not more than $100. (Ch. 138 Sec. 34A.)

5. A person who uses a false identification card or the identification card of another in order to obtain alcohol is subject to a fine of not more than $200 or imprisonment of not more than three months. (Ch. 138 Sec. 34B.)

*The Massachusetts legislature has passed several bills which lower to 18 the definition of "minor" in all or in varius parts of the law stated above to become effective March 1, 1973.

Nixon Cites Halt Of Food-Price Spiral

By BILL NEIKIRK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon said yesterday his effort to halt the food-price spiral will have a powerful effect in the second half of the year and bring the American consumer relief without cutting farm income.

In a nationwide radio message, the President also defended his cuts in the federal budget, saying they will "do more than anything else to protect your family budget."

Borrowing a phrase from Franklin D. Roosevelt, Nixon wound up his address with the warning that "we could be wrecked on the rocks of loose fiscal policy" if the federal budget gets out of control.

In a prelude to his economic State of the Union report to be sent to Congress Thursday, Nixon said he wanted to tell Americans how the economy affects them and their family budgets.

The President focused on the most difficult problem facing his economic policymakers--food prices.

The cost of living figures for January and February, when they are published, will "inevitably show sharp increases" because of large wholesale food-price increases in recent months, he said.

"In fact, we will probably see increased in food prices for some months to come," Nixon said, adding that the underlying cause is that food supplies have failed to keep up with the demand.

Recounting measures to expand supplies through the Agriculture Department, Nixon said they would stop the rise of wholesale food prices and eventually retail food prices.

"Unfortunately, they cannot do much about prices in the next few months, but they will have a powerful effect in the second half of the year," he said. "They will bring relief to the American housewife without damaging the prosperity of our farmers."

He said farm income is "higher than ever, and it will go even higher as we increase farm production."

In his radio address, the President said he devalued the dollar to correct a "serious trade imbalance which could threaten your prosperity." He said that step must be followed by more basic reforms, such as revamping the world monetary system to make it more flexible.

Nixon said he would soon propose to Congress trade legislation "which would make it easier for us not only to lower our trade barriers when other countries lower theirs, but also to raise our barriers when that is necessary to keep things fair."

But he gave no details of the trade bill.

Nixon said that his economic policies created 2.3 million jobs last year, cut the rate of inflation nearly in half from what it was four years ago, and increased the purchasing power of Americans.

FDA May Approve DES As 'Morning After Pill'

By JOHN STOWELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Food and Drug Administration said Wednesday it plans to approve the drug DES for use as a "morning after" birth control pill despite the possibility of a cancer risk to newborn infants.

FDA Commissioner Charles C. Edwards told the Senate that "there is no evidence for a significant risk" to women under prescribed dosages.

"However," he added, "because the possibility of a harmful effect on the fetus either from a pregnancy existing at the time of treatment, from a previous sexual exposure, or resulting from a patient failure during treatment, an early abortion induced by conventional means should be seriously considered even though an action of this kind on the fetus is not known to exist.

Edwards was the lead-off witness at extensive hearings on biomedical research and human experimentation by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's Senate Health subcommittee.

Diethylstilbestrol (DES) was banned as an animal food additive last year because it causes cancer, and illegal residues remained in the liver of slaughtered beef cattle.

The drug also has been linked to scores of cases of vaginal and cervical cancer in young women whose mothers took it during pregnancy to prevent miscarriages. Its effectiveness for that purpose later was disproved.

Edwards told the subcommittee that DES has been available to physicians for more than 30 years in the treatment of gynecological disorders.

But within the last few years, he said, it has enjoyed increasing popularity as a post-coital contraceptive although the FDA has not approved that use.

Its use is especially widespread on certain college campuses. Consumer groups have charged that university health centers often prescribe it to coeds without warning them of the risk to themselves or their possible offspring, and without taking adequate patient histories.

Reappointment Leeway Granted

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court Wednesday gave state legislatures considerable leeway in reapportioning themselves.

The 5 to 3 ruling said strict population equality is not constitutionally required when the states want to maintain traditional county and city boundaries.

The court specifically approved a Virginia plan with a range of at least 16.4 per cent from the largest to the smallest district in the House of Delegates.

The plan had been upset by a four-judge federal court in Richmond which went on to substitute for it one that broke political boundaries in 12 instances but reduced the population variance to a little more than 10 per cent.

Acting on an appeal by state officials, the high court reinstated the General Assembly's scheme with the exception of a Senate district in Norfolk.

Justice William H. Rehnquist said for the majority that even in 1964 when the court first applied the "one-man, one-vote" standard to state legislative districts it allowed greater flexibility from perfect equality than in drawing U.S. congressional lines.

He said "application of the absolute equality test of the court's rulings in congressional cases to state legislative redistricting may impair the normal functioning of state and local governments."

But Justice William J. Brennan, Jr., dissented, and said the court had never held that different constitutional standards were to be applied to state legislative and U.S. congressional reapportionment.

"The need to preserve the integrity of political subdivisions as political subdivisions may in some instances justify small variations in the population of districts from which state legislators are elected," he wrote.

N.E. POW's

More N.E. POWs Return

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Two more prisoners of war, one of them leaving behind in Hawaii a buxom, blonde acquaintance of about 15 seconds, were winging over the last leg of their long trip home from Hanoi this morning.

The final leg of the trip began Tuesday in Hawaii, where Navy Lt. Cmdr. Fred R. Purrington received warm embrace at Hickam Air Force Base from an 18-year-old switchboard operator who said, "I heard he wanted to meet a blonde."

After Purrington of North Dartmouth, Mass., walked away, she said she hoped the 31-year-old bachelor would "keep in touch."

Flying in with him was Air Force Capt. Joe Milligan, 31, of Annandale, N.J., who was headed for Westover Air Force Base in Chicopee. Purrington was scheduled to continue on to the South Weymouth Naval Air Base and then the Boston Naval Hospital.

Both were shot down over North Vietnam; Purrington in October, 1966, and Milligan in May, 1967.

The only member of Purrington's immediate family still alive is his sister, Elizabeth, of Fairhaven, Mass. His mother died in 1971 and his father on Dec. 3, 1972, just days before the imminent release of the POWs was announced.

Milligan is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph S. Milligan of Annandale.

The two men became the fourth and fifth captives to return to Massachusetts since the releases began. Both were in the group of 20 POWs released Sunday by Hanoi.

Milligan was preceded at Westover by Air Force Capt. Edward Brudno, 32, of Quincy and SM. Sgt. Arthur Cormier, 38, of Bay Shore, N.Y., who arrived Saturday.

The fifth POW to return to New England was Navy Cmdr. Leonard Eastman, 39, of Bernardston, Mass., who has been undergoing "reentry" at the Boston Naval Hospital since last Friday.

On Tuesday Brudno and Cormier underwent further medical checks. They have been spending considerable time with their families during the debriefing process, said Maj. Richard Cox, spokesman at Westover.

At the Naval Hospital, spokesman said medical evaluations and debriefings were continuing for Eastman and his release was not yet scheduled.

His mother, Sara Eastman, said Tuesday that "the personal kindness of everyone involved in Leonard's homecoming has been a source of great comfort. Purrington was scheduled to continue on to the South Weymouth Naval Air Base and then the Boston Naval Hospital.

Logan Expansion Defeated

Legislation to prohibit expansion of some runways at Logan International Airport was soundly defeated Wednesday but a bill banning a special-purpose tunnel to the airport was given initial approval.

The Transportation Committee was sustained in both instances. Rep. Louis R. Nickenello, D-Natick, argued against any runway restriction. He said, "Until we have other modes of transportation available, we cannot stymie the airport."

Rep. Barney Frank, D-Boston, said the bill concerns a "fundamental question" whether the legislature can exercise any controls over the Massachusetts Port Authority, which runs the airport.

The legislator contended 30 per cent of Logan's traffic is bound for New York and declared trains should be able to get passengers to that destination "cheaper, safer and quicker."

Rep. Emanuel Berra, D-Boston, said the runway in question is now limited to very small planes but claimed the MPA wants to extend it to accommodate the 707's and 747's. Rep. Frank said "no tears need be shed" for MPS bondholders. He said the state "made a present" to the MPS of the Mystic River Tobin bridge which he said is a "sure-fire money-maker" and contributed substantially to the MPS's cash surplus.

He said the airport is a major economic asset to the city and state and the pending bill wasn't designed to "diminish" its importance.

The anti-tunnel bill was filed in the wake of a report recommended by Gov. Francis W. Sargent's administration calling for a new harbor tube to service the airport but limited to buses, taxis, airport limousines, trucks and emergency vehicles.

Rep. Frank W. Hatch Jr. of Beverly, the GOP floor leader, objected that the bill bans all tunnels and not simply special-purpose tunnels.

Rep. Raymond F. Rourke, D-Lowell, denied this and said the special-purpose tunnel would cost Massachusetts taxpayers $200 million. Rourke said, "There will be no federal funds for a special purpose tunnel."

The legislation was advanced on a standing vote of 24 to 16 and Hatch failed to muster the necessary support to force a roll call.

Mass Rep. Urges Change In Election Laws

BOSTON (AP)-U.S. Rep. Paul W. Cronin, R-Mass., Tuesday urged a legislative committee to back a change in election laws to allow a special Congressional election to be held the same day as the general elections.

Cronin said that if such a change had been made last year, he would have gained a full term's seniority over other freshman Congressmen elected last November. Cronin filled a congressional vacancy caused by the resignation last April of Rep. F. Bradford Morse.

Had a special election been held at the same time as the general election last November, Cronin told the election Laws Committee, he could have taken his seat in November rather than having to wait until January, and would thus have gotten seniority in such matters as selecting office space and in committee assignments.

Area Congressman Presses For Release Of Antipollution Funds

WASHINGTON (AP)—Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Mass., Wednesday pressed a top White House official to release $186 million in antipollution funds which must otherwise be paid by Massachusetts industries.

If Roy Ash, director of the Office of Management and Budget, agrees, the money will go for construction of sewage plants in the 10 cities, including Springfield, Worcester and Pittsfield.

At issue are regulations which put more of the burden of building the plants on local industries and less on the federal government.

Currently, a polluting company must pay only a portion of the local government's part of the cost while the federal government picks up 75 per cent of the tax.

Under the new regulations which go into effect March 1, each industry must pay proportionately its full share of both local and federal costs depending how much pollution it generates.

Environmental protection Agency officials in Boston told cities with pending sewage treatment applications they would be considered under the old rules if their paperwork was submitted by March 1.

Several did, but OMB and EPA officials in Washington reversed that decision and said only if final construction plans were approved would the pre-March 1 guidelines apply.

Conte said he met with Ash for 35 minutes and was promised a review of his request that all 10 cities be considered under the old guidelines.

Ash, Conte said, will meet with EPA Director William Ruckelshaus to review the OMB guidelines.

If the new guidelines are followed, Conte said, many industries will either leave or never settle in Massachusetts.

"The cost in jobs alone could be in the thousands," he said.

60-Year Voyage Ends

BOSTON (AP)—A statue of former Argentine Pres. Domingo F. Sarmiento, offered to the city of Boston by the government of the South American country 60 years ago, is finally on its way.

"We'll put it someplace," an aide to Boston Mayor Kevin H. White said, "but right now I can't tell you where."

White has a task force at work to find a site for the statue.

Sarmiento, who died in 1888, had become acquainted with Horace Mann in the 1880s and later found a system of schools in Argentina based on the American educator's theories.

When his government offered Boston a 15-foot statue of Sarmiento in 1913, Mayor John F. Fitzgerald accepted.

The Argentine ambassador to the United States, Carlos Manuel Muniz, informed Mayor White in a letter last month:

"Although several difficulties have hindered so far the fulfillment of this project, I am pleased to announce to you, Mr. Mayor, that now my government has taken and completed all the necessary steps to carry out this homage both to Sarmiento and the city of Boston."

Reporter Disputes Bremer Conspiracy

By MARK VOGLER

The Boston bureau chief of Newsweek Magazine said in an interview this week that statements made by a John Birch Society speaker which called the attempted assassination of Alabama Gov. George Wallace the result of a master conspiracy were "sheer fantasy."

Ms. Bernice Buresh, formerly of the Chicago bureau for Newsweek, reacted to a newspaper account of a Saturday speech by Timothy R. Heinan, a self-acclaimed former undercover operative for the Milwaukee Police Department.

She was lecturing to Mortar Board, National Senior Woman's Honorary at the University of Massachusetts Campus Center. Monday, and had mentioned that the "hottest" story that she had ever dealt with for Newsweek had been the circumstances surrounding the Wallace shooting.

Heinan has been quoted as saying that the Wallace shooting was linked to the same sources responsible for the Kennedy and Martin Luther King assassinations. He also charged that the suppression of the information behind the "Wallace Plot" was "a conspiracy on the part of the national news media."

Ms. Buresh, while with the Chicago bureau last year, had been assigned to cover the Wallace shooting. She did both an investigative report and a psychological profile on Arthur Bremer, who, Heinan said, was a member of the Students for a Democratic Society.

Reporter Knew Police

"As far as I know, the Milwaukee Police Department has no background of that nature on Arthur Bremer," Ms. Buresh contended. "Being a native of Milwaukee, I know the police as well as any reporter could know them. And I find this information to be totally untrue."

She described Bremer as "clearly a loner" and she said that most people she interviewed suggested that he was an "extremely introverted" person who kept to himself.

She referred to Heinan's claims as "irresponsible."

"What's disturbing is that he doesn't supply any valid information for what he's saying.

"What's even more disturbing is the allegation that a number of people, including news reporters, would enter into a conspiracy in order to distort the information. When he makes that statement, he's talking about me. Why would I enter into a conspiracy? I'm a news reporter. I report what I learn."

Criticized For Work

Ms. Buresh said that her bureau was citicized for doing too much work on Bremer.

"The American Civil Liberties Union felt we had violated his rights in tapping child psychology records which are not ordinarily considered public information."

She said that Newsweek initially broke the story that Bremer had a diary. In it, Ms. Buresh said, Bremer wrote of his plan to assassinate Nixon when he was in Canada, but could not get within close enough range of the president. She added he also wrote that he expected to be killed following the Wallace shooting.

"I'm convinced that one of the reasons why he chose to shoot Wallace was because campaign headquarters was only three blocks away from his apartment," she said.

According to Ms. Buresh, "Bremer really went off the steep end when his girlfriend, Joan Pemrich, stopped seeing him. He started doing a couple of exhibitionist things. He shaved his head and left his sideburns on."

She said that there was nothing to prove that Bremer had any kind of political ideology.

"There were a couple of indications in his diary that he was anti-Establishment, particularly after his girlfriend rejected him."

Heinan had said Saturday that he couldn't find anybody in Milwaukee who knew Bremer as a loner, "except a bunch of newsmen." In regard to this comment, Ms. Buresh rebutted: "Well, then, I guess Mr. Heinan wasn't looking very hard. Bremer was indeed a loner."

Bonnie Raitt

Bonnie Raitt Here Saturday

By DON BISHOP

In their third "benefit" concert of the year, the Student Senate Concert Committee will be presenting Bonnie Raitt, along with "special guest" Chris Smithers on Saturday, March 3.

There will be two shows, at 7:30 p.m. and 10:30 p.m., in the East Room of Worcester Dining Commons. Advanced sales tickets are going on sale today in the Campus Center.

The 22-year-old Ms. Raitt has performed in and around the Boston area for a number of years. While personally expressing a disdain for fame and fortune, she has recently begun to achieve a national following, largely in recognition of her outstanding singing, composing, and guitar playing talents.

Her music is for the most part comprised of country blues material, performed on steel, bottleneck, and slide guitar, played to the accompaniment of her regular bassist.

Bonnie's latest album, "Give It Up", expresses more versitility than her first, containing, in addition to the country blues, elements of rock and jazz, and three original compositions which might best be termed as "love ballads".

She has been quoted in Newsweek Magazine as saying: "I can appreciate–and it's too bad, that the audience appreciates the music of Fred McDowall better through me than through the real thing. If I were better, they'd like me less. My taste is funkier than I can bring off. I know it seems like a hype for me to sing the blues. But they speak to me. The blues is pain."

An excellent summation of the talents of Bonnie Raitt can be found in a concert review of a year ago in the New York Times.

"Despite her obvious gifts, Ms. Raitt's name is still far less known than it should be. Performers who can find their own voices in the middle of a deafening roar of imitative sounds are worth seeking out. Bonnie Raitt should be near the top of anyone's list of important new singers."

Chris Smithers, another frequent Boston area performer combines a blues and country flavor to his folk guitar. His performances have generally met with very favorable reviews and the Concert Committee expects this to be no exception.

All profits taken in from next Saturday's concert will be used in the production of this year's spring concert in the stadium.

POW Comes Home To Blonde

HONOLULU (AP) — "Welcome home, I'm your blonde," bubbled the buxom, blue-eyed young miss as the returning POW approached a chain-link fence at Hickam Air Force Base Tuesday.

Lt. Cmdr. Fred R. Purrington of North Dartmouth, Mass., reached across the waist-high barrier and gathered Josie Dagarde, 18, in his arms.

"I've been thinking about something like this for a long time," Purrington said after a long kiss.

The meeting of strangers took place Tuesday as the latest group of former prisoners stopped here en route home.

Miss Lagarde, a hotel switchboard operator, had sent a note to Purrington asking him to come over to meet her.

"I heard he wanted to meet a blonde," she said in explaining why she directed the note to him.

Miss Lagarde waved two small American flags as Purrington approached and gave him a Kennedy half dollar as a memento.

Striking Teachers Thwarted In N.H.

FARMINGTON, N.H. (AP) — Vowing to reopen this small central New Hampshire town's three schools Monday, the school board has started accepting applications of teachers for possible replacement of the 45 striking instructors who have closed down the schools since Feb. 5.

"We've advertised and are accepting resumes for perusal," Charles Morgan, school superintendent, said Wednesday. "But we have not employed anyone at this point."

Before actually hiring new teachers for the school system's 1,053 pupils, Morgan said he would await direction from the school board, which was scheduled to hold its first public meeting Wednesday night since the strike started.

The dispute over an initial contract has entered the courts. The latest action has been the retention of a lawyer by seven mothers to file a taxpayers' lawsuit to get the school board and the teachers back to the negotiating table.

While the battle swirls among the adults, the pupils are enjoying an extended Washington's birthday vacation. It was supposed to run only this week.

"I have no reason to believe...that the teachers are going to change their position on Monday, unless something happens," said John Tucker, executive director of the New Hampshire Education Association. Tucker is in town to act as a liason between the news media and the Farmington Teachers Association, of which all but about 10 of the striking teachers are members.

Tucker continued, "The teachers have said right along that if good faith negotiations were underway, they could possibly return to the classrooms."

Tucker said the basic point of the dispute is the lack of a "master contract," which covers conditions of employment for all teachers. He also said the teachers want the board to recognize the FTA as their bargaining agent and want a hike in the salary scales. He said the $6,000-$8,000 beginning maximum salary range was the lowest in the state.

"Now there are individual contracts between a teacher and the board," Tucker said. "Most school systems have a master contract."

After the strike started, the teachers were ordered to stop aiding and abetting in the strike by a temporary injunction obtained in Strafford County Superior Court by the board. The injunction made no mention of returning to work, and the teachers stopped picketing but continued to stay away from classes.

In another legal move Tuesday, Bradley Kidder, attorney for the board, filed a petition in Strafford Superior against the teachers for contempt of court. A hearing will be scheduled as soon as possible, according to Dick Keefe, clerk of courts.

June Opening Set For Library

By HUGH OWEN

The new University Library is scheduled for opening this June.

The opening was previously set for September, 1972, but had to be delayed due to worker's strikes and bad weather which hampered construction.

A professional mover has been hired for the task of moving the books from Goodell to the new library. This move is scheduled to begin immediately following the end of the spring semester and ending in time for the arrival of the summer swing-shift students.

Interior work has still to be completed before the new library opens.

Lights do not work on most of the floors. Toilets are not in operation on some of the floors. Rugs are not laid and doors not hung on some floors.

The University has only recently given official acceptance of the new library. Malfunction brakes on the elevators had to be fixed before the University would accept the library as satisfactory.

Problems in finishing the elevators arose when the contractor for the elevators, B&A Elevator of Boston, went out of business. Consolidated Elevator Co. was hired to complete the job.

The equipment budget for the new library is $450,000. This budget is smaller than those of other recently completed library buildings of similar size. As a result there are some equipment deficits.

These deficits show up most notably on the twentieth floor, the colloquium floor. Tables, chairs and desks will not be available and the floor will remain virtually empty.

Funds have not been allocated for the basement floor. The basement will remain unfinished until funds necessary for completion are received.

Despite rumors to the contrary the new library will not sink when the books are moved in, according to a construction official. He also said that smoke from the Physical Plant's smokestack is not being sucked in by the library's ventilation system.

Even if it were happening, he said, the problem would be alleviated when the Physical Plant moves to its new location.

POW's No Questions Please

BERNARDSTON, Mass. (AP) — The mother of Navy Cmdr. Leonard Eastman says the family will not ask him any questions about his six years as a prisoner of war in North Vietnam.

"He didn't mention anything about his imprisonment while we were visiting him" in Boston Naval Hospital last week, said Sara Eastman.

"We plan not to ask him any questions. We'll let him to the questioning," said the 66-year-old widow Wednesday.

Mrs. Eastman, her daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. J. Orrin Marlowe of Greenfield, returned home Monday after spending four days visiting Eastman. He entered Boston Naval Hospital last Friday.

Mrs. Eastman said her son "seemed to be in real good health. He's very thin and weak, but he's gaining weight and has a good appetite. His health was better than I expected."

Mrs. Eastman said her son, who has gained five pounds since entering the hospital, "has had some good food, steaks and sundaes."

When she went down to greet her son as his plane landed at South Weymouth Naval Air Station, Mrs. Eastman had a box of chocolates she later gave him.

"He said it had been a long time since he had seen a chocolate," she said.

Mrs. Eastman said from talking with her son she thinks prisoners didn't "much know what was going on in the states until a few days before they left for home."

She said Leonard "seemed to be himself, just as I remembered him. He was very, very happy."

Mrs. Eastman said her son told her he was surprised by the change in men's fashions and by the bright colors men are wearing.

Harvard Honors Liza

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — The Hasty Pudding Theatricals honored Liza Minelli as the 23rd "Woman of the Year" Tuesday by treating the Harvard University campus to a carnival complete with costumes, a brass band and excerpts from their upcoming show.

Miss Minelli, star of the motion picture "Cabaret", was paraded around the campus in a 1940 Lincoln convertible with Desi Arnez, Jr.

Members of the cast of the Hasty Pudding's forthcoming production "Bewitched Bayou" rode in antique fire engines.

Following the parade, Miss Minelli, who has been nominated for an Oscar for her performance in the film, sang the lead song from "Cabaret".

"This is the greatest party I've ever been to," she told an audience of 300 persons.

"It's great to have tradition," she said, referring to the club's 125-year history.

"Whenever I smile in the future, you're a big part of the reason."

Asked how she felt being honored by an organization that until two weeks ago refused entry to women, she said, "They're in now, and anyway it's fabulous to be a woman."

Food Improvement

Campus Food Services are constantly under attack by students, yet students make little effort to offer constructive criticisms. when they are given the opportunity to do so.

The Food Services Committee, a subcommittee of the Service Department of the Student Senate, meets every week for the purpose of allowing students to air their complaints and, more importantly, become actively involved in improving Food Service operations and conditions.

Yet, at the first meeting this semester, absolutely no students attended. At the second meeting, held last Tuesday night, five students showed up. Considering that almost 10,000 students eat in the Dining Commons, this is a disgracefully poor representation.

The Food Service Committee is still in its formation stage, and it needs students to accomplish many of its goals. Some of the things it plans to do include: 1) investigation of the types of food service plans used in other universities to see how UMass might be able to benefit from them; 2) investigation of the legality of forcing students to purchase meal tickets, and not allowing refunds on unused meal tickets or the transferral of meal tickets; and 3) formation of a student advisory board to work with Joel Stoneham, Director of Food Services.

The Committee meets every Tuesday night at 7 p.m. in Campus Center room 177. We urge all students who eat in the Dining Commons to try to attend.

A Momentary Embrace

Most students here have heard the legend of Eric the Rat, the dude that supposedly performed sexual intercourse in the Student Union Ballroom during the student strike of Spring 1970 (May 14 at midnight, to be exact). The rumor was hot for about a year after the big strike, and since then it's been handed down, so that a lot of people who were still in high school in 1970 have heard the tale of notorious Eric. Who cares if it's true or not? It sounds good, doesn't it? Ballin' in the Ballroom.

Eric the Rat is today known as Eric Walgren, ex-write-in candidate for Amherst Selectperson. And since Eric is getting involved with what he calls "radical electoral politics", he thought it might be a good idea to clean up his image a bit. So Eric stopped by the Collegian office the night before the election and asked that the truth be printed, once and for all. The Collegian obliged, and published a short blurb the morning of the election, saying that Eric Walgren denies balling in the ballroom (in so many words). The rumor itself probably didn't cost him any votes, but his denial probably didn't win any votes either. Eric categorically disavowed the rumor that he publicly performed sexual intercourse, but he gladly admitted to dancing in the nude, and to a lot of people, stripping and screwing are synonymous, especially under watchful eyes. Either way, though, Eric got a lot of exposure.

At the risk of spoiling a good story for upperclassmen to tell freshmen, and for Louis Morini to tell Attorney General Robert Quinn, here at last is the true story, in print, of what actually happened that fateful spring night, for what it's worth. The gospel according to Eric himself.

"In truth," Eric told us, "I was a nude participant in a Happening sponsored by the Strike Committee." This Happening, as he calls it, consisted of a light show, live acid rock, an enthusiastic crowd, and buckets of water fountaining into the air. In Eric's words, it was a "recreational relief of emotional tensions created by the strike situation."

The other nude participant was a woman, and Eric didn't screw her, he danced with her. No sexual intercourse whatsoever. "I momentarily embraced her," said Eric, and that seems to be where the confusion lies. "The sexual act was in the minds of the strikers--a fantasy release from mass sexual repression." Even so, naughty Eric was charged with "lewd and lascivious conduct" and fined $500, which is more than you'd pay for your run-of-the-mill, senior-prom-type dance. The only evidence presented in court was that of public nudity.

Alan Chapman

Eric was a colorful member of the Strike Steering Committee and a notorious activist in the anti-war movement on campus, which, in some people's way of thinking, was probably as big a crime as struttin' around with no clothes on.

"It was all part of a plan to prevent me from being an activist on this campus," said Eric. But that's another story, for another time. Suffice it to say that no charges were brought against the girl with whom he danced.

According to Eric, various spectators of the Happening have since told him that it was difficult to determine exactly what was going on admist the confusion in the Ballroom at the time, and that most students are disappointed when they find out what really did happen.

"If we had charged admission," Eric confided, "it would have been sexually dull compared to 'Hair'."

According to the version of the story I had heard, Eric balled not one, but two women.

"TWO women?!?!" Eric asked incredulously. "TWO women?! Jesus Christ, who do they think I am? Superman?"

Looking Back

It's a time for the nostalgic. With the recent return of over 163 POW's, the nation turns the clock back to envision how these men of the 1960's will be looking at 1973.

Some have likened the return to an invasion of interplanetary creatures, foreigners who must now adapt to our society.

The alien analogy weakens considerably with the knowledge that over 80% of these men's lives were spent in the United States. Yet a quick glance over the shoulder impresses upon one the reality that much has changed in six or seven years.

Remember the good old days. The days when hip and joint were known as parts of the anatomy. When a bummer was a man who needed money, and went about getting it by begging people to death.

Big Daddy was a father who stood over six feet tall and stoned was something done to people in Great Britain before the invention of the electric chair.

Remember when a pig and cat were still animals; when soul was something found only in philosophical jargon; when gay used to mean you were happy and having a good time?

Bad news used to be WHAT Walter Cronkite said on the news, not WHO he was talking about.

Have you forgotten when cool fit nicely in between cold and warm on the temperature scale; when right on went in sentences such as "you can put that right on the table over there."

Dig used to be something we did with a shovel and a super bowl was the only dish into which you could fit two helpings of raisin bran.

Not too long ago, the ABA stood only for American Bar Association and DPH symbolized Department of Public Health, not Designated Pinch Hitter.

Years ago, getting high meant to pole vault or high jump and coke referred to something we drank. Remember "heavy", the word that described the type of person badly in need of a diet?

Recall the past, when the President was a living advertisement for a band-aid manufacturer, not one with a first name that lends itself to sexual exploitation. Think back when the FBI's chief was the name of a vacuum cleaner, not a color.

How about the phrase "out of sight." Some found its use in the lover's refrain "out of sight, out of mind." Others thought it to describe an object out of our field of vision.

Remember when a shag was a type of rug, not a style in haircuts?

The word smack was synonymous with kiss. Some people even took it to mean a whack on the rear. How about truckin'? It described the most widely used means for transporting goods around the United States.

There were days when the wide-spread acquisition of pills allowed millions to get up, not in; when a double breasted jacket meant your wife or girlfriend was wearing it.

There used to be a time when groovy described the contour of a psychologists rat maze, or when 747 stood for a telephone exchange, not a flying caravan.

Recollect when Dr. J. would have described a person who jammed needles into people, not basketball into baskets.

Going both ways used to mean that your boy could play offense and defense, while woodstock referred to shares you owned in a lumber firm.

When someone spoke the three letter word "oui" we knew he was saying yes in French; no more. Now he might be referring to the magazine that rivals Penthouse.

Recall those days after the rainfall when you'd gaze outside and see your flowers drowned in the water beds. Now water beds are something to sleep on.

Times past, acid was a substance that burned your clothes, not your brain. And alas, grass used to be snipped, not smoked.

Well Big Daddy, the hip Bunker family sang that heavy song in right on fashion, "Those were the days." Dig?

The Right To Bear Arms

There's a sucker born every minute, and they all seem to grow up very quickly and become liberals who stand on the affirmative side of every silly proposal to come down the pike. Silliness means most of the proposed gun patrol panaceas. Only a sucker can place that much faith in the efficacy of Congressional enactments. Just pass a law and the problem will go away, and we'll live happily ever after. Sometimes faith can be very, very blinding.

The problem, we are told, is that there are too many shooting deaths. That is unfortunately a very painful truth. But the solutions that are being heralded as a cure for the problem of flying bullets are almost always based on a poor knowledge of history, a political immaturity, and a very bad metaphysical foundation.

The usual response to the problem of gun abuse is a cry for laws making gun ownership unlawful, or at least highly subjected to Federal restrictions. Such laws would not attack the problem of gun abuse, any more than the Prohibition was able to control the abuse of alcohol.

The foremost factor overlooked by the proponents of gun controls is that the overwhelming majority of gun owners are NOT abusers of their Constitutionality guaranteed privilege. Most American owners possess a firearm for legitimate reasons, such as sporting or self-defense. There are two reasons for the liberals to snicker at. Hunting and target shooting just aren't their cup of tea. Ergo, such indulgences are to be made unlawful in order to save the soul of humanity. And self-defense ... did you ever hear of such a thing? People are still afraid of muggers, housebreakers, and rapists. Such patanoia!

The proposals to make gun ownership unlawful will merely punish those who are law-abiding and will simultaneously fail to solve the problem of illegal ownership. Those whose intentions are unholy will always find a way around the law. Even if the manufacturer of handguns is restricted or eliminated in the U.S.A., the habitual lawbreaker will concentrate more of his efforts on smuggling the merchandise into the country and making big profits on the black market. The bullets will still be flying. And other types of homicide will proliferate. Shall we pass other types of homicide will proliferate. Shall we pass a law against the growing of long fingernails? After all, the better to strangle you with, my dear.

The mere efficacy of such proposals is not the only grounds for their inadvisability. Gun Control Legislation would bring us closer to a state of affairs which greatly influenced the decision by our Founding Fathers to include the Right to Bear Arms in the Bill of Rights. That state is the possibility of a government monopoly on all the firepower. The British Colonial regime sought desperately to strip the colonists of their weapons, and, consequentially, their means, and only recourse, of opposing tyranny. The Founding Fathers foresaw the possibility of a breakdown of limited government, and the imposition of a home-grown despotism, and it was their desire to leave a built-in deterrant to tyranny. A tyranny and a well-armed populace cannot coexist. If the people possess the means to say no, the government will have a hard time tyrannizing. An excellent deterrant to Facism.

The Right to Bear Arms is not just a privilege granted under the Constitution. It is a vitally necessary ingredient of a free society.

Letters To The Editor

Happy Birthday, George Washington!

To The Editor:

The United States public has recently celebrated the birth (or was it the death?) of one of its truly great Presidents, George Washington.

George Washington, great American forefather.

George Washington, utmost symbol of patriotism and democracy.

George Washington, idol of how many million?

Yes, that's right. Don't laugh, it's the truth. Good ole American History says so.

Just as it says that in 1469, or some such time, a gigolo with a freak for sailing, a thrill for risk-taking, and a lust for adventure, conned a loose twist (or was it somebody in drag?) out of a few boats, crews, some coin, and whatnot.

That's the absolute, unquestionable, undeniable truth.

Just as is, as we all know, the reports concerning the recently terminated shoot 'em up in Southeast Asia.

Well, almost. What's a white lie here or there, anyhow?

Still, as we also know, the American public and peoples of the world in general, all have an easy access to the total facts and to the sheer truths concerning any and everything, made readily available, courtesy of those dedicated and oh so humble public servants in Washington, who so generously, graciously, and willingly find it their duty to release the complete details, so long as they are for our own good.

POW's.

Five, six, seven, eight years.

On an all expenses paid vacation?

Elegant and luxurious accommodations?

Gourmet cuisine or organic diets?

Custom-made suits of the finest silks?

Woooo!

Oh, but it's all over now. They're home.

Yeah, right.

Hey, catatonic. Hey, you, vegetable. Hey, marionette. Here. Hey, here. Here's a hundred thousand dollars. Go on take it. Go on. Just lemme cut off your tongue (on the condition that it already hasn't been). Or, lemme attach these here puppet strings (as if they already aren't).

Or those who'll receive federal compensation as long as they'll live.

Kind of difficult to run a four-minute mile or to play ice-hockey on wooden legs, don't you think?

Or to play tennis or to lift weights with rubber arms, ain't it?

Or to watch the women walk by or to drive a car in braille.

Or to listen to music or to speak on a telephone in sign language.

Get the point?

Catch the drift?

Understand?

There's been many too many needless killings, moronic mutilations, uncalled for upsettings of equanimity, and a whole lot of unnecessary bullshit in general going on for too, too long a time. How to put a damper on's the thing.

They shit-surely ain't gonna. Shit-surely.

Us? We gotta try. Got to.

So, what's to do?

Well, there's this issue, see? Thing called amnesty.

Amnesty, that's right.

What's to it? What's it all about?

Well, as we all know, there's thousands of Americans, a, living elsewhere.

How that the war is over, some want to come home, reasonably or unreasonable so.

But, these-a expatriates. They're draft dodgers, slick chickens, cowards. They're no good, low-down scum. Communists, even.

Your ass.

It's just that their consciouses couldn't and wouldn't allow them to commit murder; to become cold-blooded, blood-thirsty animals; to ruthlessly slaughter and needlessly torture thousands of innocent women and children; to bomb villages and to burn down houses; to, in other words, become patriotic American citizens.

So, as a reward and special bonus, they're to be persecuted as as criminals. Just because they weren't and aren't as gung ho or as ra-ra, if you will, as the average American, a, kid on the block.

Think it's been easy for them? That they've, likewise, been on vacation?

Think again.

Some people got tricky ankles.

Some people got tricky knees.

Some people got tricky elbows.

What's Pat Nixon got?

The thing is, how to get it to grant total and complete amnesty to any and all who want it.

"We hold these truths to be self-evident.. life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness...", and all that.

Now, this ain't no advice, and it ain't no proposition. It certainly ain't telling nobody what to do or what not to do. It ain't no suggestion, or anything of the sort. And, it ain't twisting or even bending anybody's arm. It's just a passing observation, you understand. A passing observation.

Back in '70, when the bombing of Cambodia commenced, there was a nation-wide strike of colleges and universities.

That's right, nation-wide. (At apathetic UMass, even.)

You know, profs and instructors, going about their regular business. Doing nothing all day, and during the strike, they did nothing for pay.

Students and otherwise, not having to worry about which classes to cut. Taking things easily. Smoking pot, drinking beer, listening to music, partying, etc., all day long.

Nothing out of the ordinary, you understand.

Nothing subversive or anti-American, either.

No taking over of the administration building, or cooking lunch or having breakfast in bed at President Wood's. (Heavens forbid!)

Not necessary to burn, bomb, or sabotage any buildings, such as that belonging to the University Police, or that of any other worthwhile organization. (Oh, good Lord!)

No need for rioting, raising Cain, wrecking havoc, causing hate and discontent, demolition, destruction, and disruption. (Excuse these religious asides.)

Just a good, old-fashioned, down home, non-violent, nation-wide, American-type strike, period.

Oh-a, by the by. George Washington: who knows how many cherries he broke?

Richie Rashed

We Will Be Back

To The Editor:

I am writing this letter to thank those students of Precinct 3 who voted for me in the town election Tuesday. You one hundred and ten people found the time to exercise your right to vote, while the vast majority of registered students, over five hundred, chose to stay in their lairs contemplating their navels.

You students who chose to stay at home missed a golden opportunity to drastically change Amherst's political complexion. We had a chance to slow town growth and end its related problems, (e.g., more pollution and a greater demand for services). We had a chance to establish a child care center and take the necessary steps towards rent control. We possibly could have decriminalized marijuana by passing an ordinance similar to the law now in effect in Ann Arbor, Michigan. Yes, we had the opportunity to work on these and other problems but you chose not to care.

I, along with the other defeated students of precincts 2, 3, and 7, will run again next year; I only hope that our efforts will not again be in vain.

Jeffrey Boudreau

Editorial Points

Doesn't it pain you to see all these posters around campus advertising movies without telling you how much they cost? You'd think they never heard of the consumer's right to know.

Costly Non-Returnables

To The Editor:

Within the past fifteen years, amidst all manner promotional hoopla by industries, a changeover has been almost completely effected from use of returnable bottles to no-deposit, no-return containers for beverages. Their dubious "convenience" features not only increased substantially the cost of the product at the market but also include a multitude of hidden social and environmental costs which currently are paid for in litter clean up, solid waste disposal, and the effects of resource and energy depletion. When the true costs are considered, the one-use container becomes an unaffordably wasteful item that has replaced an ideal form of recycling. Among these costs are:

INCREASED LITTER-Placing a deposit on a container, provided it is high enough, is the simplest and most effective way to reduce the beverage container portion of litter as it makes it expensive to discard and profitable to pick up. A survey in Oregon prior to passage of its "Bottle Bill" found throw-aways to be 21 times as likely to wind up as litter and that with returnables the cartons returned also, removing this part also. Beverage containers are responsible for about a third of the litter along roadsides but when esthetics are considered its contribution is even grater. The discarded beer can has become a symbol of the callousness in American attitudes towards the environment.

Aluminum, found in all-aluminum cans and in the tops of steel pop-top cans does not corrode and will build up if not picked up regularly. The Oregon law bans pop-top cans precisely because the shiny aluminum rings began to become particularly visible in beaches and parks. The throw-away bottles, lighter and thinner than returnables also are much more prone to shattering-a hazard to pedestrians or tires.

INCREASED SOLID WASTES-By weight, beverage containers are about 5% of our solid wastes. When incineration is the method of disposal, over 90% of the residue is glass or metal, of which perhaps 40% is due to throw-away beverage containers.

If all the beverage cans used yearly were stacked on end they would reach to the Moon and back five times. All beverage containers could annually cover Washington D.C. five times.

MINERAL DEPLETION-The 36 billion beverage cans produced in a year constitute a significant waste of metallic resources, primarily steel and aluminum. The rise in the use of aluminum which may come to dominate the market, makes the drain particularly severe as world supplies are projected to last only 120 years, over 90% of the aluminum ore, bauxite, has to be imported, and extraction of one ton requires 16,000 kilowatt hours of electric power.

ENERGY DEPLETION-Studies of the throw-away system show it to consume four times as much energy as a returnable system (aluminum cans use even more). Annually the amount of power used to this end could provide the residential power needs for 2-1/2 million people.

HIGHER COSTS AT THE MARKET-Beverages in returnable bottles have always been cheaper by as much as 30% since the cost of a throw-away container is often more (4¢-5¢) than the beverage inside and this cost must be paid for repeatedly. There are costs unique to returnables such as washing, extra handling and transportation but with these considered the price is substantially lower. One estimate puts the savings for American consumers at 1.5 billion dollars annually if all beer and soft drinks were sold in returnable bottles.

LOSS OF EMPLOYMENT-The changeover to throw-aways has resulted in more centralization of bottling plants and a squeezing of small bottlers who can't afford packaging in the higher priced containers. The industry wide committment to the one-way container has already cost as many as 80,500 workers their jobs in this manner and added to this can be the thousands of retail clerks, truckers and warehouse workers who were adversely affected by the change. Indications are that the employment displacement from further centralization is only going to increase.

Currently there are sixteen bills before the Massachusetts Commerce and Labor Committee and a warrant article in Amherst along these lines. Proposing such legislation is affecting only a portion of the problem which must be acted upon in a much more broad manner but it is the logical first step to take. Strong grass roots support is needed now. Contact Town Meeting members and State Representatives. Write letters to newspapers and start discussion. Last year's International Fair (pictured above) was considered a success, visited by over 4,000 people. This year's fair will feature exhibits and demonstrations from various countries as well as a number of special events.

Second International Fair To Be Held In March

On March 9 and 10 the second annual International Fair will be held in the Student Union Ballroom. The purpose of the fair is to raise funds for a scholarship and emergency fund for foreign students. Contributions are not mandatory but will make the donor eligible for door prizes.

At last year's fair, over 4,000 people visited the various booths and the fair was considered a great success. This year's booths will feature cultural displays, arts and crafts exhibits, national dishes and non-alcoholic beverages (the food service will operate a bar at the fair), games, demonstrations of national customs, and travel study abroad information. The booths represent Greek, Danish, English, Indian, Israeli, African and other cultures.

In addition to dances, musical and dramatic presentations and fashion shows, the fair has a number of special events planned. On Friday at 7:30 p.m. the Five College Area Folk Dance Group will sponsor an international folk dance teach-in open to the public. Saturday at 8 p.m., George Young of the School of International Training in Brattleboro, Vermont will be caller for general folk and square dancing. A demonstration of the Japanese tea ceremony will also be offered.

Last year's fair chairperson, Dr. C. Lynn Vendien (545-2557) of the physical education department, will co-chair this year's fair along with Judson Haverkamp (545-0019). Anyone interested in helping out or getting more information can contact, in addition to the co-chairpersons, Sridhar Ramadas (545-2418) or Judith Jeter (546-9971).

"Model Prisoner" Neglects Family

By PATTI LEE
Associated Press Writer

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP) — In 1967, George Chicoine was sent to prison on contempt of court charges for failure to make support payments totaling $2,550 to his family.

Five years later Chicoine is still a prisoner and his debt has mounted week-by-week to a total of $40,000.

The Burlington man, once a prosperous home-builder, is viewed by officials at Windsor State Prison as a model prisoner who "gets along with everyone."

However, his estranged wife, Theresa J. Chicoine, depicted him as a man who was "never able to accept the responsibility of being a father" to his nine children.

Chicoine's case was reviewed by the Vermont Supreme Court and Tuesday the justices referred it back to Chittenden County Court where it originated. There was a possibility that the review would be before Superior Court Judge Robert Larrow, the judge who sentenced Chicoine to prison five years ago.

Under Vermont state law, the sentence is for an indefinite term until support payments are made.

Lt. George Mayo, an official at Windsor Prison, said several years ago it wasn't unusual for indefinite sentences to be given for support payment debts, but "in this day and age it wouldn't happen.

"If no one had brought this to light he'd probably be sitting there forever," said Mayo.

Chicoine's attorney, Roger Kohn, said an assistant state attorney general brought the case to the attention of Legal Aid, and Kohn took it over this year.

Kohn said his client's imprisonment was "cruel and unusual punishment" and that he never received any court ruling to tell him how he could pay off a debt while he was in prison.

In Burlington, Mrs. Chicoine said her husband was in prison because "he was a father who didn't want to take care of his children."

She said she firmly believed he had money invested and "could get out if he just decided to pay. Now he's hoping to get out and not have to pay anybody."

She said she had been told by the court to go on welfare. Her three youngest children, aged seven through twelve, are still at home.

1919 State Guard Returns For Compensation

By HOWARD WHITE
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — When the Massachusetts State Guard was mobilized in 1919 to maintain order during the Boston police strike, Willard F. Alden was a young corporal in a light machine gun corps.

Alden was about to lead a squad of men to the State House when one of the men, "playing cowboy" drew his gun and accidentally shot the corporal.

Wednesday, Alden returned to the State House to ask the Massachusetts Legislature to compensate him for the injuries he sustained more than 50 years ago. He said he borrowed the money to travel from Phoenix, Ariz., where he now lives.

"There was no animosity. It was strictly an accident. He was playing cowboy and pulled his gun and went bang and shot me," said Alden.

"I received no compensation whatsoever," Alden told the House Ways and Means Committee. "I was a patriotic citizen.

"I still don't say they owe me anything," he added. "But now, I need help."

Alden's corps was called up from New Bedford to Boston by then Gov. Calvin Coolidge.

State Senate Debates Lottery Bills

BOSTON (AP) — In a debate that was acrimonious at times, the Massachusetts Senate had a go-around Tuesday over three bills concerning the state lottery.

One bill would establish penalties or up to one year in jail, and a minimum fine of $400 for impersonating a member or employe of the state lottery commission, and fines up to $5,000 and up to three years imprisonment for promises to secure a job with the lottery commission for a consideration of money or property.

Another would allow appointment of lottery employes as special police and another would allow the state lottery commission to sell tickets directly to the public.

Sen. David H. Locke, R-Wellesley, attacked the impersonation bill, and accused the senate of ignoring the growth of crime, while considering a law which would impose a stiff penalty "for a non-existent crime."

Locke said that the jail term would be greater than the sentence now imposed for some drug violations, while the mandatory fine of more than $400 far exceeded the minimum fines for drunken driving.

"I don't think we have any law against impersonating a state senator," Locke quipped, "but then who would want to?"

Sen. Denis L. McKenna, D-Somerville, speaking for the Committee on Government Regulations, said that the bill was "like insurance, you take it out and you don't expect to die the next day."

The impersonation bill passed on a voice vote.

Locke also wanted to know the necessity for the bill allowing appointment of lottery employes as special police. McKenna again charged that Locke was simply opposed to the lottery altogether, and that Locke had voted to allow police appointments in state colleges, and various institutions and agencies.

Milkman Wins A Million

BOSTON (AP) — Robert Taylor, a milkman who usually covers his daily route in six hours, says it'll probably take him twice as long Thursday. His customers will want to congratulate him on winning $1 million.

Taylor, 40, of Winchester became the latest "Million Dollar Game" winner in the Massachusetts Lottery's drawing Tuesday night.

He said many of his customers on his 32-store route in the East Cambridge area called him Wednesday to offer congratulations. They reached him at home because he had taken the day off.

Taylor said he would be back on the job Thursday because "I've got to keep my customers happy."

Following an all-night hastely-planned party, Taylor paused to accept a toast–in milk–with his two daughters, Deborah, 4, and Patricia, 6.

"It's just unreal," he said of his winnings, which he will get at the rate of $50,000 annually for 20 years.

Deborah said that she knew "Daddy won a lot of money–a hundred dollars, I think."

Taylor said he has no plans to retire from H.P. Hood and Sons, where he has worked for 19 years. He plans to use some of the money to build a house on land he owns on Cape Cod.

Second prize of $100,000 went to Douglas T. Rice of North Adams, who said he bought his winning ticket jointly with his employer, Edward B. Nassif, operator of a pharmacy and ticket-selling agent for the lottery.

The eight $10,000 winners among the 111 finalists for the drawing were: Gaetano J. Brigandi and Walter C. Silik, both of East Boston; Alan G. Hurlburt of Holyoke; Harry Saztrea of Waltham; Eward W. Kimball of Haverhill; Armando Rao of Pawtucket, R.I.; William Chadwick of Russell, and Arthur W. Holmes, Sr., of Cochituate.

Each of the other finalists won $500.

Chess Club Bids For Intercollegiate Tournament

The Chess Club has bid $5,100 in hopes of bringing the Pan American Intercollegiate Team Championship to Amherst next December.

In explaining the recent MDC article, Jim Lane, President of the Chess Club, clarified Thursday's action by the C.C. Board of Governors:

"With team entry fees, donations from the Mass. Chess Assoc., private individuals, and the balance from the C.C. Board; we've guaranteed a $4,100 prize fund and $1,000 to cover operating expenses," he said.

The Board of Governors said they understand the risk, but foresee returns from the hotel and food services to compensate for the approximately $700 investment.

The Chess Club president went on to explain: "until the bid is approved, we won't know how many teams will be entered or how much the C.C. Board will have to supplement the prize fund."

The Chess Club's bid for the annual tournament is in contention with a Univ. of Georgia/Georgia Tech bid from Atlanta for a $3,500 prize fund.

The Chess match, sponsored by the Intercollegiate Chess League of America, and open to any college or university in the Americas, drew 110 teams to Columbus, Ohio last year.

UMass Prof. Discusses Soviet Underground Press

Tonight at 8:30 p.m. in the Governor's Lounge of the Student Union, the Concerned Jewish Students' lecture series continues. The guest lecturer will be Professor Laszlo M. Tikos, an Associate Professor of Slavic Languages and Literature here at UMass. Professor Tikos' topic will be about the Jewish writers of the Samizdat (the Soviet Jews' underground press).

Professor Tikos is most qualified. He has done work in numerous European universities in Russian Area Studies. His professional experiences are not lacking either. In the 1950's he was a Russian teacher, lecturer, and instructor. Professor Tikos also worked with Radio Free Europe until 1962 when he came to UMass as an Assistant Professor of Russian.

Since that time, Professor Tikos has been involved with numerous research grants on Russian literature. All of this background, plus much more, makes Professor Tikos' profile very impressive.

Mass Firm Rejected In Stowe

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP) — The Vermont Environmental Board Tuesday rejected the application of a Massachusetts firm to buil a $9 million second-home complex in the ski-resort area of Stowe.

On Feb. 8, 1972, Land-Tech Corp. won approval for its plan to build 167 condominium living units in 75 buildings, but that was from a district environmental commission. The Town of Stowe and the Stowe Municipal Planning Commission appealed.

Tuesday's decision was the first time since the 1970 passage of Vermont's development control law, known generally as Act 250, that the board denied an application earlier approved by a district commission.

Land-Tech could appeal to the state Supreme Court, but there was no immediate indication whether the company would.

The board, in its formal findings of fact, said Land-Tech "did not carry its burden of proof...by presenting sufficient evidence to show that its proposed development will not result in undue water pollution, and that it will not result in the reduction in the capacity of the land to hold water so that a dangerous and unhealthy condition may result." The second phase of that statement deals with ability of the land to handle sewage.

The ruling also said the board felt the construction project would "cause undue highway congestion or unsafe conditions with respect to the use of the highways existing or proposed," and that the project would have "undue adverse effect on the scenic and natural beauty of the area and asthetics."

In all, Land-Tech wanted to construct the condominiums in five phases together with a 100-unit motel, swimming pool and pool buildings, an indoor tennis court and club house, five outdoor tennis courts, an indoor theater, a gasoline station and a block of stores.

South African City Hit By Illegal Strikes

DURBAN, So. Africa (LNS) -- A week-long strike of 50,000 black African workers virtually paralyzed the city of Durban, South Africa's largest port, and one of its largest industrial cities. The strike is the most successful industrial action of its kind in the history of South Africa.

The strikers, totaling one-third of Durban's work force, affected over 100 companies in the area. Strikes by blacks in South Africa are illegal. (Africans who strike or participate in any work stoppage or slowdown face a three-year jail sentence and a fine of $1500.)

Hundreds of Africans were arrested after numerous incidents when police charged assembled groups of strikers, using tear gas and 4-foot long riot batons to disperse them.

One key industry that was totally shut down was Durban's booming textile industry, where over 7,000 workers struck four major textile mills.

After the end of the morning shift on the first day of the strike at one of the factories, men and women workers gathered outside the factory's gates. As they sang and carried sticks, they were joined by workers from the other three factories, and those arriving for the afternoon shift, swelling the crowd to over 5,000. Some broke sticks from trees. Many chanted and danced and there were cries of "We are now a united nation." Bottles and stones were thrown at the factory.

One company official was heard admonishing the strikers, according to South Africa's Rand Daily Mail, saying the strike would not get them anywhere. "You dance better than you weave," he said, adding they would only make progress through "peaceful negotiation."

Black workers are also prevented by South African law from belonging to any trade union. And they have absolutely no bargaining power with their employers. All details of employment such as working conditions and wages are controlled by the employers or by government committees.

The strike affected a wide vareity of industry in Durban, from packaging plants to ironworks, shipbuilding to tea. Over 16,000 municipal workers also struck the city government, forcing white people to empty their own trash cans as garbage piled up in the streets, and to unload their own vegetables from produce trucks in local markets. At one point 80 railroad cars full of poduce stood unloaded. Market managers feared the loss of the entire shipment.

Workers in all industries demanded substantial wage increases. Almost 3,000 workers returned to the textile mills reluctantly after accepting an increase of about $1.30 per week for starting employees, and $3.15 per week for workers employed more than five years. Most salaries now average around $10 to $15 a week.

Municipal workers returned to work after being out on strike for almost two weeks, although one said, according to the Johannesburg Star, that they were returning "because we are hungry and not because we have accepted the new wages." They returned to their jobs after the Mayor of Durban conceded them a small raise in wages, followed by an ultimatum to resume work within a day or lose their jobs. Unemployment insurance is only available to workers who make over $650.00 a year.

Most of these municipal workers are migratory, that is, they are forced to live on African reservations, known as Bantustans, and are only given passes to come to Durban if they have employment. Loss of a job would mean they would have to return to their reserves.

The strike has brought to the surface the conflicts caused by the harsh economic facts of life for South Africa's black working population, which makes up 80% of the total work force. According to a Survey of Race Relations in South Africa in 1968, white workers earn $340 monthly wages in manufacturing while black African workers in the same industries earn $64 monthly. In public service jobs, whites earn $208; blacks earn $33 monthly. Other figures have shown that 25% of all urban Africans have monthly incomes of less than $26, 40% have incomes below $65, and a further 20% have incomes of between $65 and $112.

And according to even official South African government figures, the poverty line in monthly wages for a family of four or five is $106.00.

Some of the Durban companies that were struck average over $10.5 million a year in profits, and pay their African workers an average of $46.80 per month. In South Africa's rapid inflationary economy, with prices increasing all the time, white South Africans can meet these rising costs, while Black workers face an almost insurmountable problem if commodities increase in price even by a few cents.

In the three largest sectors of the South African economy--mining, construction, and manufacturing--there is a ratio of about 5 blacks to one white in the work force. In spite of this ratio, almost 60% of all wages paid in South Africa go to the whites.

Wage offers to settle the disputes were made to workers at many factories under heavy security. Company officials were escorted by police in armored cars and riot trucks as they moved from one plant to another where workers had assembled. An undisclosed number of extra police had been flown in from Pretoria, the capital of South Africa, during the strike.

In the South African Parliament, the Minister of Labour for South Africa linked the wave of strikes to the National Union of South African Students who had recently organized protest strikes among black and white students.

According to the Star, he said that "the strikes had little to do with more money for the African. They were caused by agitators who wanted to cause the downfall of the government," and added that the government was carefully watching the situation, and it would not hesitate to act against those responsible for the agitation.

Yet even the Johannesburg Star was quick to point out, "There is no need for 'agitators' to tell a man he is hungry," as undoubtedly most of the strikers, and the "agitators" already know.

Northampton State Hospital Asks For Volunteers

The time of year has once again come when the Northampton State Hospital Volunteers calls upon all students at the University and the rest of the Five College Area to stand up and be counted. This year we are hoping to hit a record high membership. Though our active members list is continually on the upswing it can never really be enough, so let us see if the present students can surpass the previous years.

The Northampton State Hospital Volunteers is designed to help the resident patients come in contact with ppeople outside the world of the hospital. This program is also set up to benefit the volunteer. As a participant in this organization, one can learn a little about oneself and a lot about other people. The patients at the hospital are real people who want somebody to talk to. All that we as students must do is be willing to give of ourselves.

As a member, there is no commitment to anyone but yourself. If you really are turned off by it, which seldom is the case, then you never have to come again. But, as is most often seen, one becomes deeply involved with people and not only will you find yourself making a commitment to the people in the hospital to come, but there will also be an internal drive which will make you want to come every week.

Tonight, there will be a special orientation for all new members. This orientation will take place at the hospital and will be run by hospital staff. During the orientation you will learn a little about the hospital and also see the patient's view of what the volunteers really mean to them. A tour of the hospital will also be given to acquaint you with the facilities. A bus will be provided both going and coming. It will leave from in front of Hasbrouck Lab. at 6:30 p.m. and at 6:35 p.m. on Sunset Ave. in front of Patterson House in Southwest. The bus will return to campus at approximately 9:30 p.m.

If you are the type of student who want to learn about other people, why don't you get involved.

Local Commune Improves Standing

NORTHFIELD, Mass. (AP)-An order to get to work or get out has been met with success at the Brotherhood of the Spirit Commune in western Massachusetts, commune leaders say.

Michael Metelica, who calls himself the spiritual leader of the 200-member commune, says most members have found jobs. The original ultimatum had a Feb. 1 deadline.

Metelica said only two commune members have not yet found work but have several job applications pending and are being allowed to stay on.

Metelica and John Pollard, business manager for the 5-year-old commune, announced the ultimatum last month and said the move was necessary to enable the commune to pay off mortgages and outstanding debts. At the time, half of the 200 adults at the commune already had jobs. There are approximately 50 children.

Metelica said, "We're doing all right" and added that some of the jobs his members obtained are parttime.

Pollard said commune members have taken work in Springfield, New York City, Pennsylvania, New Hampshire and Vermont.

He said jobs include being waitresses, nursing attendants, truck drivers, secretaries, phone installers and carpenters.

Metelica added that about 12 commune members have taken jobs at Belchertown State School.

Pollard says that by the end of February, the commune expects to be totally off welfare.

Put a Roof Over the Campus Pond

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

(Ed Note: This is the first of a two part series examining what has been done in the last five years to get an on-campus ice facility for UMass. Antosiewicz also explores some options available for the future.)

The campus pond presents the only ice on campus. Snow, rain and the other weather factors have governed its recreational use. The UMass hockey team has had to content itself with the use of Orr Rink after Amherst College's needs were met. Players have to dress at Curry Hicks Cage and then take the mile trip to Orr. Practice time, especially for the J.V.'s is hard to arrange due the limited time available.

Dormitories have also felt the lack of ice. The numerous hockey enthusiasts have traveled as far as Greenfield to rent ice, just to further a dorm rivalry.

There is no question that there is a need. There are three ways that funding can be achieved. They are: 1) student taxes, 2) state legislative appropriation, or 3) Alumni contributions. Any one or a combination could provide the capital necessary.

In February of 1968, the Athletic Council began to consider the idea of a building to be funded in the same manner as the Campus Center. That is, with a tax to be levied on the students. From there, possible visions of an unlimited source of dollars, drove the proposal to include something for everyone with an estimated price tag of $16 million.

According to the Collegian on May 6, 1969, "The probable student tax for such a facility would be approximately $25 per student per semester for 30 years." This was the beginning of a concept called the Convocation and Activities Center, which was to provide radio and TV facilities, space for the Operetta Guild, Roister Doisters and other RSO groups; along with a variety of athletic functions.

The Facilities Committee of the Athletic Council on Feb. 7, 1968, discussed the need for an "indoor athletic facility." It was decided to ask representatives of the Treasurer's Office and the Master Planning office be invited to attend the next meeting. Ideas ranged from a 5,000 seat ice arena to an athletic complex with a 7,500 seat ice arena and an athletic-convocation arena holding $12,000. The price range was $2-8 million.

A week later, Robert Kittle of the Treasurer's Office presented two alternatives. If the student fee was increased $10 in September, 1970, an ice facility for $3-1/2 million could be built in two years. The other choice would include also a basketball arena for $8 million. The student fee would be an added $26 per student per semester.

The Athletic Department in the form of Dean Warren McGuirk had an active interest in a new facility. The student interest was also apparent, according to the Collegian on May 6, 1969, which quoted the Undergraduate Student Senate President, at the time, Bruce Balboni, as saying, "(The center is) a needed facility as long as it can be student controlled, since it will be supported by student taxes."

In March, 1969, University President Lederle appointed a University Convocation and Activities Center Development Committee, consisting of student representatives from each class, a dean of administration, dean of PE, Chairman of the Athletic Council, an alumnus, a representative of the graduate senate, the Planning Office, the Assistant Dean of Students, the Physical Plant, a Conference Coordinator, the Fine Arts Council and a Faculty Senate rep. The multitude of interests considered every conceivable aspect. The project was now definitely larg-scale.

The weekly meetings of the Committee attacked all angles and were thinking in terms of a structure similar to a facility just completed at Notre Dame. The complex would consist of two arenas, with the main arena seating 12,000-15,000 for basketball while an ice arena would hold 6,000. The cost was estimated at 16 million dollars.

Jack Littlefield of the Planning Office stated at the time, "The Committee should be thinking first class all the way. Later on, if we have to retreat, we can give on a priority basis."

Bob Kittle of the Treasurer's Office said that the student fee would be in the area of $50 a year.

Paul Silverman, a student senator, said that he hoped a committee would run the building with a three step priority list. Athletics were to be at the top, followed by student groups and lastly by revenue producing groups.

The proposal was readied for senate confirmation. The Graduate Senate heard the presentation, but there was no financial support forthcoming. The Undergraduate Senate never got the chance to hear it. The senators were immersed with semester ending business and the matter was allowed to fade over the summer.

Say A Few Words, Coach

By STEVE CROWE

When Hockey Coach Jack Canniff was asked to come on down to the Varsity M Club Luncheon and say a few words about his hockey club's season, he decided to do just that. He said a few words and then turned it over to six of his seniors, his assistant coach, and his manager and left himself with a couple minutes at the end.

Team manager, Richie Frecero, pointed out three resaons for the team's problems this year: injuries, sickness, and a grinding schedule. Every player on the hockey team has played with some kind of injury this year and sickness has also spread around the locker room. The schedule has been something else for the skaters this season. In the last fifteen days they have played about eight games, most of them away. This, of course, means spending half their time getting on and off of busses and the long rides can make a team very sluggish.

Lonnie Avery had some interesting comments concerning the Springfield Civic Center. He pointed out that it does make a difference where a team plays; each rink is different. One of the major differences between playing at the Civic Center and Orr Rink is the temperature. "On the ice down there, it was 70 degrees; we're used to playing in 30 degree temperature at Orr Rink. The most important difference, observed Avery, is the absence of UMass fans at Springfield. And the fans do play an important part in the game. For proof, just look at the New Hampshire and Bowdoin games. UMass blew leads in the third period in both games to lose them. The buzzing of the fans had an awful lot to do with UMass collapse.

Coach Canniff, when introducing Pat Keenan, pointed out that since 1947, there have only been 12 college hockey players to score 100 or more goals in their career; six of them needed four years of varsity play to do it. Only six college players since 1947 have scored 100 or more goals in three years. "And here is No. 7, Pat Keenan". But Pat shrugged off Canniff's fine build-up saying that goals meant nothing to him if the team wasn't winning.

Captain Don Riley, in his speech, asked for more support from the fans, saying (again) that the team really needs alot of help from the fans in order to win.

J.V. Coach Russ Kidd gave a run-down of his team's progress this season. He constantly has to tell his boys, "Only your mothers and your girlfriends care whether you win or lose."

The inevitable finally happened yesterday in the door prize drawings as a man swept the double door prize: Mr. Tom Quink won both the booze prize and the free tickets to the Northeastern basketball game next Tuesday night. "I usually win something here every year," he said. The funny thing is, Mr. Quink doesn't drink. What a waste.

Chauvanist!

SAN DIEGO (AP)—Veteran Bobby Riggs, challenging Billie Jean King to a tennis match, said Wednesday he's putting up $5,000 of his own money to prove even a 55-year-old man can defeat the world's best woman player.

"You have complained bitterly in recent months that women's tennis is not getting its deserved share of public attention and prize money," Riggs said in a telegram to Mrs. King.

"If they're all that good, why wouldn't they jump at a chance to play me; a tired old man?" asked Riggs at a news conference called to announce the challenge.

The 1939 Wimbledon champion gave Mrs. King until midnight Feb. 26 to accept.

In the wire, the former U.S. Davis Cupper said Mrs. King insists "that top women players provide a brand of tennis comparable to men. I challenge you to prove it on a tennis court."

Foreman Waves New Flag

AUSTIN, Tex. (AP)—They gave George Foreman a Texas flag Wednesday, but he could've had every brick in the state capitol without lifting a glove.

It was "George Foreman Day" and everyone from Gov. Dolph Briscoe on down crowded into the House chamber to glorify him in speech, drape him with a flag—and get his autograph.

Foreman, a 7-2 underdog, and a hard-knocks graduate of Houston's Fifth Ward poverty area, took boxing's world heavyweight title from Joe Frazier last month in Jamaica.

Mickey Leland, a state representative from Houston, decided to show off Foreman in his native state as an example of someone who rose up from poverty and "put Fifth Ward on the map."

If overflow crowds of politicians and onlookers at the joint session of the Legislature were an indication, no one will forget Fifth Ward again.

"This is the state, in deep honesty, I really love," Foreman shyly spoke into the microphone on the speaker's rostrum.

He had to stop three times as applause thundered down from the galleries and up from the floor.

"I don't want anyone to look at me and say I'm the greatest fighter that ever came about," he said. "I made it through sacrifice, hard work, and great amounts of freedom. I pray three times a day. I thank God."

Speeches from Briscoe, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, and a concurrent resolution from the 63rd Texas Legislature lauded Foreman as a man who, "if the oddsmakers had calculated his chances of breaking even with life, would have rated a longshot at best."

The speeches traced Foreman's dropping out from high school and subsequent training in the Job Corps—an organization he still helps.

Skaters Blast Boston St., 9-1

By ROY LYONS

UMass scored their most lopsided victory of the season last night, crushing Boston State 9-1 in a game that appeared on paper, to be fairly even match-up. (UMass only beat the Warriors by two goals in the season opener, and State upset Division One Providence College later in the season, 6-3. UMass lost to P.C. in overtime).

Freshman Billy Harris notched his first hat trick of the season, and centers Jim Coleman and Don Riley chipped in with two apiece in a game that wasn't particularly inspiring for the meager turn-out at Orr Rink.

The biggest question of the night was whether or not Chick Rheault would chalk up his first shut-out of the season in the UMass nets, but that eluded him three minutes into the final period when Bob Tilley scooped home a rebound after Rheault had stopped Paul Fisher's drive.

The game might have been a lot closer but for Rheault's solid goaltending. He stopped 31 shots on the night and was especially brilliant during a brief span in the opening stanza. He robbed Bill Sullivan at the seven minute mark with a great glove save, and stymied him again moments later while he was sprawled in front. He followed this up with another glove save behind a screen to make it three in a row.

Harris got things going for the Minutemen with two quick markers midway through the opening frame. He converted a centering pass from Lonnie Avery at 9:01, flicking it alertly past Doug Brooks before the goalie could even set up.

Less than a minute later, Harris broke in alone on the right wing and stuffed it behind Brooks after he'd faked him to the ice with a clever move.

Riley bagged his first goal at 16:21 of the period when he stole the puck at the blue line and walked in alone on Brooks and beat him with a backhander. The unassisted tally made it three-zip and wrapped up the scoring for the period.

He has kept his hot hand at the outset of the second period scoring a shorthanded goal at 1:20. Coleman was sent off at 19:57 of the first period for elbowing. (The refs were calling it close all night).

Jim Lynch, rebounding from a back injury, upped it to 5-0 two minutes later when a power play goal. Rick Metell was off for tripping when Lynch deflected Bob Shilalie's blast from the left point.

UMass held the edge throughout most of the period, and it looked like Riley had the hat with five minutes left. He found himself all alone in front after a slick pass from Coleman, but the ref said his shot from just outside the crease never got behind Tim Wyse, who manned the nets for the final period and a half. (Wyse and Brooks combined to stop 29 UMass shots).

Riley came close again at the start of the third period. He whistled a backhander just wide and was the victim of a spectacular Paul Fisher poke check as he broke in again moments later.

Tilley broke the shut-out at 3:30, but Jim Coleman tipped home his first of two 20 seconds later. Lynch and freshman Scott Stuart, set the play up.

Defenseman Mike Ellis made it 7-1 at 7:41 with a boomer from the right point. Stuart sent him away through the neutral zone, and then hustled in front to set up a screen. The drive, a power play goal, beat Wyse on the short side. Ellis played a strong game all night, collecting three assists to go with his goal.

Harris got his final tally from a scramble in front midway through the period. Pat Keenan and Ellis got assists on the play. (Amazingly, Keenan had only two assists to show for the night).

Coleman wrapped it up with less than three minutes left with his second goal of the night and his 14th of the season. (He ranks behind only Keenan in that category).

Things got a bit chippy in the last period with two minor scuffles breaking out. Keenan and John Heavey got the gate for a brief set-to after the Harris goal, and Kevin Connors and John Caccamo duelled at the buzzer, but that was also quickly stopped.

THE THRILL OF VICTORY. An ecstatic Dan Spier spreads his wings in the victory sign after his 8.95 performance on the high bar capped a 156.25 to 155.8 come-from-behind UMass win over Springfield at the Cage last night. Down by two full points after the first two events, the Minutemen came steadily back and took a very slim .2 point lead going into the final high bar event. This set the stage for Spier's heroics. Coach Tom Dunn squeezes the victory in his hands in the background. Details of the meet in tomorrow's Collegian. (Photo by Steve Quigley)

Dave Amato-Senior Wrestler In Quest Of A Title

By JOHN BOCK

One of the more popular questions asked after the UMass wrestling team has a home meet is "Does Dave Amato weigh 118 pounds all the time?" No, not all the time, just from November to March for the last three years. Amato is a senior, one of two on the team, and one of the Co-Captains.

Ever since Dave came to the then Redmen three years ago he has never failed to make weight. Off season he weighs about 135 so it is no mean feat to cut down to 118. It takes a lot of hard work and if ever anyone had those two words for a middle name it is Dave Amato.

Hard work is what got Dave two Rhode Island State Championships and then two New England High School Championships. He started to get interested in wrestling back in junior high school days in his native Warwick, Rhode Island. He wrestled in an intramural city league and when he got to ninth grade it was wrestling all the way. (Dave did manage to find time to play a little soccer, too.)

From Warwick he traveled to Keystone Junior College for a year where he wrestled under Larry Fornicola, a former Penn State NCAA Champ. Then it was UMass for Dave and the plucky kid never quit trying to beat out the best in the room. And he did, even though it meant elimination matches every week.

But back to the hard work angle. Coach Homer Barr has no doubt that Amato is the hardest worker we have ever had at UMass. Says Barr, "Dave wants to be a champion and he has that nervous ambition that drives him."

After high school championships did not come easy to Amato. Twice he placed second in the New Englands at 118, losing both times to a Springfield wrestler. Since then, and especially this year, Dave has wanted nothing else but to win. And things have been going pretty well for him. He finally beat a Springfield College wrestler, he won an open tournament in Boston, and most recently became the first Yankee Conference Champion at 118. This weekend Dave carries all of this and an excellent 14-2-1 record into the NEUWA where he is the top seed.

Amato has really enjoyed his years at UMass and says "When you travel around, or have been to another school for a year, you really appreciate this place." One of the more influential people in Dave's wrestling career was Shelly Goldberg, now head coach at BC.

"When Shelly was around he made me realize that I could be as good as anybody. Like I ain't afraid to wrestle anybody. I might get beat up, but when I come off the mat I know that I can wrestle the same kid again and beat him."

This year Dave has achieved recognitition as one of the better 118 pounders in the East. He has wrestled the likes of Bruce Biondi (Brockports defending Small College National Champ), Tom Schuler (Navy's former NCAA Runnerup), and Jack Spates (Slippery Rocks stellar 118 pounder). The worst loss he has was 4-0 to Schuler and he has given all the others a victory in points only.

The fact that he has done so well against such top opposition gives Dave the confidence that he can do well in the nationals. "I know I'm in there with these guys and that is why going to the Nationals means to much to me."

For future plans Dave would like to go to grad school at Penn State or the University of Georgia if he doesn't land a job teaching physical education.

"I'd really love to be a coach somewhere. Like I go back to my high school and help kids out a lot because I still know where it's at. I can still relate to kids and I can still wrestle with them."

If Dave doesn't do anything will that be it for him in wrestling? Not quite. He received a bid to come and wrestle for Athletes in Action, an extension of the Campus Crusade for Christ. He would be the first 118 pounder the AIA has ever had. But he has to think about it.

"Dave Amato is the finest competitor we have ever had, both on and off the mat. It's a shame to see guys like him leave the ranks, but whoever gets him will get a whale of a coach."

We know that Dave is the top, New England knows it, and the East suspects it. By hard work he is going to go out and prove it to the nation.

ROTC Passes First Credit Hurdle

Academic Matters Chairman Ernest Buck, of the Faculty Senate, pauses in last night's debate of a proposal, contained in his committee's special report, to have the Trustees re-establish credit for ROTC courses. (MDC Photo by Kevin Mack)

By DON BISHOP

The ROTC program successfully passed its first major hurdle in its bid to restore academic credit yesterday, as the Faculty Senate voted 45 to 19 to urge the Board of Trustees to re-establish credit for courses taught by the Division of Military and Air Science.

The Faculty Senate resolution now goes to Chancellor Bromery, then UMass President Wood and finally to the Trustees. It is with the Trustees that the ultimate decision will lie over whether or not to restore academic credit to the program.

Bromery indicated at the close of yesterday's meeting that it would be between Wood's office and the Board as to when the motion would come before the Trustees. He stated that it may already be too late for the motion to be placed on their March agenda, in which case it would definitely come up at the April meeting.

Colonel Paul Fisher, Head of the Division of Military and Air Science, expressed pleasure and gratitude as a result of yesterday's action. He stated he was pleased most of all with the "thorough review" of the committee's report given by the Senate. Fisher added that he and others working in the division would "endeavor to give the program the highest quality."

The proposal to re-establish the ROTC credit came as part of a special report by the Faculty Senate's Academic Matters Committee. The report was passed unanimously by the committee back in December, and was presented to the full Senate by Academic Matters Chairman Ernest Buck.

The report stated the feeling of the committee and its subcommittee on Military Affairs that "the ROTC program has been subjected to a double standard." They doubted whether any department had been subjected to such a rigorous scrutiny of its course offerings.

They also criticised the supposed lack of consultation with either committee, before the vote to take away academic credit was made.

At yesterday's meeting very little discussion took place over the report itself, rather the significant debate came over the report's motion at its end, to have the Trustees rescind their action of last April.

The debate on the ROTC question began with remarks from Student Senator Nick Apostola on behalf of SGA President Larry Ladd.

Apostola described action in the Student Senate Wednesday night, where a motion from Ladd, in support of the present Trustee policy of no credit for courses taught by military personnel, was defeated by the Senate.

Prof. George Sulzner was the first of ten Faculty Senators to speak on the ROTC motion. In his debate, Sulzner claimed that the committee report did not address itself to any of the debate against ROTC credit stressed at the Senate meeting of last April.

These issues debated last year included the fact that the appointment procedure for ROTC instructors is initiated with the armed forces and not with the University, and that the salaries of the ROTC instructors are paid by the military.

Sulzner ended by stating that he felt these points brought last year were still valid, while also dismissing the argument that students have a right to military education, if they so desire.

Prof. Joseph Larson rose next, to speak in favor of the motion to restore the ROTC credit. His debate included mention of the fact that the University does presently possess veto power over nominees for ROTC instructor positions.

Prof. David Biddle likewise spoke in favor of the motion. While claiming to be a "lifelong pacifist" and "opposed to ROTC on the grounds of conscience," he maintains that the University should provide this type of program for those who desire it.

The question of whether the Trustees would view a reversal of Faculty Senate opinion on ROTC in only 10 months, as being "frivolous", was debated by two senators. The concensus of the Senate, apparently was that the action of last April was wrong and should therefore be corrected.

Former Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, Seymour Shapiro, and Faculty Senate Secretary Robert Wellman were the final two speakers in opposition to the motion. Shapiro held that the University shoud not give graduation credit to courses which lead to a commission in the U.S. armed forces.

Wellman stated that the issue at hand was not over the qualifications of the Military and Air Science instructors, or over the academic ontent of the ROTC courses, but rather the question was whether the programs association with the military make it subject to the normal review mechanisms of the University.

After one final speaker in favor of restoration of academic credit, the motion was called to a vote. An initial voice vote seemed to indicate that the Senate was more evenly divided than the eventual hand count of 45 in favor and 19 against showed.

At the meeting of last April, when the Senate voted to kill the ROTC credit, a total of 47 senators voted as opposed to the 64 voting yesterday.

At that time they suspended their rules to consider a motion originally made in November of 1969, which was not accepted by the Trustees at that time but which was adopted last April.

A motion to adjourn was passed immediately after the ROTC vote, before all items on the Senate agenda had been considered. It was decided to take up these items in a special session next Thursday.

C.C. Food Prices To Jump Sunday

By CINDY GONET

Food price increases in the Hatch, Coffee Shop, and the Blue Wall cafeteria will be in effect starting Sunday, February 25.

Mike Egan, Director of Food Services told MDC last night that due to a 16% overall increase in meat prices, the prices of sandwiches will be raised from 5 - 10 cents.

The approval of the price increase was made by the Board of Governors last night in a closed executive committee meeting. Said Richard Nelson, Chairman of the Board, "It was only an informal approval. The way things look right now, Nixon may impose another price freeze, and we can't afford to lose money."

Nelson explained that the situation will be re-evaluated, and the increase may not be permanent.

Last week, Agriculture Secretary Earl L. Butz said the cost of eating jumped 2 to 3 per cent in January for the sharpest monthly gain in 29 to 25 years.

The high cost of food has even struck McDonald's, with a 15 per cent increase in their hamburgers.

Egan said, "The price climb in meat has been astronomical. In the past 2-1/2 months I've never seen anything like it."

Egan predicted that there will be a 15 - 20 per cent increase before the end of May.

When asked about the possible decrease in staff of the employees of the Food Services, Egan retorted saying, "Staffing is a problem. We have to be open all day, when we just don't get continual business. Have you ever seen anyone in the Hatch on a Sunday morning?

"How do you lay off someone who's been working at the Hatch for 15 years? Unions just won't tolerate the members working several split shifts to compensate for the busy times," he continued.

Egan expressed some hope in the food cost spiral situation if the Food Services area changes its line to higher profit items. "For example," he said, "when you're selling a roast beef sandwich, it's all meat; not some extended food item with scatterings of meat."

USSR Expected To Rate Most Favored Nation Status

By EDMOND LE BRETON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—The package of trade legislation President Nixon will send to Congress is expected to contain a provision granting the Soviet Union most favored nation status in tariff matters.

Extension of this status is part of the agreement initialed by the United States and the U.S.S.R. on trade and lend-lease matters.

A country with most favored nation status is automatically entitled to all the trade benefits the United States extends to any other country. The practical effect is that imports from these countries into the United States enjoy the lower tariff rates negotiated over the years under the reciprocal trade program.

The MFN concept goes back to a policy established in 1922 to treat all countries alike in trade matters. Later it was written into the Reciprocal Trade Act.

The act provided, however, that MFN was not to go to countries under Communist domination. Exceptions were made to grant MFN to Yugoslavia and later to Poland. The discretionary authority the President had at one time to extend MFN to selected Communist countries in the national interest has been revoked, so a change in that status of the U.S.S.R. would require congressional action. Various bills have been untroduced to extend MFN to Romania, but no action has been taken.

There is no intermediate status as between countries which enjoy MFN and those which do not. The tariff scheduled carry two tables of figures, one applying to MFN countries and the other, higher one to those without this status.

Hanoi Aid "Investment"

By GAYLORD SHAW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Joining in President Nixon's push for eventual postwar aid for Hanoi, Henry Kissinger said Thursday that the North Vietnamese reconstruction program was not a handout or a ransom but rather a long-term investment in tranquility for Indochina.

In words aimed at congressional opponents of the economic assistance program promised in the Vietnam peace agreement, the presidential assistant told a White House briefing that his four-day visit to Hanoi "was part of an attempt to move from hostility toward normalization" and was not intended to work out an economic aid program.

"We are asking for support for the idea of such a program, not on economic grounds and not even on humanitarian grounds primarily, but on the ground of attempting to build peace in Indochina and therefore to contribute to peace in the world," Kissinger said.

As he reported on his trip to Hanoi, Peking and other Asian capitals, Kissinger said his talks with North Vietnamese leaders did not concern precise figures for the reconstruction aid.

He also said the North Vietnamese "are aware of our constitutional processes" and that he made full efforts to explain to them that "the fate of whatever recommendations we made depends on a decision by Congress" which must appropriate the funds.

Sen. Edward W. Brooke, R-Mass., called meanwhile for "a balanced perspective" on the question of aid to Hanoi "lest the taking of extreme positions jeopardize the fragile nature of the cease-fire and make more difficult the process of prisoner exchange and the accounting for the missing in action."

After his Hanoi talks, the two countries jointly announced formation of an economic commission to study postwar assistance. They also agreed, Kissinger disclosed, that other issues would be handled via beefed up "existing means of contact."

As for normalization of relations with North Vietnam, Kissinger observed that "the process of normalization vis-a-vis Hanoi is at about the same stage it was vis-a-vis Peking a year ago."

Potential Rathskellar Defined

By ANNE COLLINGTON

A Rathskellar, otherwise known as a beer and wine establishment, was the topic of discussion in Hampden Dining Commons last night.

Describing the potential Rathskellar, which is to be located in lower Hampden Dining Commons, as a "place for social interaction and not a place to get drunk," the panel, moderated by student Steve Dropkin, and about 50 students attempted to define the conditions under which such an establishment could be made possible. Southwest Assembly President Larry St. Cyr said that a club license, which would allow beer and wine but no "hard liquor", is the only feasible type because of cost (about $400) and also, because of minimal red tape. A liquor license, which would run around $100,000, was immediately voted down.

The Rathskellar, probably to be opened in September, will accommodate 225 people, in view of limited space. Regarding the establishment's relationship to the Food Services, assistant Food Services director, Art Warren immediately pointed out that it "will not support the meal ticket system", but will be a profit-making organization.

Food Services Marketing Division representative Marie Cappadena said that there will be no cover charge. Admission will be by University ID (faculty, students and their guests).

Issues such as entertainment, types of food to be served, if any, televisions, and a possible waitressing service between "Bites and Pieces" in upper Hampden were discussed; however, no conclusions were reached. A referendum is to be composed and distributed to the residents of Southwest to determine the outcome on the issues. As Warren said, "We're going to do whatever the customer wants . . . as long as its viable."

Parents Rich, But State Ward

PROVIDENCE (AP)-A 15-year-old girl with a rich father, a mother from a wealthy family and a cattle rancher uncle worth $7 million is costing Rhode Island $59 a day as a ward of the state.

A picture of the turbulent, nomadic existence of the unidentified teenager has emerged from records of the Rhode Island Court, which is trying to decide where to send her next.

Her mother, born of wealthy parents, has been divorced twice, the records show. She reportedly has not cared for the daughter since her second divorce in 1969.

Her natural father, a Rhode Island multimillionaire, was out of touch with the girl for 10 years until she came to live with him briefly last spring when he refused to provide recommended psychiatric treatment for her, according to the records.

And her legal father who married her natural mother in 1960 is reported to be somewhere in Texas.

UMass Professor Dies Of Wounds

UMass Geology Professor Harold T.U. Smith of Arnold Rd., Pelham, died last night in the Holyoke Hospital 22 days after he was allegedly shot by his son.

His son, Myron Smith, 30, had been charged earlier in the month with assault with attempt to murder and assault and battery with a dangerous weapon.

A hospital spokesman last night could not confirm the cause of death, and said she had no information bout funeral arrangements.

On February 1st, the younger Smith allegedly shot his father in the face with a .22 caliber rifle in the living room of the elder Smith's home., District Attorney John Callahan said shortly after the incident.

Dr. Smith came to UMass in 1946 as a full professor and head of the Geology Department, a post he held for thirteen years.

He relinquished the post in 1959 to Dr. Randolph W. Bromery, now UMass-Amherst chancellor, and was involved in research work at the time of the shooting.

Smith had been working on a contract from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. He had also taught at the University of Kansas, and had worked for the U.S. Geological Survey and several industrial firms.

Cape Verdeans Ask Support

This Sunday, the Cape Verdean-African P.A.I.G.C. (Partido Africano da Independencia da Guine e Cabo Verde) Support Committee is holding a Cape Verdean-African convention in Plymouth at 11 a.m.

The support committee, made up of Cape Verdean Africans in the United States, is asking for support of the P.A.I.G.C. and its effort to achieve what the support committee calls immediate independence of the Cape Verde and Guinea, the emancipation of the African people from colonial exploitation, and the effecting of rapid economic and cultural progress.

According to the committee, the P.A.I.G.C. was formed a year after Portuguese police massacred Africans in Sao Tome for protesting labor conditions.

The committee also says the leader of the P.A.I.G.C., Amilcar Cabral, was assassinated in Conakry, West Africa, several weeks ago as he was about to convene national assembly which would have declared independence and sought recognition from the United Nations.

The support committee has asked all Third World students to actively participate in the committee.

Abortion Coalition To Request Funding

By MARK CITRON

A discussion concerning the possibility of abortions being performed on campus highlighted a meeting of the campus chapter Woman's National Abortion Action Coalition (WONAAC). The meeting was called in response to alleged growing anti-abortion feelings and to plan for upcoming pro-abortion actions.

WONAAC is presently without money and intends to go before the Student Senate Budget Committee this Wednesday for next year's funding. An interim $200 will be requested from the Student Matters Committee of the Student Senate for the Spring Semester. The money would enable WONAAC to sponsor speakers, set up referral and counseling services, and supply funds for educational events.

There is no abortion referral or counseling on campus at this time. Problems are presently referred to either the Valley's Women Center in Northampton or Clergy Counseling Service in Amherst. A table to enlist support is planned today on the Campus Center Concourse next to the Right to Life, anti-abortion group. Information concerning WONAAC and an Abortion-Rights petition is hoped to pose an alternative to the Anti-Abortion group.

Cited by WONAAC as a major problem in obtaining an abortion is the expense. Local health services refer problem pregnancies to the New York City area, where prices range upward from $200. Mary Smith who chaired the meeting, said that, although there are no abortion laws existing in Massachusetts the public health department has set up guidelines which hospitals are following. These guidelines follow closely the old anti-abortion laws.

Susan Bergeron said that she felt that the Catholic Church and the male-dominated political system are subjugating women to a status of merely having babies. Ms. Bergeron added that she was against "turning women into baby mills."

A rally is planned next Wednesday before the Student Senate meeting. It is hoped that speakers from the local women's centers will attend and lend their support. WONAAC hopes to work closely with the local women organizations but not cut into their funds. To do this, WONAAC says they must first win the right for funding at the Student Senate meeting.

Pentagon Papers:

"The Government Has Rested It's Case"

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP)-The government conditionally rested its case against Daniel Ellsberg and Anthony Russo Thursday but said it would present last-minute testimony next Tuesday about fingerprints flown here from Saigon.

U.S. District Court Judge Matt Byrne allowed the unusual move to reserve last testimony. He told the jurors: "Other than the reservation just stated, the government has rested its case."

The government called only 10 witnesses in four weeks of testimony trying to prove espionage, conspiracy and theft charges against Ellsberg and Russo in connection with the leak of the government's top secret war study.

Their witnesses included high-ranking generals who claimed the Pentagon study could have aided an enemy if released publicly.

However, throughout the entire case the prosecutor never sought to show that either defedant intended any harm to the United States when they copied the Pentagon study.

The judge indicated in pretrial remarks that the question of "intent" is an important point in proving espionage.

The government has disagreed with this, saying it need not show such intentions. Its case was considered a unique interpretation of espionage laws which specifically state the "intent" requirement.

In its efforts to prove the theft and conspiracy counts of the 15-count indictment, the government called security workers from Rand Corp., the "think tank" where Ellsberg and Russo worked as researchers on government projects.

They sought to show that Ellsberg stole the papers from Rand and conspired with Russo to copy them.

All of the government contentions were aggressively attacked by defense attorneys during cross-examination of the witnesses.

The defense case is scheduled to begin Tuesday after the disputed government fingerprint testimony ends.

Meserve Favors Shield Law

NEWTON, Mass. (AP)—The president of the American Bar Association said Thursday night he favors a limited shield law to protect newsmen from having to divulge information given them by confidential sources.

Robert W. Meserve said the best defense of the news media against government tampering is to have the public on its side.

Meserve told a meeting of the New England chapter of Sigma Delta Chi, the national journalism fraternity, that he favored a shield law that defined who would be protected and what kind of information would be considered privileged.

"If the disclosure of such confidential information is to be compelled at all," he said, "such compulsion should only be available where the matter being investigated is shown to be a serious crime, where it appears that other sources of information are not available and under conditions offering a maximum of protection to be sure that the questioning does not go beyond the absolutely necessary into the merely convenient."

The alternative, Meserve said, is an absolute shield law. "I'm somewhat inclined to the qualified law in an era where even the lawyer's privilege has been whittled down . . ."

He said, "The best protection for the press is an informed and aroused public opinion."

Meserve said he thought the news media could bring public respect for its job to the level given a priest or minister.

$60 Rent Increase Under Consideration

By STEPHEN SECHE

A proposed $60-66 dormitory rent increase, which, according to Chuck Hampton, Special Assistant to the Vice Chancellor for Administrative Affairs, is presently being considered by the Student Senate Rents and Fees Committee, the UMass administration, and Residential Area Directors, was attributed this week to the rising costs of dormitory maintenance, a dormitory population this year that was well below the estimated occupancy level of 96% and special student programs and facilities within each of the residential areas.

The increase, which, if implemented, would go into effect in September, 1973, stands to effect all on-campus residents.

Because the state "feels it is obliged to provide only educational facilities, and not residential facilities," Hampton said, the students are focused to bear the cost of dormitory rent hikes, which, in the past three years, have amounted to $50 (1970), $50 (1971), and $30 (1972).

Hampton added that he felt that if there was a rent increase, it would, as last year, be less than the initial figure discussed. Last year, he said, the initial increase proposed was $100, while the actual increase that resulted was $30.

According to Hampton, costs of utilities and maintenance have risen significantly in the past year. Salaries have also been increased, he said, "in line with a 3.3% cost of living raise granted this year to state employees."

Michael Gregory, Chairman of the Student Senate Rents and Fees Committee, attributed additional financial difficulties to a dorm population that was significantly lower than anticipated.

"Dorms which the University expected to be filled to 96% of occupancy in September," Gregory said, "were less than 93% filled." As a result, he added, the university is projecting occupancy of only 93% for next September, "which, by itself, results in a $14 rent increase per person."

Both Gregory and Hampton indicated that the number of student programs and facilities initiated within the residence areas in the past year affected the dormitory rents. "If students desire more services within their residence areas," Hampton said, "they should be aware that such services increase their cost of living."

Similarly, Gregory said that programs being requested for next year, such as paint supervisors in Sylvan and Orchard Hill, have to be considered in any rent increases, since the expense of any programs within the residential areas are borne by all on-campus residents.

For this reason, Hampton said that it is the "concern" of the administration that "services within the residence areas should benefit as many students as possible."

In an attempt to insure this within the Central Residence Area, Marjorie Lenn, Central Area Director, said that "environmental standards committee" has been instituted. Its purpose, Ms. Lenn said, is to serve as a representative body which decides whether or not to allocate money for special programs within the area.

According to Ms. Lenn, all five residential areas draw largely from the same sources for such program money, and the result is that "application for such funds is a bit competitive."

Ms. Lenn said that the student affairs budget, from which funds for area security, counsellors, and cultural enrichment are drawn is divided among the residential areas according to population needs. "In theory then," she continued, "Central (2,500 residents) only receives half the money Southwest (5,000 residents) does."

Academic funds are also largely earmarked for Southwest and Orchard Hill, she said, because of their functions as residential colleges. The result is that several of the residential areas, either because of their size, or their nature, are left with fewer funds to draw from to institute special programs for their residents.

Rents And Fees Committee Recommends $20 Rent Hike

By SHARON HUGHES

The Rents and Fees Committee of the Student Senate voted last night to recommend a $20.00 increase in dorm rent for next semester. Attached to this proposal are 29 recommendations designed to raise additional revenues and cut present costs. The projected budget for the dormitory system will be sent back to each residential area for them to cut.

But even a 25% rent increase with the projected occupancy rate of 93% would leave the dormitory system with a deficit of over $400,000 reported chairperson Mike Gregory. "Still," he said, "we can only substantiate a $20.00 increase at this time. If some of our proposed changes are accommodated, we might go higher."

The $20.00 increase reflects a $15.00 change in base (compensation for unfilled dormitories) and $5.00 for wage increases authorized by the state legislature. A cost of living increase is not included. Additionally, the projected increase will lead to a cut in janitorial services.

The committee hopes to remove much financial burden from the students by their proposals. For instance, they suggest that "all area budgets not exceed a 10% budget increase," "dorms rent unused rooms for offices and classrooms", "Wats lines be installed" and "the dorm Head of Residence pay rent". The State, they feel, could "pay for security", "take financial responsibility for raises they authorize" and pay for University vehicles to be registered."

They also proposed that a premium on singles could supply additional dorm revenue.

The Rents and Fees Committee rejected an option to make budget cuts themselves because they said they have little knowledge of which programs could work with less money. The committee expressed the idea that students have been forced to assume a substantial portion of inflationary rent increases as well as cutbacks by the State Legislature.

Students Remain Hospitalized

Stephen E. Smulka, a UMass student injured in a two-car collision on Route 9 in Amherst Wednesday is listed as being in fair condition at Cooley-Dickinson Hospital in Northampton.

Smulka, 22, of Detroit, Michigan and Brittany Manor Apartments, had been on the danger list immediately following the accident. Two other UMass students injured in the accident, Zamir Nestlebaum, 19, of Worcester and Dickinson House, and David G. Atamantyk, 19, of Cranford, New Jersey and Dickinson House, are both listed in satisfactory condition at Cooley-Dickinson.

Plane Crash Charges Traded

By MARCUS ELIASON
Associated Press Writer

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Israel's air force chief and the fighter pilots who shot down a Libyan airliner said Thursday that the pilots were only trying to force the plane to land but it resisted and seemed to be trying to escape.

Defense Minister Moshe Dayan told newsmen the Israeli decisions in the incident were taken through normal military channels below the government level and had "no political significance whatsoever."

The Soviet Union, which backs the Arab countries in the Middle East conflict, declared through official news media that Israel was attempting to wreck a settlement.

Apparently 105 persons died in the crash Wednesday of the Libyan Airlines Boeing 727 jet in the Israeli-occupied Sinai Desert. Libyan officials said the three-jet plane had 112 aboard. Israel reported nine survivors were pulled from the wreckage but two of these, both women, later died.

"We tried desperately to force it down, not to shoot it down" the air force chief Maj. Gen. Mordechai Hod, told reporters. He added: "The more the pilot objected and the more he tried to get away, the more suspect he became."

Israeli pilots said that before firing they confronted the French captain of the airliner face to face at less than 15 feet and tried in vain with hand signals and wing-wagging to get him to land.

But in Cairo, the plane's intended destination, officials said a recording of the pilot's last conversation with Egyptian controllers showed that he had lost course, was unaware he was over hostile territory and might have thought the fighters were friendly Egyptian MIGs.

Cairo officials said the pilot's last words were: "We are now shot. We are shot by a fighter. We are shot by a fighter."

Hod said the plane was flying over "one of the most restricted and delicate areas of the Egyptian-Israeli frontline...and area prohibited to fliers because of its sensitive installations."

Hod declined to speculate whether the jetliner was carrying spies. But he suggested at a news conference that the pilot had acted irresponsibly for a captain of an airliner carrying more than 100 persons.

U.S., China Move For Diplomatic Relations

By KENNETH J. FREED
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States and China Thursday took a major step toward full diplomatic relations with establishment of liaison offices in each nation's capital.

The development was announced in a communique released simultaneously in Washington and Peking to reflect "the progress that has been made" since President Nixon visited the mainland a year ago.

Presidential adviser Henry A. Kissinger told newsmen the agreement worked out in his recent trip to Peking is an important step toward normalization of relations with the Communist regime.

And he said the President's China trip started the two nations toward a better understanding.

"After the end of the war in Vietnam, and in these discussions in Peking, we were able to begin to travel some of these roads, and to move from the attempt to eliminate the obstructions and the mistrust to some more concrete and positive achievements," he said.

Kissinger said his discussions with Chairman Mao Tse-tung and Premier Chou En-lai in Peking this week covered four major areas:

—"The desirability of normalization of relations.

—"The desirability of reducing the danger of military conflict.

—"The affirmation by both sides that neither would seek hegemony in the Pacific area.

—"And each of them opposed the attempt of anyone else to achieve it, and that the relations between China and the United States would never be directed against any third country."

Because of the progress toward better relations, Kissinger said, it was decided "that the existing channel in Paris, the designated contact point for previous relations was inadequate and that, therefore, each side would establish a liaison office in the capital of the other."

This office falls short of embassy or mission status, but its personnel will have diplomatic immunity and privileges, including the right to send coded private messages to its government.

Kissinger said the offices "would handle trade as well as all other matters, except the strictly formal diplomatic aspects of the relationship."

Withdrawal Enters 2nd Phase

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP) — The chiefs of the delegations to the four-party Joint Military Commission are preparing to discuss the second phase of American prisoner of war repatriation.

In advance of the Friday session, the United States told the fourth International Commission of Control and Supervision that it has withdrawn more than 42 per cent of its military forces from South Vietnam since the cease-fire went into effect Jan. 28.

Under the terms of the Vietnam peace agreement signed in Paris on Jan. 27, the rate of the release of American POWs held by the Communists in North and South Vietnam and Laos depends on the rate of the withdrawal of American forces and troops of other nations allied with South Vietnam.

He added, however, that a controversy over the civilian detainees is not delaying the release of the next group of American POWs, which, according to U.S. timetables, must be carried out no later than next Tuesday.

The Communist side now holds 422 U.S. military and civilian personnel in North and South Vietnam and Laos. The deadline for the withdrawal of all American troops from Vietnam, as well as the repatriation of U.S. prisoners, is March 28.

A U.S. spokesman said that by next Tuesday, with American troop withdrawals averaging about 400 per day, U.S. strength would be cut by 50 per cent, the same ratio of POW releases.

The spokesman said that as of Jan 28, the start of the cease-fire, there were 23,516 U.S. troops in Vietnam. Since that time, 9,881 have been redeployed, and American strength as of Thursday stood at 13,635.

Laos Peace Made, Broken

By PETER O'LOUGHLIN
Associated Press Writer

VIENTIANE, Laos (AP)-War-torn Laos yesterday officially entered a declared cease-fire, but reliable sources reported what appeared to be general offensive spearheaded by about 65,000 North Vietnamese troops.

The North Vietnamese shelled towns and government positions in northern and southern Laos, the sources said, and moved into areas never before held by their allies, the Pathet Lao guerrilla forces.

Two government towns fell to the enemy and another, Khonh Sedone in the south, was threatened. Government troops were retreating in several areas.

Military and other sources reported massive violations by the Communist side of the noon cease-fire deadline fixed by the armistice agreement signed on Wednesday.

The reports said government forces retreated in the face of heavy North Vietnamese shell-fire and infantry attacks and had to evacuate Paksong and Muong Phalane, two towns east of the Mekong River in southern Laos. Paksong was abandoned 15 minutes after the deadline, the sources said.

In northern Laos, North Vietnamese units were reported to have continued heavy attacks against Gen. Vang Pao's army of Meo tribesmen on the southern edge of the Plain of Jars. The tribesmen were organized into a government fighting force with help from the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency.

The reported cease-fire offensive came after U.S. planes had already halted their bombing of support of government forces, freeing the North Vietnamese and Pathet Lao from the threat of retaliation from the air.

The cease-fire was negotiated with the Communists already controlling three-quarters of the territory of Laos and pushing westward toward the Mekong.

The military situation might not become fully clear for days since communications are primitive or nonexistent in much of the mountainous and jungled country.

No immediate steps were taken to set up either the machinery for enforcing the cease-fire or the framework of the new coalition government provided in the armistice agreement.

By terms of Wednesday's accord, the Vietntiane regime and the Pathet Lao will form a new coalition government made up of equal numbers from each faction plus two neutralists. Prince Souvanna Phouma, a declared neutralist, is expected to remain as premier.

Tax Reform Planned

By BILL NEIKIRK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ending doubts about his plans, President Nixon told Congress Thursday that he will submit a tax-reform bill this year.

In his State of the Union message on the economy, Nixon dealt with the subject in only one sentence: "I shall recommend a tax program that builds further reforms on those we achieved in 1969 and 1971."

His administration has been studying tax-reform legislation intensively in recent months but, up to now, it has never been certain the administration would offer its own recommendations.

In both 1969 and 1971, Congress approved reform legislation that cut taxes substantially. Now, the focus in Congress is on closing so-called loopholes in the tax code.

Nixon also said he would send bills to provide property tax relief for the elderly, provide an income tax credit for tuition paid to private elementary and secondary schools, and to give him more power to change tariffs.

He said bills would be submitted to improve the nation's private pension system, the unemployment compensation law, minimum wage laws and "the manner in which we deal with our transportation system."

In each instance Nixon held back the details.

But he was expansive on a key recommendation-holding back growth of the federal budget. He urged adoption of an annual spending ceiling by Congress–$269 billion in fiscal 1974 and $288 billion in fiscal 1975.

"The stakes are high," he said. "If we do not restrain spending and if my recommended cuts are reversed, it would take a 15 per cent increase in income taxes to pay for the additional expenditures."

It was the first time the President put a figure on the magnitude of the tax increase he thinks would be needed if the federal budget got out of control.

He came straight to the question raised by members of Congress on the spending-ceiling proposal: That it violates the principle of separation of powers between the executive and legislative branches.

"We should never, of course, lose our sharp concern for maintaining constitutional balances," Nixon wrote. "But we should never overlook the fact that we have joint responsibilities as well as separate powers."

He added, "There are many areas in which the President and the Congress should and must work together in behalf of all the people–and the level of spending, since it directly affects the pocketbooks of every family in the land, is one of the most critical."

Nixon said he has carried out his pledge not to recommend programs that would require a tax increase and trigger inflationary pressures.

"Now it is up to the Congress to match these efforts with a spending ceiling of its own," he said.

No other recommendation is more important, he said.

Prices, S.S. Taxes Rise

By BROOKS JACKSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The average worker's buying power was clobbered last month by the highest rise in grocery prices in a generation and by steep new social security taxes.

As January's cost of living rose 0.3 per cent the average worker's buying power declined 1.1 per cent, the Labor Department reported Thursday.

It was the third straight monthly decline in purchasing power and the biggest monthly drop in 2-1/2 years. It canceled much of the wage gains made in the 1st year.

The stark figures could spell headaches for President Nixon's Phase 3 wage controls because unions this year are negotiating new contracts for some five million workers in such key industries as auto manufacturing, railroads, trucking, rubber, clothing and retail trade.

Last month's 0.3 per cent rise in the cost of living is larger when adjusted for the fact that prices usually go down in January. The Bureau of Labor Statistics said the seasonally adjusted increase was 0.5 per cent.

Most of the increase is concentrated in grocery prices, which consumers feel most keenly. These went up 2.5 per cent, or 2.3 per cent seasonally adjusted. This was the biggest monthly jump since the BLS began keeping separate figures on grocery prices in 1952.

Prices for items other than food, including clothing and used cars, actually fell 0.5 per cent in January. This was normal for this time of year, so the seasonally adjusted figures showed no change.

The cost-of-living increase put the consumer price index for January at 127.7, which means it cost $12.77 to buy a cross-section of goods and services that cost $10 in 1958.

The average worker's weekly pay for January remained nearly level at $138.35. At the same time, social security taxes increased from 5.2 per cent to 5.85 per cent, taking 65 cents more from every $100 paycheck.

Sources Charge S. Viets Holding Refugees For Votes

By EDITH M. LEDERER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP) — American sources say the South Vietnamese government is planning to keep hundreds of thousands of refugees under its control as long as possible in order to have a large pool of progovernment votes in coming elections.

Dr. Phan Quang Dan, the senior South Vietnamese official charged with the refugee problem, denies this. He says most refugees are reluctant to return to Communist-controlled areas where they formerly lived, and prefer to resettle elsewhere.

The issue is likely to become more important as the Saigon government and the Communist side try to work out political agreements about South Vietnam's future and how elections will be conducted.

Since the start of the Communist command's offensive in late March of last year, well over a million refugees have been created and more than 600,000 of these are still in government-run camps around the country.

In 19 days since the cease-fire, fighting in many areas has driven another 200,000 persons from their homes. About 60,000 are still dislocated. Some 15,000 of these have registered in refugee camps. A U.S. report on refugees, citing these figures, predicted that "more probably will do so if they cannot return home soon."

Western experts on the refugee situation tend to agree that the people in the camps are a potential reservoir of political strength for President Nguyen Van Thieu's government, especially if elections take place soon.

"Certainly it would be to the advantage of the Saigon government to hold elections as soon as possible since there are more than half a million refugees still in camps," said one U.S. source who is an authority in the field. "There is a problem of control if they get into contested or Viet Cong areas."

He said he could not envisage the Saigon government's relinquishing of the control it now has of the refugees in the crucial months ahead. "I would suspect they would keep the people from going back to Viet Cong areas and under their own thumb as long as possible," he said.

Hospital "Cost Overruns"

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal price controls on hospitals are fostering multimillion-dollar "cost overruns" on patient bills, a former government economist told the Cost of Living Council Thursday.

A. Ernest Fitzgerald, fired in 1970 as a Pentagon cost analyst after blowing the whistle on cost overruns on the C5A cargo plane, joined two nonprofit organizations in asking the council for more effective price controls on hospitals.

"Statistical relationization of ever-increasing prices for hospital care is reminiscent of similar pricing maneuvers at the Pentagon," Fitzgerald said.

The petitioners said hospital daily charges last year increased 11.6 per cent, or nearly twice the administration's goal of 6.5 per cent under the Phase 2 economic program.

State Aid Cuts Due To Census

By SHELLY COHEN
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP)-About 60 cities and towns in Massachusetts face unwarranted cuts in their state aid allotments because of discrepancies in the state's 1971 census count, several municipal officials charged in a news conference Thursday.

A group called Citizens for Participation in Political Action called the news conference and announced intentions to bring legal action against the state to bar use of the 1971 state census in reapportioning the Massachusetts legislature.

If the legislature is reapprotioned with those figures, the municipal leaders said, some communities will be short-changed.

Joseph Broke, chairman of the Cambridge Democratic City Committee, questioned the accuracy of the state figures in his city.

The state census for Cambridge first listed 72,000 city inhabitants as of Jan. 1, 1971, nearly 29,000 less than the federal census found eight months earlier.

"The loss of a third of the city in eight months was so improbable," Brode said, "that the city recalled the totals in mid-1972."

Cambridge added 13,000 students to its totals but still the census figures are 15 per cent below the federal total.

Cambridge Mayor Barbara Ackerman said her city would lose $100,000 in local aid and one of its five seats in the state House of Representatives as a direct result of those figures.

Cities and towns throughout the state, including Brockton, South Hadley, Lowell and Walthan, are beginning to question the state figures. Ten communities are seriously contemplating filing suit on their own, Brode said.

Objections to the state census take several forms. In some areas, such as the college towns in the western part of the state, students were not counted as "inhabitants", although many are registered voters in the area. Elsewhere, such as in the town of Harvard, military personnel stationed at Fort Devens were not counted in the state census.

Thus while the federal census shows Harvard with a population of 13,000, the state figures list only 3,000 inhabitants.

"And yet students and military personnel add to the burdens of cities and towns," Brode said. "They drive on town roads and use community facilities."

What legal remedy may be open to those communities who feel aggrieved is "a real problem," said the group's attorney, Paul Counihan.

"An individual city or town can ask the court to direct the secretary of state to correct it s figures," Counihan said.

He added that as a group the communities could question guidelines which omit students and military personnel.

Under a recent court decision, Brode said, cities and towns must register students and military personnel to vote. Yet the state census does not count them as residents for the purpose of apportioning legislative districts.

Scrapping the state census figures would mean scrapping the redistricting plan as well.

Brode said the share of the local aid fund proceeds from the state lottery was more important than any problems a change in census figures could cause for legislators.

Richard Geoffrian of South Hadley said the census controversy surfaced in his town just two weeks ago. He said a taxpayers suit was being contemplated there to challenge the state figures. Geoffrian added that since town officials had already certified the figures as accurate it was necessary to bring private citizens into the fight.

Amherst Sewage Treatment Plans Behind Schedule

By ED FOGARTY

Final plans for a new sewage treatment plant have not been submitted by the Town of Amherst nor has a contractor been hired to develop the plans. Plans should have been submitted as of Jan., 1973 according to a timetable established by the state in July, 1967.

Allan Torrey, Town Manager, said he couldn't foresee construction of the sewage plant for two or three years, and completion of the plant is at least four years away.

The present Amherst Treatment Plant overflows regularly into Mill River, particularly in the morning due to sewage from UMass, according to William Doubleday, Director of the Mass. State Water Pollution Control Board.

There is no way to determine the exact amount of overflow because the flow measuring devices are stopped at six million gallons. The capacity of the present plant is four million gallons.

Added problems resulting from the overflowing of the plant is improper settling of solid wastes and ridding the grease from the effluent. The UMass dining commons are the main contributors of the grease.

According to Torrey preliminary reports for the construction of the new treatment plant were submitted and approved by the State Water Pollution Control Board in the summer of 1971. The Town of Amherst appropriated $6,000,000 in October 1971.

The selectmen voted to halt the plans on the advisement of the Techinical Advisory Committee. The Technical Advisory Committee was established by the Board of Selectmen.

When asked if he knew why the Board of Selectmen voted to halt the construction of the treatment plant, Torrey said, "I'd better not answer that."

Torrey felt that the original plans were adequate. "Once a decision is made, follow it through."

One reason for the present delay in construction of the sewage treatment plant is the time lost from cancelling the original building contract.

According to Doubleday a new Federal Law effective March, 1973 will make it difficult for the town to get financial aid to construct the plant. The new law will give assistance first to towns which do not have any sewage treatment plants at all.

The Environmental Protection Agency has changed the guidelines under which a town is eligible to receive funding. A town must now submit final plans to be eligible. Amherst does not have its final plans.

According to Torry, "adequate funds are available. We have to get in line, that's all."

The Technical Advisory Board advised a halt in the Oct., 1971 plans for construction because they wanted to look into the possibility of better sludge disposal. At present the sludge is disposed in the Amherst Town Dump.

The T.A.C. desired to incinerate the sluge and other wastes of the town as a source of energy.

Torrey said that the town has interviewed eight firms. At present, the firms have been narrowed down to one who is "very probable" to get the contract.

"We are writing for their scope of work proposal." The scope of work proposal will describe what the firm plans to do.

The firm is considering the feasibility of burning the UMass and Town waste and sludge in the UMass heating plant.

Mass. Experts Praise U.S.-China Relations

BOSTON (AP) — Thursday's announcement of the formation of government liaison offices in Washington and Peking prompted praise from a number of leading scholars on U.S.-Chinese relations and a general expression of optimism about prospects for formal diplomatic relations.

John King Fairbank, professor of history at Harvard and one of the nation's leading China scholars, said the announcement showed Peking's "flexibility and willingness to make progress."

Boston College Political Science Professor Peter S.H. Tang, who is working on a study of U.S.-Sino-Soviet relations, said, "The Chinese Communists have been very patient and most cooperative. They are most anxious for normalization of relations with the United States."

Although the announcement said no formal diplomatic relations are being established through the liaison offices, most China scholars felt it to be a significant step towards recognition.

PATRIARCA GETS HEARING

PROVIDENCE (AP) — Three state prisoners, including reputed crime boss Raymond L.S. Patriarca, are to be returned soon to Rhode Island for hearings on their involuntary confinement in out-of-state prisons.

Atty. Gen. Richard J. Israel said Thursday a federal court ruled Jan. 16 that inmates must hae hearings before being transferred to out-of-state prisons against their will.

N.E. CAUCUS

WASHINGTON (AP) — An organization designed to pit New England concerns against competing interests from other parts of the country was announced Thursday by most of the region's congressional delegation.

Organizers emphasized the New England Congressional Caucus is not a lobby, though some of its funding comes from business interests.

Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Mass., said the caucus and an affiliated economic research office were formed because of "the unique geography, climate and economy of New England."

Conte said the region has repeatedly been unfairly treated on key economic interests like oil imports, rail freight rates and defense contracts.

The economic office, called the New England Economic Research Office, is funded initially by banking and fuel oil interests, officials said.

At a news conference, Rep. Gerry E. Studds, D-Mass., said he hoped the financial support of the caucus would be broadened. Rep. James A. Burke, D-Mass., said he was worried the ailing textile, shoe and electronics industries would not be represented.

N.E. EMPLOYMENT UP

BOSTON (AP) — New England employment increased to 4.63 million in December, 23,400 above November 1972 and 75,500 higher than December 1971, the U.S. Department of Labor said Thursday.

The increase in the number of jobs during 1972 did not, however, keep pace with the national average, according to Wendell D. Macdonald, regional director of the department's Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Macdonald said employment increased 1.7 per cent in New England during 1972 and was up 3.6 per cent for the nation.

CHOATE GETS NEW HEAD

WALLINGFORD, Conn. (AP) — The dean of the Tucker Foundation at Dartmouth College and a former associate dean of the school, Charles F. Dey, was named Thursday as the new president of The Choate School and Rosemary Hall.

Dey, 42, succeeds the Rev. Seymour St. John who is retiring in June after 26 years as headmaster of Choate, one of the nation's oldest and most prestigious private boys' schools. Rosemary Hall School is the affiliated school for girls.

$5,000 BEACON HILL REWARD

BOSTON (AP) — A group of residents in the Beacon Hill area Thursday offered a $5,000 reward for information leading to convictions in the stabbing death of an interior decorator.

Police said Charles G. Rice, Jr., 25, a Beacon Hill resident, was stabbed in the neck and killed Tuesday night as he walked to a mail box near his home.

Beacon Hill residents have asked police for more foot patrolmen at night.

WMPIRG Petition To Protect Conn. River

By WILLIAM DENSMORE

The student-funded Western Mass. Public Interest Research Group (WMPIRG) on Wednesday joined two other consumer groups in petitioning the Federal Power Commission to intervene in hearings on the relicensing of four Connecticut River hydroelectric dams.

An Environmental Defense Fund (EDF) lawyer filed the petition on behalf of EDF, WMPIRG, and For Land's Sake, a group of Vermonters who own land on the river.

The action is an attempt to force Western Mass. Electric and New England Power Company to install fish ladders and regulate water flow at four dam sites on the Connecticut River in Massachusetts and Vermont.

Since the 19th century Atlantic salmon and shad have been prevented from spawning naturally on the Connecticut above Holyoke because of a series of dams-first used by mills, and now used to generate electricity.

But the Anadromous Fish Act, passed by Congress in 1965 gave Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Vermont the funds to set up a "Connecticut River Fishery Program" in 1966 to study the situation.

The goals of the program were to "enhance and maintain the resident fish species in the basin and to establish sustained runs of anadromous fishes in the Connecticut River Basin," according to its 1970 annual report.

Carlton A. Bridges, Chairman of the joint program, and Supt. of the Mass. Bureau of Wildlife Research and Management, said yesterday that "barring further thermal loading" the restoration process could be accomplished by the installation of fish ladders at five dam sites.

The four dams cited by WMPIRG presently have no ladder facilities despite FPC regulations which "clearly" require such facilities, according to Bridges.

Bridges says that the Holyoke Power Company, operators of a fifth dam in Holyoke came to the program in January of 1971 and offered to build facilities before the FPC required them.

"They wanted to negotiate it rather than go through the formal hearing route," Bridges said.

The Company and Bridges' group agreed on the required facilities, but construction has been held up ever since because an environmental impact statement filed with the FPC has not yet been approved.

Bridges blames the FPC delay on "bureaucratic red tape" and says that the fish ladders at Holyoke probably won't be completed now until 1975.

"We could have had that facility in operation by the spring of 1973," Bridges said yesterday.

Bridges says that although he has "verbal agreements" with New England Power to construct facilities at the three Vermont dams, nothing has been negotiated with Western Mass Electric for the Turners Falls site because the company is still varying water levels beyond acceptable limits.

The WMPIRG petition which was filed in Washington calls for provisions in new licenses at the four dams that would:

—set standards for continuous minimum flow of water

—require immediate construction of fish passages at each dam

—require the licensees to take action to alleviate erosion damage caused by rising water behind the dams.

Power needs require the dam operators to fluctuate the water level behind and below each dam by several feet weekly and daily. Conservationists say that such unnatural fluctuation causes isolated pools of stagnant water, increased silt levels on the river bottom, and occasional fish kills.

If WMPIRG and the other two organizations are successful in forcing the FPC to require fish ladders, facilities would allow up to 65,000 American salmon and 750,000 shad to swim upstream past dams as far as Bellows Falls in mid-state Vermont.

U.S. Congressman Silvio O. Conte (R-Mass.) obtained $125,000 of a necessary $4 million for construction of a fish hatchery on the White River near Bethel, Vermont. The hatchery would sput progress toward establishment of significant salmon runs on the Connecticut by 1980, according to a WMPIRG report accompanying the petition.

Other groups supporting the action to intervene in the FPC hearings are the Vermont Public Interest Research Group, the New England Chapter of the Sierra Club, Trout Unlimited, the Connecticut River Watershed Council and the Connecticut River Ecology Action Corporation.

Night Bus Service

True, the new Student Senate Transit Service is an overnight success. But there is room for improvement, specifically in the present lack of buses which run after 6 p.m.

Thanks to the efforts of various groups, however, night bus service will become a reality within a week, according to Bob Godding, Transit Service Manager. Requests for night bus service came from the Senate's Women's Committee, the Amherst Board of Selectmen (who are trying to deal with the town's hitchhiking problem), and the Rape Crisis Committee (a group of concerned Puffton Village residents).

Wednesday night, the Senate agreed to help supply the extra funds needed to pay the night drivers, estimated to be $2500-$3500. Night bus service should cut down on the number of people who are forced to walk back to their dorms or hitchhike back to their apartments after sunset which, in turn, should reduce the occurences of rape around campus.

Furthermore, faculty and commuters who drive to campus in the morning, because they don't return home until the evening hours, will now be able to take advantage of the extended schedule, and leave their cars home.

Tentatively, three of four buses will be running both on-campus and off-campus routes between 6:30 p.m. and 11:30 p.m. This addition of night bus service is a giant step in handling the current problems of rape and hitchhiking, not to mention traffic congestion and air pollution, and the Student Senate Transit Service is well on its way to being an unqualified success.

Street Listing Info

This year, like last year, many students face the possibility of losing the right to vote in Amherst. The annual Street Listing will be the culprit. Each year the Town Clerk is required by state law to make a list of all the residences in the Town seventeen-years-old and older. If you are a voter in Amherst and wish to remain one, then your name must appear in the Street Listing.

The way the names for the Street Listing are collected is different for townspeople and students. Workers for the Town visit every home in Amherst and collect the necessary information, so that every voter who lives in a house or an apartment is visisted, and his name will appear in the Street Listing. For UMass, the Town Clerk distributes Street Listing cards to the Heads of Residence who are supposed to disperse them through the dorm. After they have been filled out and collected by the Heads of Residence, an agent of the town should come and return them to the Town Hall. All this is supposed to be done in the months of January and February.

The purpose of the Street Listing is to establish who lives in Amherst. When the Street Listing is published, it can be used to prove residence for in-state tuition and for Social Security and Veterans' benefits. Most important to UMass, it will be used to determine who is a voter in the town. After you register to vote, the Town uses the Street Listing to find out if you've moved, so they can remove your name from their list of voters.

Unfortunately, the distribution and collection process does not run as smoothly as it should. The Town Clerk sent a letter which explained what the Street Listing is about and how it should be conducted, to every Head of Residence. A worker for the Town visited every dorm and left some Street Listing cards. He was to have explained who should fill them out and why, but many Heads of Residence are still confused even after his visit and the letter.

A check with various Heads of Residence reveals that the cards were not received until last week and were due this week. Some Heads of Residence reported receiving them as early as the last week in January, while one did not acquire them until yesterday. They were to be picked up at the dorms this week; some dorms have reported that they have not yet been picked up, while in other dorms they were mailed to the Town Hall. Fortunately, the Town Clerk is not very strict about the deadline and will accept cards after that date.

Some Heads of Residence had no idea what the purpose of the cards were. A few thought that if you filled out one of these cards you would be a registered voter, which is not true. Others had some idea what the cards would be used for, but very few knew that if you are an Amherst voter and fail to fill out the form you will be removed from the voting rolls. The distribution of the cards in the dorms seemed haphazard. In some dorms, signs were posted and the cards were placed in a central location where they would always be available. In other dorms, the cards were given to the counselors who were supposed to see that they were filled out. It is doubtful that counselors could understand what the cards were about if many Heads of Residence, who explained the cards to the counselors, didn't know what they purpose was. Often counselors didn't take the distribution of the cards seriously, anyways.

I talked to about ten Heads of Residence (by chance I might have picked the ten that had the most problems, but I doubt it). There are enough hassles in the Street Listing to go all the way around. The Listing should be handled differently. Each Head of Residence should make it his or her responsibility to see that they understand what the cards are for and how they should be filled out. The Town Clerk should make the situation clearer to the Heads of Residence. The cards should be distributed earlier and more of them should be left at each dorm. The Town Clerk might supply each Head of Residence with a list of the voters in that dorm. It wouldn't be much extra work for the Town Clerk, and the Head of Residence could make sure that each person on the list got a card. Counselors should understand the Street Listing better and take it more seriously. There is a reprieve if you fail to fill out a card. The Town Clerk will tell you she's going to drop your name from the voting list and you will have the opportunity to complete a card and retain your voting rights.

If you are a voter in Amherst and wish to remain one, make sure you fill out a Street Listing Card.

What's A Liberal?

Today, a modern liberal may be defined as one who feels comfortable in the company of the political left. He feels a need to be "modern" or "with it". "Make progress", they say. But progress means to them the advocacy of political and social systems which are not only new to the American way of life, but which may (and often do) conflict with the principles and philosophies of the Constitution of the United States.

The question can now read: What makes a liberal tick? Well, probably the best way to answer this question is to try and analyze the liberal's characteristics:

1) Most liberals, especially the really active ones, are professional purveyors of ideas. Most of them are skilled in the means of communication. In fact, they are so skilled that they have the ability to hold attention for long periods of time, if need be. They can use these skills to create the illusion that their ideas represent public opinion, whether it be true or not.

2) Most liberals feel, or say they feel, that man is infallible. This goes against all laws of human nature.

3) The liberal tends to form hypotheses which become ends in themselves. They try to escape from the always complex, sometimes ugly and cruel world. They tend to create a world of fantasy and let their imaginations create whatever they wish. Thus, the liberal comes out with theories that, to any sane individual with both feet on the ground, are utterly ridiculous. But the thing that really galls me is that when these theories don't work out when they are applied to society, the liberal blames society instead of his theory or himself.

4) Liberals believe that, somehow or other, man is endowed with rights. He doesn't realize that an ordered society is built through the acceptance and performance of duties. From these carried out duties, rights arise. Our American ancestors fought off the tyranny of the British some 200 years ago so that we could live in a free country with rights which are designated in a stable and sound constitution.

5) The liberal has the mistaken belief that "all men are created equal" and tries to enforce this in all walks of life. No, all men are not created equal. Each individual is created differently. People don't act all alike, they don't think alike; in short, people are not robots. We all have our own individual personalities, abilities and talents. We should try to fulfill these as best we can and stop trying to be equal to each other.

6) The liberals tend to put ideology over reality in judging the rest of mankind (meaning the free world).

These are some of the many factors that make up the personalities, actions, beliefs, and philosophies of a tried-and-true liberal. In trivial matters, these people are relatively harmless but in important matters

The Nostalgia Gimmick

LESSON # 1: Just Sit Back and Relax, and . . .

Do you remember the good old days? Between you and me, I'd rather forget them . . . nostalgia rears its lovely (ugly?) head and we speak in the reverent tones that are usually reserved for gods (or at least for the Rolling Stones).

Now, now, gentle reader, don't get upset that I'm trying to tell you what to do. It's just that it's about time we stopped glorying in the past, and returned to the present. The past, I'm sure you'll agree, is full of pretty ugly things—you know, world wars, killing commies for Christ. You really can't separate the political realities (or memories) of the past from the cultural and entertainment realities of the past. The fact that a composer such as Beethoven composed for a bloated European nobility can not be ignored, any more than the systems imposed by a nobility structure can be ignored. And the general fact (and a fact it is), that the artistic tradition of Europe has been fostered by a group of old farts at play in various elitist, intellectual educational centers throughout the world can neither be ignored nor excused . . . and the worst of all, it should not be nourished by a bunch of college youths with alot of spare time looking for a new "fad". It's escapism pure and simple . . . and yeah . . . "escapism" is self-destructive, and should be avoided at all costs, and here's why . . .

Nostalgia entails systems—old systems of thought which were destructive then, and are going to continue to be destructive now.

In an article from the Associated Press in the February 21st issue of the Collegian (p. 7, "Nostalgic Reruns On Campus"), one "agent" said, "It (the appetite for nostalgia—and probably the resulting indigestion, if you'll excuse my sarcasm) goes along with the mood of the country, a general lifting of the spirit of things." Yes, a general lifting of the spirits (read: a general air of non-involvement with things political in nature), and a general lifting of money from people's pockets, in order to recapture a myth of the past. Thus, as soon as a new craze develops, the robbers are at you again, promoting their own asinine products, with the result that a feeling of emptiness encompasses all, and the only thing benefitted is the entrepreneur's wallet.

LESSON # 2: Leave the Driving to Us

However unfortunate it may be, the problem of self-indulgence at the cost of others is still with us. And occasional nostalgia is certainly not destructive . . . but the fact is it take's us away from the current swing of things in a sort of backward propulsion fashion. And the reasons behind the urge to "get away from it all" are at least pardonable, but there is an almost irresistable urge on the part of most to assume that there must have been a better time than the present in this country. But we tend to do it in a post-industrialized context, seldom remembering that the past, however great it may seem, through the wisdom of hindsight remains a pretty sick place to put yourself . . . justifying wistful thinking of some "good old days" world that never existed.

So then, we'll die, with our stereo headphones on . . . no, with the current nostalgia gimmick, we'll at least die with our spats on. I wish you realization.

Winter Carnival Sneaks Back

By Ed Bryant

It gets cold in Amherst during the middle of February, and students haven't always had so many cars. In days gone by no one would come out at all in February, except for one weekend when everyone went out and had a good time. This weekend was known as Winter Carnival. As people changed, events changed, but the tradition of Winter Carnival was strong, and the delights of the weekend went far beyond those events for which tickets could be sold.

Simon & Garfunkel, Richie Havens, Ten Years After, and the Chambers Brothers were just some of the people who appeared in concert, while all over campus the week before the Big Weekend was spent in fashioning rocket ships and grizzly bears out of a white powder known as snow, which hopefully fell to the ground each February in time for ice-sculpturing. The best ice-sculpture each year would win a prize which would be presented Saturday night in the Cage. Another presentation was the Best Looking Broad Award, which was also made in the Cage on Saturday night. Had the tradition-makers been smart, they would have kept their prizes for beauty. Amherst is not Atlantic City.

Hippies, being the logical result of Western Civilization, eventually found their way to Amherst, a town which has a lot invested in Western logic. Winter Carnival had been fraternity and sorority property for many years, but people tend to be tolerant as long as they don't think about it; so Winter Carnival continued through the last years of the 1960's and into 1970, despite the cultural upheaval going on in Amherst. Music is the closest thing to democracy among college age people; Kappa Sigma and Coolidge Upper would both show if the Beatles were playing.

The breakdown came from a most unexpected source. The Junior Class had always run Winter Carnival, and in the Fall of 1970 members of the Executive Council of the Class of 1972 spent their meeting time debating the relative merits of good music and AM radio. The AM radio freaks won, and the Fifth Dimension was booked to play Winter Carnie. There was talk of a boycott, meaningless talk actually since the alternative to boycott was hearing the Fifth Dimension, and no one could see paying money to do that. Winter Carnival 1971 was

Media Notes

By Eugene Barnett

One of the most annoying problems in going to films at schools and colleges is the quality of the prints. Most directors of film series must put their complete trust in the 16mm distributor and, often to their dismay, receive films that are washed out and spliced to death. There are areas that these film directors can control, and a recent showing of Little Big Man is a fine example. When first released this film was shot in Panavision, a wide-screened process which amplified the magnificent vistas of the South Dakota location shooting used extensively. The print which was shown at the University was a blotched and chopped down one which was missing the sides of the original frames. It was like watching the film through a pair of blinders and detracted a good deal from its enjoyment. It is suggested that film programmers check with the distributor as to the specific technical details of a film before they show it to large groups at ridiculous prices. The cost of Little Big Man was one dollar, not that much in the scheme of things, but hardly worth spending to see only part of an image and hearing a professionally recorded soundtrack blast through speakers like it was being piped in from an adjacent john. Perhaps planners should be more interested in quality than the monetary gain film showings, like this one, bring.

The UNIVERSITY FILM STUDY CENTER announces a one-day conference on Film Study in New England, to be held at Schwartz Hall, Brandeis University, 10 March 1973.

The purpose of the gathering is to provide an opportunity for film educators--both experienced and aspiring--to discuss common problems and exchange information. Representatives of foundations, national film organizations, film distributors, and other interested groups will also be in attendance to supply additional information and points of view.

The conference program has been planned to include a wide range of experience in film teaching and to provide a basic structure for the proceedings. Ample time has been left for open discussion and questions from the floor.

Speakers will discuss various aspects of film study, ranging from the basic problems in establishing a film department to the theoretical consideration of film study in the humanities. Of special interest will be an explanation and demonstration of the newly developed super 8mm, synchronous sound equipment by Richard Leacock of MIT; a report from the recently created American Film Institute Advisory Committee on Film Training and Film Studies; a report on developments in funding, exhibition and distribution of Independent Film, and a screening of the New England Student Film Festival Touring Package.

The conference is a project of the University Film Study Center's Film Information Office, established under grants from the National Endowment for the Arts and the Louis B. Mayer Foundation. The office has been developed to serve the increasingly demanding need for film information and resources in the New England community. The conference is an effort to contact individuals, promote the exchange of information and ideas, and identify the common problems of film study in the New England area.

REGISTRATION:

The conference is open to faculty, students and interested members of the public. Advance registration is required due to limited seating. Please telephone for reservations after Friday, February 23. A fee of $8 allows entry to all events, including morning coffee and luncheon. For further information, contact Barbara Humphrys, University Film Study Center, Box 275, Cambridge, Mass. 02138 or call 617-894-0920.

Amnesty For Draft Deserters

Amnesty for draft deserter? This subject is given another go-round on page thirteen. Remember those Friday's last year when Frank Baglione irked your complacent liberal attitudes with his lucid, sharp-witted analysis of contemporary politics? The movement is given roasting here. The movement, if you remembered, flourished in the Sixties with the spirit of flowers and love. In the Seventies it's been notably subdued. Campus political action has been reduced to a level of inaction. The banner may be raised again with cries of amnesty, but there may be reasons why it shouldn't.

A Joyful Film

Barbra Streisand has starred in six movies and all of them have been hits, but you would never guess that her latest film, Up The Sandbox, is anything more than her first film blunder. The reviews have been mixed, and the film invites criticism. Streisand, though, is radiant and proves herself to be one of the best actresses currently in American films. As Pauline Kael observed, she's a complete reason for going to the movies and Up The Sandbox is a joyous showcase for her talents as an actress. For more, see page twenty-one.

An FBI Of A Different Color

By Howard Bloom and Steve Ferber

FBI. The letters alone conjure up images of agents, spies, counter-spies and undercover men. Under J. Edgar Hoover, the Federal Bureau of Investigation was nurtured along from its inception in 1917 until it had become almost as powerful as a fourth branch of the government. But those lofty heights are unlikely to be maintained now that L. Patrick Gray III has been nominated by President Nixon to be the permanent director after 9 month as acting chief.

In theory, the FBI has always functioned as the Justice Department's investigative agency. The director is charged with investigating all violations of federal laws except those assigned to the federal agencies, such as postal cases and narcotics crimes. The bureau has jurisdiction over some 180 investigative matters, including espionage, sabotage, treason, kidnapping extortion, bank robbery and civil rights enforcement, and of course has powers of arrest for violations.

That's in theory. When Hoover died last March, the public had the image of the FBI as a smooth running efficient anti-crime machine. In reality the famed bureau was in many respects a highly inefficient outdated bureaucracy, too often staffed at the top by sycophants and subject to Hoover's whims.

Due to Gray's close personal ties to the President, many expect a struggle when Gray comes up for confirmation. The charge of cronyism will be high on the list of complaints by opponents.

The controversy over Gray must center on the man's ability to clean up the agency that was once purported to be the most effective police force in the world.

There is much to clean up. Under Hoover every act of every agent was judged on what it would do to the image of the FBI, often in the most petty way. Agents, for example, were forbidden to drink coffee on breaks, lest it appear they were wasting time. As a result, Special Agents in Charge would spend valuable hours patrolling coffee shops near their field offices.

Nitpicking was the order of the day. One agent who mispelled the name of an assistant director in a memo to Hoover was transferred from Washington to L.A.

Hoover's puritanical view of sex permeated the bureau. In San Francisco several years ago, some agents threw a going away party for a co-worker and invited a go-go dancer. When an informer reported it to headquarters, an investigation was launched and each man attending was questioned. Of the 140 or so agents at the party 138 claimed to have been in the tiny men's room at the time the dancer performed.

Hoover's hand wasn't just iron-clad, it was goldplated. Presidents respected his talent and authority and enjoyed his gossip. Congress approved his budgets with the most perfunctory review.

Hoover's power rested on fear as well as reverence, on the presumption that he knew everybody else's secrets. Yet the nation's mood was changing, and Hoover was not. He remained out of tune and out of touch. "To suggest change," remarked an agent, "was to suggest that the way things were being done was wrong, and that was suicide."

Through Hoover's 55-year rule, which saw him outlast 7 presidents, the bureau had a list of considerable accomplishments about which to boast. But the latter years saw the bureau falter steadily, the reason being that Hoover wanted everything to go through him. Avoiding embarrassment became a major imperative, and all the while Hoover was nearly immune to criticism or even serious review.

Priorities were misarranged. Agents wasted time fattening the FBI's statistics with stolen car recoveries, or dealt with state and city problems that the local branches could have handled much more efficiently.

The bullheadedness of Hoover was never more clearly revealed than in his view towards organized crime. He refused to believe the Mafia existed until late in his reign, and therefore did not waste much time investigating organized crime.

If Hoover had established a good name for himself and the bureau in earlier times, petty fiascos like the Kissinger "kidnap" plot trial, which collasped in court, and the embarrassing loss of FBI files from the Media, Pa. office, tarnished that image.

Shortly before his life ended talk was increasing about the need to replace Hoover. His death necessitated no movements in that areas, as Gray was moved in as acting director by the President.

The Senate was thinking ahead when in 1968 they demanded confirmation of any new head of the FBI. In the coming weeks the merits of Hoover's replacement will be discussed and evaluated. But one thing is for sure. His successor will be subject to closer Congressional scrutiny than Hoover ever had to endure.

Is Gray the right man? In his first two days he talked to more newsmen than Hoover had obliged in 10 years. He plans to concentrate more on drugs and crime, organized and general, and worry less about the "Red Menace", a worry of Hoover's which exceeded all others.

Gray is now accepting applications from women and is hoping to recruit more employees from minority groups such as black Americans, Spanish surnamed Americans, American Indians and Asian Americans.

Small changes in the agents' dress regulations have also been made. Gray is allowing colored shirts, longer sideburns and mustaches to adorn his crew of agents.

More significantly, Gray recently brought his Special Agents in Charge of the 59 regional FBI bureaus across the country to Washington for a brainstorming session, something that Hoover never did.

Attempts have been made on Gray's part to introduce diverse opinion from outsiders and he has said he will tolerate a considerable amount of constructive dissent within his own ranks. In fact, plans to set up an outside study of the FBI to be done by a group of lawyers and governmental officials are presently in the works.

The major impact of Gray, in his 9 months as acting director, has been on the morale inside the FBI. Quinn Tamm, executive director of the International Association of Chiefs of Police and an ex-agent, praises Gray's accomplishments in this area. "Gray has replaced an operation run on fear with an operation of understanding and hope. The morale at the FBI has improved tremendously."

The recently nominated director has high regard for both the law and the power of his job. On the first count he promises that first and foremost the FBI will be an investigative agency, and that the "protection of the American people and American way of life" will be the primary responsibility of his agency. He plans to set a course that insures domestic peace and tranquility in accordance with the law.

Secondly, he stated, "I respect the awesome power that's in this position.....when you give an order, it's going to be carried out.....so I have to keep telling myself, watch out Patrick....."

As is evident, under Gray there have been some changes made. More will probably follow. Yet despite his list of plusses, opponents in and out of the Senate have found cause to raise objections to his nomination.

Being a close friend of the President's is the first and most telling count against Gray. A 14-year friend, Gray has backed Nixon in every campaign from his Vice President up to and including his recent re-election. Said a former FBI agent, "Gray is not his own man at all, but a Nixon political lieutenant." He went on to say that Gray watered down the FBI's Watergate probes, ordering his men to hold up investigations in order to stick to the laws by the letter. Gray even said, "it strains the credulity to believe that Nixon could have perpetrated a 'con/job' on the American people." Should an FBI director be making moral and personal judgments on this serious a matter? Count number two.

A memo of complaints has been put forth against Gray from within the bureau. "More in the FBI is at an all-time low point," the memo alledges. "Most unfortunately, Gray has become completely obsessed with the appurtenances of power left by J. Edgar Hoover." It goes on to note that Gray has kept Hoover's three Cadillacs and added two Mercurys; hired a full-time 10,000 dollar a year steward to prepare lunches in the new kitchen built off his office; and has flown around the country using an Air Force jet.

As for organization, the memo criticizes, "his complete lack of management experience....Committees abound, endless inane discussions but no decision.....His frantic schedule is aimless and has resulted in no significant accomplishments."

Gray rejects the notion that the administration can't effectively investigate itself. Ramsey Clark, former U.S. Attorney General, disagrees. The director, says Clark, "should be unquestionably independent, with public stature. Gray doesn't have that. He is purely and simply a close associate of the President's."

Seemingly Gray drawbacks outweigh his strong points and a fight in the Senate over his confirmation is sure to materialize.

Time and space conspired to send the Fifth Dimension back to the fifth dimension without ever doing their two shows for $25,000. Stevie Winwood and a reorganized Traffic came to UMass in early November. Did they play good music? Christ, they blew our doors off. The powers-that-think-they-are got so upset that they said no more concerts, at least in the Cage, and the Fifth Dimension had one less egg to fry.

Losing the Fifth Dimension commitment was a blessing as well as a blessing, for into the vacuum stepped Little Latin Larry, who along with his Latinaires and his Latinettes and a couple of roadies or two pulled in on Winter Carnival weekend and taught the people something about roots. Larry's two sets in the Auditorium got everybody off, and the theater of dressing up as a '57 Chevy got everyone off even more. It was a great night for everybody except for those people who still wanted to hear "Aquarius."

Winter Carnival 1971 will be remembered, however, not for Little Latin Larry, but for the election of a Winter Carnival Queen. The Best Looking Broad Contest had gone off without a hitch for countless Homecomings, Winter Carnival, Greek Weeks, Las Vegas Nights, and various other Special Occasions. You couldn't have a special occasion without a Best Looking Broad for your Queen.

One night, quietly lulling himself into understanding in his monastic cell, a vision came to Jim LaMacchia. The exploitation of women weighed heavy on his mind as he deliberated the many ways in which his brothers abused his sisters for sport. Just as this crossed his mind, Jim opened to a page of the sacred reading, The Daily Collegian. Glancing inside, Jim saw an advertisement for a Best Looking Broad Contest, this one for Winter Carnival 1971. Jim knew what he must do. Jim LaMacchia became the first man ever to enter the Best Looking Broad Contest, as a write-in candidate.

LaMacchia's candidacy became the talk of the town, as his energetic supporters rallied to cast their ballots for him. Along the way, much of Jim's criticism of the inherent sexism was lost. The people in charge of the Best Looking Broad Contest were the officers of the Junior Class, whose ability to keep cool under fire could have been better and still would have been inadequate. LaMacchia got the most votes, but the officers of the Junior Class insisted that a man cannot be a queen. They should have known better.

The officers ruled that write-in votes didn't count, and that Jim LaMacchia couldn't be the Best Looking Broad, because the Best Looking Broad Screening Committee had not nominated him as a finalist. An impasse had been reached between the Mr. Jones' and what was happening.

What was happening got a big boost from Rich Dinkin, a friend of Jim LaMacchia and a concerned citizen, who through his experience as President of the Commuter Assembly had learned a few things about the way things work in the Campus Center. Dinkin took the matter to court, where a tribunal which would have made both Kafka and Camus jealous declared, in effect, that Jim LaMacchia could indeed be the Best Looking Broad if enough people voted for him. Thus did the exploitation of women become non-discriminatory by sex on this campus.

Jim LaMacchia was never officially elected queen, his parents having caught wind of what was going on before a new election could be held. The decision from the court was a severe blow to the people who had run Winter Carnival. With the abolition of Class Government the following Monday, Winter Carnival became a memory; and in 1972 there was no Winter Carnival.

Don't tell anybody, but this weekend is Winter Carnival 1973. The events of the weekend are somewhat unorganized, but most of them are listed in the Collegian. February Flambeau, or Winter Carnival in disguise, is happening on Saturday, featuring all sorts of things. Reliable rumors have it that the tables on the Concourse will be jammed this weekend. If there is snow, there is a snowball fight scheduled between Chadbourne and Van Meter, and if otherwise the two dorms will be having a party which will last all weekend. Members of Lambda Signa Delta will be attempted to sculpt a turnpike tollbooth out of snow.

As for Jim LaMacchia, he will probably pass the weekend unaware of the fact that it is Winter Carnival. Probably he will have a few drinks with some close friends, thinking about other things than the days when his name was a household word.

Tonight, George Girl and Fillmore are playing. Tomorrow, The Sorrow And The Pity will be shown, as well as numerous parties. The bars in town will be jumping, and, whatever else you may hear, it will be Winter Carnival. It takes more than just the abolition of class government to destroy such a good excuse for getting high.

Some Reflection On Amnesty

By Jack Peterson

Pity the suffering masses of the poor Peace Movement, a legion deprived of its cause. They've huffed and they've puffed trying, in vain as it's turned out, to blow a free South Vietnam down by preaching the doctrine of bug out-ism. They've grown hoarse with slogans, they've worn out their shoes marching, and they've set their hearts aflutter over one political loser after another. But now the war is dead, and like a flower deprived of light the Movement faces death. Its slogans are now only historical curiosities, like old Wendell Wilkie campaign buttons, its ability to attract T.V. time is rapidly decaying, though its principles are still floating about somewhat without direction. But behold, for the skies have opened and have thrust down to us mortals a new cause, a savior for the masses of the Movement, Amnesty! The halls of Congress are again alive with the fiery words of former doves, the Movement organizations are gearing up anew, and meetings are being organized internationally. But George Gallup has declared that the majority of voters are against any form of pardon and Mr. Nixon, ever the opportunist, has consequently expressed his opposition. Knee jerk Nixon haters have thus joined the Movement in a new Crusade for Justice, forgiveness, and anarchy.

And while the Movement rises refreshed at home various brands of draft dodgers and deserters and cowards are being interviewed by the mighty mice of the media in Canada, Sweden, and Underground, U.S.A. Some seem quite content in their adopted countries, starting life anew and all, but most seem to long for the old country. Some are willing to return to the land they fled in its time of need, to rebuild under full amnesty, even if it means a compensatory stint in the Peace Corps, but most seem willing to condescend to return only if we offer them an apology for forcing them to leave in the first place, and perhaps grant them a compensatory pension (ah, sweet modesty!).

But while the Movement is sucking the amnesty issue for everything they can get out of it and as the dodgers and deserters ponder their futures, reasonable men are being to dispassionately consider the issues involved, weighing the pros and cons. As part of this effort, and in the vain hope that reason might for once triumph, I offer the following thoughts.

Champions of amnesty often state that it has been granted after previous wars and that thus, or so goes the argument, we must, as traditionalists, follow the example of, say, Mr. Lincoln, for, it would seem, what was just enough for Abe is just enough for us. But after only a cursory look it should become apparent that the argument simply doesn't hold weight before reason. Afterall, the mere fact that a certain view is traditional hardly grants it any moral standing at all, or are we to place Indian killing and freedom of speech (both solidly American traditions) on an equal high plane of moral good. If we are to be guided by precedent, well, let's join together and revive that old dandy, lynchings of coloreds.

A second and more substantive argument in favor of the granting of amnesty goes something like the following. The war has, by common consent or by history's judgement (take your pick), been proven an immoral blunder and as a consequence those who knew this before the rest of us dumb bastards, and thus refused to join the butchery, should, be welcomed back as the real heroes, those who rather than knuckle under, stood up for justice and the right. In short, the deserters and dodgers should not be punished for simply wakening up to the truth of the war before the rest of us. The hidden assumptions in all of this are, first, that all those under consideration in one way or another illegally avoided serving simply out of a knowledge of the moral indefensibility of the war, and, secondly, that the war has indeed been proven an immoral blunder. Considering the high degree of just plain cowardice in humanity I think it is obvious that the first assumption is by no means valid. Sure, many and perhaps most of those in question did what they did for moral reasons, but a hell of a lot of them acted out of plain cowardice, using the slogans of the Movement to rationalize their actions before others and themselves.

As a matter of legal practicality it seems clear that it would be impossible, even if one accepts the above mentioned argument, to sort out the true moral objectors, for purposes of amnesty granting, from the plain cowards. Now, as for the argument's second hidden assumption let me say first, that the war is too recent an event for history to judge as to whether it was or was not a blunder, moral or immoral, and, secondly, that the mere fact that George Gallup et al says that the American people consider the war to have been an immoral blunder does not (a) prove public to be so, or (b) prove anything about the virtue of the war itself (or are we to accept the idea that we might judge truth and virtue by public opinion). But all that aside, let's accept these assumptions for the sake of argument and consider the argument's validity in and of itself. For it presents the view that if a law or order of the state is proven morally wrong or non-utilitarian after the fact of it being violated then the violator should be pardoned.

In effect, thus, it states that to break the law is all right if the law is proven in the future to have been wrong. The first question which strikes one about this argument is of how the violator is to know whether or not, sometime in the future, his violation will be excused. In other words, this proposed principle of law seems of no practical use to the violator at the moment of violation. My complaint here is that the principle leads to some rather shakey law, for violators and society. The essence of good law is predictability, by which men can freely plan their activity. To introduce a precedent whereby anyone potentially could gain pardon by the unpredictable whim of the future would cause only mischief. And the biggest loser would be the rule of law; first, because the authority of law would be undercut, and, secondly, because the basic legalist function of government would in effect be abolished. For the basis of legal authority is the concept of obedience, and that concept would be gravely weakened by an atmosphere in which the promise of amnesty is present, the certainty of punishment being dissolved.

Now, some proponents of amnesty might reply, first, that the pardon in question is restricted to this particular war situation and does not represent the introduction of a new legal principle, and, secondly, that amnesty, even if general, would undermine only unjust laws anyway. But nevertheless a precedent is a precedent, and any law is potentially unjust.

The question must also be raised as to how the unjustness of a law is to be decided, it being the case that, according to the proposed principle of amnesty, unjustness would be generally recognized only after the fact. The only apparent solution to this dilemna is to establish as a corollary principle the view that each potential violator must decide for himself what is a just or unjust law. But if the corollary be accepted, then where would this leave the legal function of government? In short, government is created by man to establish objective laws which all are thus bound to obey so as to remove man from a state of nature in which each man is a state unto himself. Thus by granting the state the sole right to make law man in return 'escapes from a situation of conflict and chaos, where each man is totally free to act, no matter the rights or concerns of others. To allow each man to be again his own law would make the purpose of governments unfulfillable, and plunge man back into the world of the brute. While granting the state a legal monopoly may severely enfringe upon our liberty, the alternative is much worse. Amnesty and the rule of law cannot exist side by side. Either we allow amnesty and say that all men may be their own law, or we maintain the legal monopoly of the state by declaring disobedience to be wrong in all cases. When one breaks the law one should be punished not only because of the importance of the law, but the importance of simply breaking the law, and thus to excuse by amnesty is to declare disobedience to law to be morally right.

A final argument in favor of amnesty often heard is a rather sentimental appeal to Christian charity, a call for forgiveness. Bull! The above legal-state considerations aside, consider simple justice! Let's say that the number of deserters and draft dodgers in question amounts to 100,000, which would mean that 100,000 other Americans had to take their place, had to go to war in their stead, and, for some, had to die in their stead. It is not just that those first 100,000 whose actions forced the above on those second 100,000 should pay their price? Let us be charitable, but not at the price of justice.

The battle in regard to the issue of amnesty is thus clearly between anarchy, dissolution, and misplaced charity on the one side and law, reason, and justice on the other. The choice is clear. May those who chose to put self before law while refusing to at the same time accept the just consequences, ala Martin Luther King, stay where they are.

Tragedy And Mystery On The Right Track

By Carl Greenberg

Death On The Ice
by Cassie Brown with Harold Horwood
270 pages, illustrated; $7.95

Disaster stories are usually big sellers. The freakier and more catastrophic, the better. Witness the Poseidon Adventure. The book had decent characterizations in it, but didn't make the hit that the movie has. The movie is drawing crowds precisely because it shows what the book's reader can only imagine - an upside-down ship. Fantastic.

Death on the Ice, like Poseidon Adventure, doesn't seem to promise a great readership. It's different, of course, in that the story is true and it is always more difficult to peddle truth than fiction.

Death on the Ice is about a sealing disaster which occurred in 1914. (It's also hard to peddle old news.) One hundred men were left stranded on an ice flow for two days and two nights while a raging storm brought temperatures down to thirty below zero. Seventy-eight of them died. It's man against nature in the most basic way. There is nothing freakish about it and consequently the drama lies with the men involved.

Ms. Brown is sensitive to the nature of the story she has so painstakingly researched and spends a good deal of time making us familiar with the type of people who went out on the sealing ships to club and skin baby seals for pittance every March. They are poor people, religious, superstitious, proud and basically honest. They are loyal to each other and have basic good virtues. One man bites the ice of the faces of his freezing companions. Others, on the point of exhaustion, nevertheless urge each other on in whatever small ways they can. They share even the little food they have.

Ms. Brown recreates dialogue from official investigation testimony and personal interviews with survivors and other involved persons. She restores dialect into the speech and thus adds a very revealing dimension to the book. It is one of the few books around of this sort which actually make the reader gain some appreciation of what it was really like.

Two years before this disaster occurred, the Titanic hit its iceberg. Part of the horribleness of that tragedy was due to the fact that there weren't people operating the wirelesses on all the ships in the area and thus rescue was delayed.

The entire disaster described in Death on the Ice could have been avoided had the ship that the men were from been equipped with wireless. The captain of the Newfoundland assumed that his men had crossed the ice and stayed on board another ship. He could have found out had he had a radio. So, the disaster is generated with very simple misunderstandings and the rest of the story concerns the men who suffered.

It was a relatively warm day when they started out, so they left a good deal of their heavier clothing on the ship. By the time they got lost, they had even discarded their gaff- and flagpoles and so had nothing to build a fire with. It is almost a miracle that they all didn't die.

Ms. Brown makes quite a case against the owners of the sealing companies and against Captain Keane, who led the fleet out to the ice. But placing the blame should not concern us as much as the simple horror of the sealers' position and their grim courage against their plight.

It is almost an afternote in the book, but it turns out that at the very time that this disaster is occurring, another, even more terrible one happens to another ship of the fleet. The Southern Cross, with 173 men aboard, was lost in the storm. Counting one other accidental death which occurred on another ship, 252 men died in the fleet during that spring's sealing season.

One would think that to the people of Newfoundland at that time it would have seemed that God was trying to tell them something. It seems that way to us.

The Crystal Mouse
By Babs H. Deal
Doubleday
182 pages $5.95

This one's on the right track. An awful lot of suspense-horror-gothic-mystery novels and movies would have us believe in very strange things. In the Exorcist, for instance, one must really have some feeling for the devil if he is to be at all titillated by the book. Rosemary's Baby was a success, I think, because we are never actually told that they all really are devils - it might be all in the poor girl's head. And that's what makes it work, it's a true psychological mystery.

Then there's the mystery with no explanation. That can be about as scary as you'd ever want to get. The best example of this is Hitchcock's The Birds.

Anyway, Mrs. Deal's The Crystal Mouse, is on the right track because it doesn't ask us to believe in strange things and it lets us fear all those things that really do go bump in the night - our own fears. It is really a good psychological thriller.

In brief, the book concerns a woman of about fifty who has just lost her husband to a heart attack. Just before he died, they had begun moving into a brand new high-rise apartment building. It turns out that she is the only one who has moved in. There she is, all alone, twelve stories up. She hears things, she looks for people in her closets, etc. And we are effectively frightened half out of our own wits because we remember doing that ourselves.

We are even treated to a slight psychanalysis of the woman. It seems that she had been terribly frightened when she was a child in circumstances somewhat resembling her present situation. She's always been a weak person, depending on her husband. She feels deserted by family and friends (her daughter lives in New Zealand, of all places). And last but not least, she has always, subconsciously suspected her husband and her best friend of having had an affair.

The book, as a whole, does not quite make it, for a variety of reasons not connected with the main principle of scare the reader with his own fears. The characters are not terribly well drawn. We doubt that people really think quite the way they seem to in the book; close, but not quite.

Again, Mrs. Deal comes close in her analysis of the woman, but does not seem to hit right on. It may be that accuracy of character perception was sacrificed for plot. Why, for instance, doesn't she keep asking the watchman about the really strange lack of people? The reader's figured it out already, so why can't Mrs. Hillstrom know?

One interesting episode concerns Mrs. Hillstrom's meeting this kooky girl in a bar. The girl ends up telling her that she is a Jesus freak and then she buys her a copy of Jesus Christ Superstar. The whole thing has an aura of unreality to Mrs. Hillstrom, as it should, and it seems to set off her recent loss quite well.

Then, when she listens to the record back at the apartment building, we are offered a very credible reaction to it.

There are also a couple of good sequences when she looks into mirrors. How many times have you been scared by seeing yourself suddenly in a mirror, especially at night? It's truly enough to send shivers up your spine.

And then there is the fright we may experience when things are out of place. I'm not sure that Mrs. Deal describes it quite convincingly enough, but it is certain that when the woman notices her crystal mouse is gone from its place she must certainly experience a good deal of terror.

Besides the well described sensations of fear that Mrs. Deal offers us, she is also fairly competent with the details of the way this woman's life is organized after her husbands death. There is the rest of the moving, the newspaper and mail arrangements, the shopping trips, the forced television watching.

If the characters aren't as well drawn as they might be, at least the story is a real and believable one. A good actress could make a good movie out of this.

Nothing More Than A Legal Lynching

By Ellsworth Barnard

(Editor's note: The following began as a letter to the editor but was subsequently expanded to a full-length essay).

May I comment on Carl Greenberg's review of Louis Nizer's The Implosion Conspiracy, an account of the "Rosenberg spy case," in Poor Richard's (February 16) I have not read Mr. Nizer's book (which received an unfavorable notice in the New York Times Book Review), but I have read the complete transcript (around 2500 pages, as I recall) of the trial and subsequent appeal, and I have read the painstakingly researched defense of the Rosenbergs entitled Invitation to an Inquest, by Walter and Miriam Achneir.

There are two centers of controversy in the Rosenberg case: first, their guilt or innocence; second, their sentence and execution.

The transcript of the trial is absolutely absorbing; no work of crime fiction could be so fascinating—and no writer in that genre would dare to leave so many questions unanswered. To take but one example: the Greenglasses testified for the prosecution that the Rosenbergs had a console table with a special compartment for photographic work, given them by Communist agents in connection with their espionage activities. The Rosenbergs said it was an ordinary table bought at Macy's. Testimony placed it in their apartment at the time of their arrest. Why was it not produced at the trial to show who was lying? (The Schneirs offer a plausible explanation of the failure of the defense to produce it, but what about the prosecution?)

Besides, such mysteries, one is confronted in the transcript with the bullying tactics of the prosecution, the bias of the judge (who regularly overruled defense objections and engaged in patently hostile questioning of defense witnesses), and the painful ineptitude of the counsel for the defense. Emmanuel Bloch was obviously a decent person with an intense concern for his clients, but was clearly out of his depth. One supposes that there was no money for a big name lawyer, even if one had been found with courage to take the case; and also that there were insufficient funds for adequate research. The fact remains that the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, in a 2-1 rejection of a defense appeal, excoriated the tactics of the prosecution and declared that if a motion for a mistrial had been made at the proper time and on the proper grounds, it would have had to be granted. The motion, however, came too late, and the defendants lost their right to a new trial.

One notes also in studying the transcript that the only testimony directly implicating the Rosenbergs came from David and Ruth Greenglass, the brother and sister-in-law of Ethel Rosenberg; that the only support for their testimony about themselves came from Harry Gold (who never claimed to have had contact with the Rosenbergs); and that nothing supported Harry Gold's testimony about his own activities (leaving aside the Greenglass story, since the two had had plenty of opportunity to co-ordinate their testimony during their imprisonment before the trial, with the help of the FBI if needed) was a photographic reproduction of a single hotel registration card. (The defense did not ask for the original, nor did it examine the copy closely enough to note that the date written on the front was different from that stamped on the back.)

The doubts raised by the transcript are elevated by the Schneirs' research to mountainous proportions. There had, for instance, been bitter quarrels between the Greenglasses and the Rosenbergs' David Greenglass feared that he was already in trouble for having stolen some uranium from Los Alamos before FBI agents started questioning him about his alleged passing of atom-bomb secrets to Soviet agents; at the time of the Rosenbergs' trial, he had pleaded guilty but had not been sentenced. He obviously had every motive to tell the FBI agents the story that, as he could easily infer from their questions, they wanted to hear.

For another instance, Harry Gold, despite the fact that his testimony reads far more convincingly than that of any other witness, had confessed in sworn public testimony in a different case (presided over by the same judge) that he was a virtuoso liar. Incredibly, this fact was never mentioned by the counsel for the defense; in fact, Gold was not even cross-examined. Furthermore, the account given by Gold of his alleged espionage activities to his own attorney (appointed by a different court, after his plea of guilty, to represent him at the sentencing hearing) is wildly at variance with, and sometimes flatly contradicts, the story that he told at the Rosenbergs' trial.

Possibly the most startling result of the Schneirs' research is a considerable amount of evidence that the hotel registration card mentioned above was an FBI forgery. (A present-day reader cannot help recalling the Berrigan trial.)

None of this, however (except hints about the family quarrels), was known to the jury. On the other hand, the trial was held (in March, 1951) when anti-Communist hysteria was approaching the highest point in its hectic history. The Russians had exploded their A-bomb at the end of August, 1949. The Korean war had begun in June, 1950. The sensational trials of Alger Hiss were fresh in the public mind. People like Elizabeth Bentley and Whittaker Chambers were emerging with elaborate stories of past complicity in Soviet spy rings, making a career of ex- and anti-Communism. Joseph McCarthy was waving a laundry list before the U. S. Senate and declaring that it contained the names of 238 (was it?) card-carrying members of the Communist Party who were employees of the State Department. Richard Nixon was winning elections by slightly less blatant fictions. Thousands of persons were being fired from their jobs in government and industry—without a chance to defend themselves and often without knowing the reason—because of baseless suspicions concerning their loyalty. Hollywood celebrities were being blacklisted in the same way. Hundreds of intellectuals who had flirted with Communism during the desperate Depression years were harassed by Congressional investigating committees. Most of the press and other media of news and opinion joined the stampede. Not one public figure of national stature dared to defy the mob spirit. Clearly, it would have been impossible to find an impartial jury for the Rosenberg trial.

There remains the issue of the death sentence.

First, it should be noted that the Rosenbergs were not accused, and even at that time probably could not have been convicted, of treason, for which the Constitution provides a definition and a procedure to protect the defendant. They were charged with conspiracy to commit espionage in wartime, under a law passed during World War I. This law is unusual in two respects: first, it makes no distinctions between enemies and allies as recipients of information; second, it provides a strange set of alternate penalties—imprisonment for up to twenty years, or death. One naturally asks (but apparently few people did ask at the time): "Assuming their guilt, would they have been sentenced to death if they had given the information to any ally except the Soviet Union, or if the trial had taken place in 1945, when the Russians were being hailed as our heroic allies, instead of 1951, when they were being denounced as our most deadly enemies? The answer is "No," and the conclusion follows that the Rosenbergs were the victims, in part, of an unforeseen change in the course of history.

In this connection, the Atomic Energy Act of 1946, in prescribing penalties for the unauthorized transmission of atomic information to foreign countries, stipulated that the death penalty should be imposed only on the recommendation of the jury, in a case when the act was intended to injure the United States. This was the basis of the final appeal, which the Supreme Court by a 6-3 vote refused to hear.

Second, the information that Greenglass claimed to have given does not seem to have been important, and no ranking scientist testified that it was. After all, Greenglass was only a machinist, and the information that he allegedly transmitted concerned only the relatively simple mechanism for triggering the bomb. The only real secret was the method by which the fissionable material was produced; and of this he knew nothing. Yet Judge Kaufman said in imposing the death sentence: "I believe your conduct in putting into the hands of the Russians the A-bomb . . . has already caused, in my opinion, the Communist agression in Korea, with the resultant casualties exceeding fifty thousand and who knows but that millions more of innocent people may pay the price of your treason."

Twenty-two years later, when Soviet technology is not in question, and when Russia is viewed as an enemy only in Pentagon requests for appropriations, this statement (later echoed by President Eisenhower in denying clemency) sounds like the delirious raving of a diseased mind. It can only be explained—but not excused—in terms of the nation's retreat from sanity when confronted with growing Soviet power.

I do not accept the suggestion that the sentence was part of an arrangement with the Justice Department to extort a confession from the Rosenbergs that would have revealed the workings of the entire spy ring of which they were supposed to be a part. Judge Kaufman's conduct of the trial reveals too clearly the genuineness of his fanaticism. But such an offer—commutation of the death sentence in return for a confession—was repeatedly made. Officialdom apparently could not imagine that there might be nothing to confess; nor could it see that it was using a form of torture comparable to the rack and thumbscrew of a savage past. Or perhaps the assumptions was—as it seems to have been in Vietnam when Americans approved or took part in the torture of real or suspected members of the Vietcong—that Communists are not really people.

The Rosenbergs were electrocuted in Sing Sing Prison on June 20, 1953, in the face of world-wide protest, and after last-minute appeals for a stay of sentence, including two to the Supreme Court, had been rejected with unprecedented and indecent haste.

I tell my students, "Never criticize a book that you haven't read"; and therefore I shall say nothing about Mr. Nizer's book. I am willing, however, to state flatly that nobody has a right to an opinion about the Rosenberg case until he has read Invitation to an Inquest. The authors do not absolutely prove that the Rosenbergs were innocent. The whole truth will almost certainly never be known. But no reasonable reader of the Schneirs' work can believe that the Rosenbergs were guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.

My own view is that, guilty or innocent, they were the victims of a bad law, a biased judge, an unscrupulous prosecution, an incompetent defense, a jury that could not imaginably have been impartial, a Supreme Court whose majority shirked its duty and never ruled on the fairness of the trial, and a President who, while possessed of many personal virtues, was intellectually limited and morally insensitive.

The execution of the Rosenbergs was a legal lynching.

Impotency Of The Spirit

By Stephen Seche

I saw Deliverance over the Christmas holidays, and liked it enough to want to see it a second time. So, two weeks ago, I did just that, at the Showplace Cinema, in Greenfield, which is remarkable only because it is such a nice, clean, aspiring western Massachusetts town.

I bother to mention the theater, because this piece is not so much about the movie as it is about that moviehouse, and censorship, and the anger and frustration I feel after being dealt with--and not for the first time--as though I am totally unaware of what goes on around me, completely unconcerned about the relative good or evil of those few things I am aware of, and absolutely impotent to do anything about them, in any case.

Someone, whoever presently holds the cabinet position of Protector of the Public Morals, Film Division, decided that respectable audiences, which presumably are those they conjure up in Greenfield, (and who knows how many other little towns like it), should not be subject to a 20-second scene in Deliverance in which one of the characters is sodomized. So it was chipped. Simple.

Now, I don't think I am a particularly remarkable person. I am only your 1973, garden variety, long-haired young man from a respectable family and middle-class dreams. I am a taxpayer (because I haven't the courage to do otherwise), a registered voter, a son to my father, a puzzle to my older married brothers, and a movie fan.

And just possibly, a raving paranoid. Because I have a recurring feeling that I, and everyone else in America whose backgrounds, temperment, and ambitions are somehow akin to mine, am being constantly manipulated, dehumanized, and intellectually and emotionally sodomized by this world in which we live.

But I guess it's one thing to have it done to you, and another thing entirely to be able to watch it on a movie screen. Even if you choose to. And I admit to having gone freely to the movies that evening, and to having paid my $2.50, and I can only assume that the 40 or 50 others that sat through the movie with me did likewise, and were willing to watch the movie, as crude as it might have been.

Why weren't we allowed to?

Look at it this way. James Dickey writes a novel. He is not even a novelist, he's supposed to be a poet. But he has a story to tell, and it's by no means a pretty story. In fact, it is sometimes a vile, frightening, confusing story. Still, he writes it, and it not only includes murder and deceit, it includes sodomy.

But wait. People like it. Enough, in fact, to make it a best-seller. People like Jon Voight, who I assume liked it, since he appeared in the film, and he even went to Georgetown University, which is not only a venerable institution of Catholic education in our nation's capital, but is almost within shouting distance of the National Shrine of the Blessed Virgin. Not just pervs and creeps, but a lot of regular, decent, people.

And before long, John Boorman, who has made a lot of movies that never even mentioned sodomy, makes a movie out of the novel, and sure enough, the movie is a smash. Even Time magazine thinks so.

So a lot of people see it. And I assume they don't all become raving sex fiends as a result. Just as I assume they don't all buy hunting bows and shoot everyone in sight, or hop in their canoes and risk life and limb trying to traverse their neighborhood rapids.

My father even saw it. He didn't like it, but I would attribute that as much to the fact that Gene Kelly didn't star in it, as anything else. In fact, in his own classic, circumpolar way of coming around to great insight, my father said, "Hell, they could have taken any four guys and made that movie," which, after all, was about the most frightening thing I could think of--that such a nightmare could happen to anyone, and could happen anywhere, not just deep in the Georgia woods.

Good, clean athletic competition? No doubt. But what if someone were to suggest something else, something lewd, and lascivious, something . . . unnatural? Would you be disgusted?

Now, maybe somebody complained. Maybe they were duped into believing it was going to be a Sierra Club film. Maybe they didn't know what "R" stands for in the "code" that is used to rate all films by the Motion Picture Association.

Maybe that's it. Someone's decency was outraged. It's not inconceivable. Mine is outraged every day.

It is outraged by banks that want to know if you have an account with them before they'll let you walk in the front door; by auto mechanics who tell me "it's hard to explain clearly" what's wrong with my car, then charge me twenty-five dollars to work their magic; by waitresses who tell me their section is closed, when actually it's late and they don't want their tables messed up; by fancy Boston restaurants that serve you a drink that tastes like it was mixed at the corner lemonade stand, and then tell you they can't exchange it for you.

By American B-52's that drop their bombs on hospitals; by an American public--of which I am one--that has grown insensitive to things like bombing hospitals; by our television sets, that have us all living our lives from the comfort of our living room chairs; by advertising agencies that latch onto every fresh idea they can, and then feed off it to sell their products.

By people who play power games with the infinitesimal bit of power they have been doled by some boss; by people who never say what they mean, but never quite lie; by people who lie; by myself when I lie.

By the daily occurrence of wrongs, or pains, or deceits that I see or hear about, but am conditioned into feeling totally impotent to do anything about.

By people who have the incalculable nerve to make their living by their neighbor's passivity. Like theater managers who show a censored version of a movie, and don't tell anyone; who don't advertise, don't let on, but just show a cut version on the premise that, either no one will notice, and if anyone does, they'll probably just chalk it up to the belated, and somewhat curious watchfulness of the people in charge.

"Oh. They've cut some of this movie out. Well, it wasn't very much, and it was about sodomy, and that's a very delicate subject, one that's probably better left out of the movies. And if I hadn't seen this film before, I wouldn't even have known the scene was missing. Besides, I'm sure they had a good reason for doing it."

But the difficulty is that I had seen the movie before, and there is no reason on this earth for them to have cut even twenty seconds out of it, and there is even less reason for them not to have admitted it.

And that is the most offensive part of all. The deceit. Not only do we not have the courage at this particular point in our lives to show a man's art in its entirety, we don't even have the courage to admit it.

And I don't know what to do about it.

A magnificent epic on the theme of collaboration and resistance. —Pauline Kael, The New Yorker

An Evening With Buddy Rich: Part II

By Mike Kostek

As he went off, telling how much he liked flying and being on the road in Springfield and Greenfield fifty weeks a year, I realized that he was far more comfortable treating us as hostile nerds, rather that as plain people he might talk to. I also grew awed as I realized that I was in the presence of one of the few true troopers of our times. With his carefully trimmed Prince Valient shag haircut (flecks of grey), acceptable semi-hip knit shirt, perfectly tailored blue dress bell bottoms and solid gold ankh peace medallion (the kind that's been out of style everywhere but Las Vegas for years. I'm no trend-setter, but I'm sure Buddy is very conscious about keeping In Step), he said Show Business Is My Business from top to bottom. Once the kid drumming sensation and bad boy fired from Gene Krupa's Band, this guy had seen a lot. There is no link between the Popular Musics of the 1940's and 1970's except, perhaps, Buddy Rich. He looked tired and haggard. I was sure he was detesting our presence, or at least looked on it as an unpleasant test of his Character, but he let us stay because the Biz sez that the Press can Sell Tix. The make-up men certainly do a good job on Carson-Cavett-Douglas-Papoon shows because Buddy looked much older here. He continued to tell us of touring:

"I don't find flying around the world impossible. I like seeing other countries and I find I can rap very intellectually with other people about other countries, other systems."

As he began telling us that maybe this sytem wasn't the best and confided to us that he was very anti-Nixon, he lit another cigarette (about the fifth in the short time we'd been there) with a match from a matchbook with one of those incredibly pathetic "He Needs Your Help" covers.

Buddy said he didn't know anything about Hollywood going so heavily for Nixon, and said he didn't vote in the election. He was in Europe last November. Absentee ballots?

I got brave and asked him what he thought of the new black jazz (handy label, no?). No, said Buddy, what's that? "Music is music. All I ask is 'Can you play?'

Okay Buddy, you're no bigot, but then Pete stepped in again and somehow they flew off into fighting where jazz came from.

"The roots are black." said Pete.

"How do you know?"

"I've read the theory of black blues."

"We're you there? Maybe the Martians made jazz."

Pete, this time knocked down, then cowed out. I picked up the fight.

"What do you think of people like Elvin Bishop and Tony Williams?"

"Imaginative and marvelous."

"What about them as musicians?"

"I just told you."

"Oh. What about them as drummers?"

"I just told you."

Casting my fate to the wind I pressed on:

"You mentioned Mel Torme, Jack Jones as the 'good vocals', the music you listen to. Don't you think there's a good deal of difference between Elvin Bishop, Miles Davis and Mel Torme?"

"Listen, I said I listened to some jazz too. Besides, Miles Davis is doing the same things Diz (Dizzy Gillespie) did twenty years ago. No originality whatsoever." Oh, really.

I persisted in saying that saying 'new black jazz' was just a handy label, and wasn't there really something different going on there?

"Unless it swings, it's not jazz, at least (at least?) in my opinion. It has to have pulse."

Knowing Buddy had the bout won on points and was threatening a triple knockout, I relented and began some fancy footwork to avoid a k.o. and maybe save some face. More Professional Questions, the kind that Nat Hentoff could ask.

Buddy said he often records live because studios are too cold, and he's never satisfied on record. He scoffed at quad, doubting it was any better than mono: "You don't sit in the band when you see a show. One speaker will do as well as two or four." Sure.

Pete jumped back in the ring and suffered a messy knockout in a fight over booking and The Rolling Stones getting $50,000 a night. Pete did get the early lead when he got Buddy to contradict himself (Five minutes after he denied he was competing with anyone he was telling us how he was competing with a lot of amateurish talent for the audiences), but Buddy got the clincher when Pete backed into a corner on whether he'd pay $25 for seats so Buddy too could be in the $50,000 class. "Come on, don't be a child." We propped Pete up back in the hall.

"I ask for what I'm worth, not what I can get." said Buddy. According to him The Stones are the worst thing in the business because all the promoters lose money paying them $50,000 a show. Okay.

"Why, Sinatra, the greatest entertainer this country has ever produced--the world has ever produced--even he didn't get that much."

Just then some middle-ages man came in and was telling Buddy that he had the last of the great bands and how did he stay in such great shape?

"I hold a first degree black belt in katate."

We gave Buddy the freak handshake and left.

"Thanks for the argument." said Jeff in leaving.

"There was no argument." said Buddy.

Exactly. This humorless prig had withstood our childishness for twenty minutes, but we never got near him.

As Jeff and I were relaxing in the lobby prior to showtime, we were noticing the strange audience Buddy had attracted. Certainly one black was there, but the rest was a good spectrum of the White World, with most looking comfortably rich (Tickets were $3-4-5), which made the few Hips in the crowd look even more enviable. One middle-aged gent, dressed in his posh trench coat, was joking with a friend of his, an Officer of the Law. "Okay officer," he said, collapsing into the cops arms like a lame drunk, "take me to see Ruddy Bich." Thus are headlines born.

We went in and sat down. The band was just arriving on stage, and each of the musicians had his own little Impressive frontpiece (with BR on them) to sit behind. They were all dressed very slickly, hair neatly combed down, matching blue suits with blue blazers. They all were in their twenties and thirties and looked quite timid, awaiting The Man's arrival.

The Man came out to a big hand from the crowd of 400 (the place holds 2000). Buddy looked around and quipped, "The house open yet?" This was the first in a long line of some of the lamest stage patter I've ever heard. Gems like:

"When are they gonna fill the pool?" (he was looking into the orchestra pit).

A jet flew over between one of the numbers and Buddy playfully "shot it down" with his snare. Dint Dint Dint Dint Dint. Thump! went Buddy with his big bass drum to show that it crashed.

"Nice to be back here in Springfield. Gosh, we haven't been back here in a long time, have we?"

"Great audience, great audience."

It was a shock when they launched into their first number (not a song, a "number"), Thelonius Monk's "Straight, No Chaser". It occurred to me as I marveled how intent they were in playing together so insensitively that I should have asked Buddy who did his arranging. After two minutes I didn't want to know, because they had transformed Monk's easy-going, flowing piece into a high intensity, low emotion musical exercise. Everything in Buddy's act was carefully planned, right down to the musicians bowing on cue. I'm sure Buddy selected "Straight, No Chaser" specifically for his opener because it has one riff that can be pounded and pushed along, thus making the audience feel as if they were in on some exciting playing, and an entire evening of same.

Half way through the show I realized that Buddy didn't bother announcing song titles because it really didn't make any difference. The audience didn't care what they played as much as how they played. What the audience wanted was a roaring style and swinging grace that would tell them they were indeed seeing The Big Time.

They got it. Buddy and his seventeen piece threshing machine plowed through their charts like an acre of corn, mowing down every lick. The band tried to give emotional ups and downs, like a plastic run-through of "A Place For Us" but it was trite and corny beyond belief. It didn't matter who arranged Buddy's charts; it would have to sound all the same.

The most telling moment came when the thresher ran across a famous old kernel, and the audience recognized it as something they were Familiar With, so they applauded. They didn't applaud because Buddy's band was doing things with this theme that had never been done before, or even because they were doing anything especially clever. No, they were applauding because they recognized it, and some may have known it was one of Buddy's standards. As the band finished the brief recap of the "West Side Story" theme, a crude but legitimate comparison came to mind. When Alice Cooper, they of the unmusical chaos, played the same brief riff from "West Side Story", it conjured up visions of street fights and grim times on the West Side of New York City, which is what the song is all about. When Buddy played the same thing, it brought out thoughts like: 'Isn't that a pretty song?' and 'It's been quite a while since I've seen that movie.' While all Buddy played was pretty and melodic, "West Side Story" stood out because it was famous, pretty and melodic. All the meaning in the song is lost completely. It's like hearing Andy Williams singing "Imagine". The song gets so mucked up in the transition to the Andy Williams Formula that meaning and emotion are forgotten and it becomes Andy Williams Singing Yet Another Syrupy Peace Song That Sounds Like Every Other Song He's Ever Sung. This has been the flaw in traditional Show Biz since the beginning. I remember Dylan introducing a song as not being "written in Tin Pan Alley. This song was written in America."

You see Buddy, when you use show biz merely to entertain and relax people, you, by definition, wind up with an empty shell. Hollywood found out that it couldn't live in its vacuum, and so did the Big Bands. You can and must bring reality into the arts or else you wind up holding a fake, laughably empty veneer that just won't do. No guts.

Buddy's band can and do play like hell. Each of them is obviously perfectly trained, and exhibits a mastery over the mechanical functions of his instrument. Their trouble lies in the fact that they pay more attention to form than content. They all could play perfectly, but I get the feeling that none of them could play imperfectly with feeling. The notes on their charts were merely little tests for them to demonstrate their skills. The songs really didn't matter that much.

Jeff noticed the piano player who was having a bit of difficulty. The particular piece he was playing included one note that had to be repeated very rapidly. Now it is a Cardinal Rule for any piano player to keep his wrists firm, and play with his fingers and forearms. This guy couldn't get back down fast enough with his arm to play the repeated note when he could've easily played it with his wrist.

So it was that all the material fed into Buddy's Big Machine was ground into something different, something lifeless. Buddy's two drum solos illustrate my point quite well. He is a great drummer, for what he does. His rhythms are complex merely for the sake of being complex; he's stiff, and really lacks rhythm in his general style. Whether the song needs it or not, Buddy's there with some flash. No, he is not the world's best drummer. People like Ed Marimba (Capt. Beefheart), Billy Cobham (Mahavishnu Orchestra) and scads of jazz drummers like Max Roach, Elvin Jones, Tony Williams, Andrew Cirelle, Milford Graves, Beaver Harris and Jimmy Hopps can shut Buddy down.

Inbetween numbers Buddy might do some more stage patter, telling us that they were taking a break because he(heh heh) had to go to the little boys room, or thanking the three favorable reviews of last night's show. "That's pretty good, considering 90% of the critics don't know what they're talking about anyway." Sympathetic applause. "Anyway they were nice reviews and I'd like to thank them. I guess they know Good Music when they hear it." he said as he wiped his face with a Holiday Inn towel. "Anyway you're a great audience, great audience..." Then Buddy flashed the part of his stage personality that showed everyone that he was really a 'tuff' guy after all: "And if you think that's just stage talk, you're wrong cuz I'd tell you if you weren't." Ooooh, the audience squealed at that. There was the star they'd seen on their TV. When Buddy walked out on stage somebody yelled "Where's Cavett?". "I dunno" quipped Buddy.

As I rode back I reflected on the evening. As Buddy was leaving the stage he told the crowd to make sure and catch the Mike Douglas Show he'd taped last week. Talking with Buddy was like climbing hand-over-hand on barbed wire. The smooth parts (Proper Questions) were okay, if a bit dull, but those barbs! Buddy Rich is a man of firm opinions, and that's anyone's right. However I'd never met anyone in my life so cold, acidic, intolerant, humorless and dry as Mr. Rich. Buddy had bombed in Springfield. 300 people had come Tuesday, 400 people Wednesday. It couldn't happen to a nicer dinosaur.

Album Inquest

Derek and the Dominos

Derek and the Dominos
In Concert
RSO SO 2-8800

By Kevin Pelletier

Here it is - another new release by an artist who's been in hiding for about two years. How does he do it? Well, it seems that Eric Clapton the man has very little control over Eric Clapton the public image. Since he's been in a creative slump for so long, Clapton's publicity and business overseers have been trying to keep the man at the top of the Rock pile just about entirely on the basis of his illustrious past. As a result we've already seen two anthology albums; History of Eric Clapton on Atlantic and Eric Clapton At His Best on Polydor. The Polydor LP is my personal favorite because it gets away from the "Clapton is God" period far enough for one to see the man as he wishes himself to be seen, namely a humble, dedicated musician, no more no less. I've even seen yet a third anthology with some obscure, lesser known cuts.

What's it all for? To keep the Clapton legend alive, that's what. Those wizard promo men figure that anything with the artist's name on the cover is enough to keep us content. Until this album came out my patience had all but gone. Some what sheepishly though, I will admit, that this new, double-LP release will keep me rockin' until the supposed second solo LP is out. That's saying alot.

Recorded live at the Fillmore East (where else?) circa July 1970, the album offers roughly an hour and a half of that late, great rock ensemble known as Derek and the Dominos. The album starts off in style with "Why Does Love Got To Be So Sad", one of only three cuts off Layla, surprisingly enough. Clapton turns in an adequate vocal and his Stratocaster rambles widly over the background the Dominos provide. "Got To Get Better In A Little While" is one of two previously unrecorded songs and is also one of the album's showcases for Clapton's uniquely inimitable playing style. A funky Sly- style intro leads to some Social Consciousness lyrics that tend to detract from the performance somewhat. But as usual Eric delivers a convincing vocal. He's no great singer but he always manages to convey the emotional content of a song. The Deminos here, as always, supply a basic yet very solid framework for Clapton to build on.

Side Two opens with a seventeen-minute version of "Let It Rain", one of Clapton's better compositions. The vocals are a bit ragged but effective just the same. Jim Gordon gets in an extremely long solo in the middle that's vaguely reminiscent of "Toad", Ginger Baker's supreme ego trip. Sure, Gordon can cook, but we want the man on the guitar, so who needs it? As Gordon's solo ends the rest of the band come in at a frenzied pace, and the cut concludes with the usual crash-bang ending. Must have been a great live performance. "Presence Of The Lord", from the Blind Faith days, is virtually unchanged, most of the other cuts being vehicles for long extended solos. Here Clapton just wanted to make a short, simple statement, as he delivers a very effective, heartfelt vocal. At 6:33 this the shortest cut but it says more about Eric Clapton than I or any other writer could put into words.

"Tell The Truth" starts off Side Three on a disappointing note. It's the same mediocre song it always was, as Derek and his mates seem bored to death with those same three chords after the vocal is out of the way. Clapton makes several efforts to salvage the cut but it's no use. "Bottle Of Red Wine", the least known of the "old" material, gets a lively, rockin' treatment. Here, as in other cases throughout the two LP's, Clapton hints at the lead he set down on the studio version but doesn't repeat himself in the least. A fine cut.

"Roll It Over", the other "new" song, kicks off Side Four. It too is strongly suggestive of Sly-style funk and of the brand of rhythm and blues the Dominos were weaned on. Things get off the ground slowly but tighten up quickly, as the vocal enters. Eventually, however, the band seems to be playing "Tell The Truth" all over again, and the cut's length makes it fair at best. "Blues Power", Clapton's claim to rock n' roll fame, sounds as if he didn't really feel like doing it but felt obliged to. The intro sounds like a self-parody to me, and Whitlock's background piano work only serves as a reminder that Leon Russell played on the studio version. These factors, plus the worst vocal of the whole shebang, combine to win for this one the dubious award of the Throwaway Cut. Oh well, nobody's pefect, not even God.

The gem of the album is, not surprisingly, a blues number, "have You Ever Loved A Woman". This is what I was waiting for all along. This is the showstopper, the place where Clapton turns it all on full force, the cut that's guaranteed to restore any lost faith or quiet any second doubts. Hendrix's "Red House" on Hendrix In The West comes to mind here, both cuts representing a return to the beginning, to the music that drew each of them forth into the mainstream of contemporary creativity. Clapton is still Mr. Blues Guitar Supreme as far as I'm concerned. A sterling display of raw, intensely distilled emotion. Thus, Clapton leaves us as we have always known him, a white boy who's got the blues.

Neil Young

(Journey Through The Past – Neil Young (Reprise 2XS 6480)

By Steve Feld

Are you ready for Neil Young, filmmaker?

Journey Through The Past is subtitled "the original soundrack recordings (of) a film by Neil Young". Slip it on the turntable and sure enough, it's Neil Young going through the whole auteur trip, with a strong undercurrent of egocentricity. The cast includes all the incarnations of Young's life as a rock and roll star: Buffalo Springfield, Crosby, Stills, Nash & Young, soloing, and with the Stray Gators, the group that backed him on Harvest. Within its covers (the shoddiest packaging since Beefheart's Clear Spot) are two records of autobiographical and personal mish-mash that has little meaning on record and probably less on film. The film has been called a "documentary/fantasy concerned with Neil's feelings about drugs, religion, and other things" and it will be out sometime within the next month or two.

It's interesting that Young thinks people are actually wondering about his views on "drugs, religion, and other things" and he feels it necessary to direct a film about them. This record will diminish anyone's appetite for the film because it is a pretentious, self-exploitative pice of trash that few, if any, will feel comfortable with. A description goes as follows:

Side one of this four-sided pickle opens up with the host from "The Hollywood Palace" (Tony Martin, I am told. Who he?) giving an introductory rap about Buffalo Springfield to wit: "They're called Buffalo Springfield because their new record has made enough money to buy Buffalo and half of Springfield!" Everybody laugh. The group proceeds to lip-sync "For What It's Worth", "Mr. Soul", and "Rock & Roll Woman" in trashy TV mono; subjective sound as Neil would call it no doubt. (Concerning that introduction, at one of his Boston concerts some time ago, Neil told of the time Buffalo Springfield first played Boston second-billed under the Strawberry Alarm Clock! One of his fringe jackets got stolen and the road manager had to get back to L.A. or else be arrested.) So much for Buffalo Springfield; the twelve-minute version of "Bluebird" remains in the archives.

The second-half of side one is dedicated to Crosby, Stills, Nash & Young in concert. All of the cuts, "Find The Cost of Freedom", "Ohio", and "Southern Man" are available on Four Way Street and the only thing notable here is the seguing of the final note of "Freedom" with the opening note of "Ohio".

The bulk of the album is found on the closing minutes of side two and the complete of side three, where Young, David Crosby, Graham Nash and the Stray Gators work on and record "Alabama" and "Words", the two heavy-metal rockers from Harvest. "Alabama" is moderately interesting as Young, Crosby and Nash rehearse the harmonies. Crosby is amazing; talking his head off, laughing, showing incredible enthusiasm and animation: "That's a good one! I know that one." he brags, talking about the particular vocal pattern to be used in the bridge. This makes way for the chorus used in the final product. That fades out under some group of geeks singing a chorus of "God Bless America", which was probably taken off an old radio show. Fade that out after one verse and make way for David Crosby again as he gives a stoned cosmic rap as only he knows how: "Most of the people that are taking the hard line against us (read "hippies") are firmly convinced that they are the last defenders of (gasp)...a civilization! I think they see themselves as the Roman Senate perched among the ruins, man, defending it against the barbarian hoards. The last stronghold of Mother, Home, and Apple Pie and they're FULL OF SHIT!" A typical Nixonese excercise in rhetoric follows where he promises us everything (taken from his first inaugural speech, I believe). This lasts for a scant few seconds while whining in the background, and coming up fast, is the final chorus of "Alabama", totally drowning out Nixon and ending the song. It should be heard once.

The whole of side three is devoted to "Words"; the same version as on Harvest only in its original, unedited form. The music stops once while Neil tells his musicians just how he wants them to play: "On this part let's, uh, really break it there....Remember we used to have it really staccato with nothing hanging? You know just go...." and the music continues for sixteen minutes of mediocre, sloppy jamming; not everybody's cup of tea.

Side four starts with Young talking with some local dude from down South, asking him to explain God, which he does in his own sort of way, using the term "Relativity Invitation", all of which confuses Neil. This makes way for a church choir, would you believe, singing Handel's "Messiah" followed by an orchestral piece, the theme from a film, King of Kings, followed by the only new song by Neil Young (remember him?) called "Soldier", which is no great shakes, followed by the final piece, an old Beach Boys instrumental song used, no doubt, for its title, "Let's Go Away For Awhile".

By Gary Gomes

Personnel: Tony Banks - Organ, Mellotron, Piano, Electric piano, 12 string guitar, Voices; Steve Hackett - Electric Guitar, 12 string Guitar, and 6 string solo guitar; Richard MacPhail - equipment & stage sound (sound friend). Also starring Guy and Paul; Phil Collins - Drums, Voices, assorted Percussion; Peter Gabriel - Lead Voice, Flute, Bass Drum, Tambourine, Oboe; Michael Rutherford - Mass, (organ) Bass Pedals, 12 string Guitar, Voices, Cello.

Charisma records, whether you know it or not, is a rather famous label in England. They're responsible for Emerson, Lake and Palmer, and a variety of other musically progressive groups (As far as "progressive rock" goes, England is one of the most sophisticated countries about. With notable exceptions, among them the Mothers, Captaln Beefheart and His Magic Band, and certain of the original San Francisco groups – the Dead, and the Airplane – progressive hard rock is all but dead in this country. And certain of those groups who did once show creativity are dead now.). Genesis follows pretty much the traditions set down – in one way or another – by groups like the Nice, Jethro Tull, King Crimson, Family, Procol Harum, the Groundhogs, the early Small Faces, and other groups too numerous to mention within the space of one article. Even Zappa works his way into the group's influences.

Genesis started out as a group of songwriters in 1966, and were "destined" to "make it" (as they say in the biz) but they flunked out. Three years of songwriting later, they formed their group anew, and broke through, partially due to the fact that they were, by that time, and also partially due to Peter Gabriel's onstage histrionics (a British press writer called him the best showman in England, better than either Roger Chapman of Family or Mick Jagger of you-know-who). They made an album called "Nursery Crymes", and became very successful, and pleased everyone in the British musical press (which is far more influential than its American counterpart. Peter Gabriel, flying across the stage with the grace of a gazelle (Mackenzie?), tearing off drum heads as he leapt, made quite a visual impression, and the group's superior instrumental skills established them in the forefront of Britlsh rock.

On "Foxtrot", the group ranges from superb musical productions, and even their most pretentious lyrics, and their use of the mellotron (the blasted instrument should be abolished, because, it is, after all, just tape recordings of various musical instruments – a poor Moog and a superior organ, without any of the organ's redeeming qualities – it makes a poor solo instrument, and it comes across as a cheap imitation – sounds like a Muzak machine), tend to come across better than the usual claptrap, and that, at least, is something.

As you may or may not have guessed from the name of the group, they are of the apocalyptic group in British rock, the only popular group doing so with any measure of sales success (in the United States contingency) being Emerson, Lake, and Palmer with the "Tarkus" LP. Now, "Tarkus", if you remember the story line, was about the animals(mutations) that took over after the great Nuclear Disaster. But the lyrics that dealt with the story lended themselves to what happened before.

Genesis take a somewhat different approach. In their side-long suite "Supper's Ready", they start off with an acoustic guitar segment to add to the air of something of a very homey atmosphere, then leads into a couple alone at home, declaring their contentment(pretty hokey, huh?), then moves into descriptions of bureaucrats, which then leads to the battle. The organ takes on the character of a battle cry, proudly calling the idiots forward into death.

Zipping into a smouldering little instrumental passage between organ and guitar, it breaks abruptly into "Apocalypse in 9/8, a jaunty little sojourn into traditional (and not so traditional – like, out of a Thor comic book) visions of the --(trumpet flourish) THE END OF THE WORLD! Yeah, that's right. Then a brief return to the original theme – the home, and then a march to the new Jerusalem, after the end. The lyrics in both the segments are

New Record Shop

By Ken Sulin

As you probably know Listening Post has closed its doors once and for all, Lafayette may soon follow in terminating any type of record sales leaving only Dangling Conversation to monopolize the Amherst area in the album trade- but wait a minute. There comes our way a new store offering what appears to be the best of any record selections yet, called quite appropriately, The New Record Shop. It's located down there in the Carriage Inn complex and hosts an array of contemporary music coupled with the best prices in town.

The New Record Shop is owned, Managed and run by two former L.P. employees, namely Tom Mitchelland Donna Harler. They've combined their talents and put together a shop featuring classical, jazz, blues, and rock albums of every nature in fact the classical section becomes the only remaining one of its kind since the closing of Listening Post. In addition The New Record Shop is bestowed by a wide variety of import albums, ones that you've never seen before and probably won't ever see again.

Mitchell informs us that Listening Post wasn't able to obtain all popular labels however he has had few if any problems thus far, as a matter of fact The New Record Shop can order any album currently not in their stock and have it to you by the week's end. What few people realize upon entering the store is that record albums are not their only product for the NRS also presents a long line of record care devices and a complete inventory of soul, country and rock 45's. Future plans include the possibility of sheet music sales and posters.

Donna Harler and Tom Mitchell have opened the New Record Shop and it appears to be the best yet in the area.

Currently there are in excess of three thousand albums in stock and more coming in on a daily basis. The business has been exceedingly successful to this point and can only get better in time.

If You're not quite sure what you're looking for, Donna, with a Master's in music and being a voice instructor, can help in any classical references while Tom, between Ballantine Ales, is a complete authority on the rock and blues aspects.

The selections range from Herbie Hancock to Bela Bartok, from Rita Coolidge to Fred McDowell, continually enabling you to find any records from the early fifties or sixties right up to present day releases. If perhaps you'd like to hear a particular album before making a purchase just ask and 9 times out of ten the preview will be yours.

Amherst finally has a worthwhile record store offering easy prices and saturated selections, what more could you ask for? So if you're looking for an album walk over to the New Record Shop at the Carriage Inn, listen to WBCN from Boston filing the air and simply browse around.

vivid, although they might be a bit embarassing, but the most impressive thing about this side is that it is a very well constructed composition, and tries for a lot. Gabriel does all of the voices with great conviction, and power, and if the inside cover is correct, he also has his head shaved in the middle, ala a Mohican (I believe that was the tribe) Indian in reverse (Is this a record review or a fashion show? Jeezus...), so the gentleman is just a little bizarre by most norms. I should have warned you this was going to be a strange record review...

Well, on to side one (see? I told you this would be bizarre) "Watcher in the Skies" is an excellent composition once it gets past the mellotron idiocy, and, once again, an affinity for Marvel Comics and John Keel's books on strange monster sightings and parallel dimensions (Strange Creatures from Time and Space and Our Haunted Planet available from Fawcett books; only 75¢ each) is in evidence.

"Timetable" is wretched and pretentious, and "Can-Utility and the Coastliners" is fairly good, although both seem to be wasted exercises in lyric writing.

It is "Get 'Em Out By Friday" however, which is the real hallmark of this album, and a direction I'd like to see the group go into more. Effective lyrics based around movements. The song is another attack on fat cats and bureaucrats (these boys have definite anti-social leanings). Suffice it to say that the group succeeds in this one 9 minute album what it took Jethroo Tull both "Aqualung" and "Thick as a Brick to Do. And on that note, I hereby take my leave of your minds.

Kinks

ALBUM (Reprise MS 2127)

By David Sokol

After Kink Kronikles, it's hard to believe that Reprise still has enough previously unreleased material to comprise another album. They do, and it's a damn good one. The songs on The Great Lost Kinks Album were recorded before the "Lola" resurge to popularity, generally during the time span between Something Else and Arthur. The songs here epitomize what I love about the Kinks, satire, social comment, and humor.

Ray Davies has gone through at least three distinct musical periods. The first was marked by a long string of respectable hits featuring the raunchy sound as typified in "You Really Got Me" and "Till the End of the Day", however the real musical sophistication, (many call it genius) became apparent during the second period around the time of "Sunny Afternoon" and "Waterloo Sunset". About this time, brother Dave started writing songs of his own; "Death of a Clown" is a classic, and "Strangers" is as moving a King's song as there ever was. Marked by their move to RCA Records, the third Kinks era is now in progress, exemplified by the studio cuts on the disappointing Everybody's in Show Biz.

The songs on The Great Lost Kinks Album are from the second period. Several tunes from the unreleased Dave Davies solo album are finally included on this record. The songs themselves are infectious and catchy, much like those on Village Green Preservation Society. Side Two, especially, is filled with gems. "When I Turn Off the Living Room Light" opens the side.

Your nose may be bulbous,
Your face may be spotty,
Your skin may be wrinkled and tight
We don't feel as ugly as we really are
When we turn off the living room light.

What a way to tell someone that it's time to make love. "The Way Love Used to Be" is as hauntingly beautiful as ever a song was. It, like "God's Children" on Kronikles was originally part of the soundtrack to the film Percy. "I'm Not Like Everybody Else" has long been a favorite of mine, with Dave Davies singing a song that even Ayn Rand would sympathize with. "This Man He Weeps Tonight" is one of Dave's finest and most sensitive songs. Nevertheless, self-proclaimed Kink Kronikler, John Mendelsohn has the right idea in sensing the Byrdish quality here. The other songs are good, if not very good. In the few days that I've had this record, it has gotten far more play than I ever gave Show Biz. The songs capture a 1969 innocence which is nowhere to be found today. What a shame.

An Extraordinary Achievement

By Alfred Kazin

Marcel Ophuls's "Le Chagrin et la Pitie" (The Sorrow and the Pity), a documentary film of France under the Nazi occupation, runs four hours and twenty minutes. This was not too long for me and the rapt, racked audience the night I saw it at the New York Film Festival. Though the period the film covers is at most five years, Nazism has so occupied and embittered our minds - those for whom it has more and more become the central yet most mystifying event of the 20th century - that it hardly seems 31 years since France was defeated and occupied.

Yet Nazism in general, Nazism and its victims, Nazism and its collaborators, is also the obsession and grief not only of those whose youth was stamped by it, but of those now actually or professionally young. Their sense of the 20th century, whether they know it or not, is dominated by totalitarianism and the specter of its indescribable, incalculable cruelty. Don't ever belive people who say they didn't or don't "know" what was going on under Hitler. Fear blots out knowledge.

Yet, despite this continued obsession, this understandable fear, the everlasting mystery to all generations of just why the Nazis, their agents and sympathizers, were so improbable but extreme, books - whether in the form of history or fiction or all the counterfeit forms of either that make best sellers for a season - have not been able to present the actual effect of Nazism on the lives, faces, minds of the many who lived with it. Books, even when their authors are not very intelligent, are always more "serious" than films - i.e., more linear, more logical, more intellectual. Books obey that supposed mind of God which has always been intellectual man's idea of order.

But films are made to communicate. And though a camera dwelling on a face, a street, a wedding party, takes in more than the orderly processes of the mind can handle, all that raw footage is so cunningly edited, cut, dubbed, spliced, voiced, synchronized, music-filled, that the effect of communication, instant effect on the audience, is obviously at variance with what the camera cannot help dwelling on in the shot of a face, of an actual street, of the unsynchronized faces at a wedding party. The final product is a fascinating hodge-podge, unresolved - often fortunately - in a way that no book can afford to be. But films are graphic, they are on the surface, they present. And one terrible effect of Nazism is that though the pain is everlasting, the cruelty still seems too improbable for books, just real enough - when caught in the flesh - for film.

Four hours and twenty minutes are not too long for me to look at the aging faces of those telling their individual stories now, those who in 1942, 1943, 1944, were resistance fighters in the hands of the Nazified French milice, or Jewish children, or French peasants in the underground who were betrayed by a neighbor and sent to Buchenwald, or a German Army captain in Clermont-Farrand, or a Nazi counter-espionage agent, or a Nazi expert in French economic affairs.

What Marcel Ophuls and his crew, to begin with, have so amazingly captured for interviews are so many of the significant leaders and significant types - Pierre Mendès-France, Anthony Eden talking a fast, thoroughly British French, Emmanuel d'Astier de la Vigerie, founder of the "Liberation" movement; Georges Lamirand, former "minister for youth" under Petain; General Walter Warlimont, adjutant to the Supreme Command of the Wehrmacht; Jacques Duclos, head of the clandestine French Communist party; the aristocratic French Nazi Christian de la Maziere, who fought in Russia with the Waffen S.S.; General Spears, liaison between Churchill and DeGaulle, a marvelous man with a face that all too clearly has seen and meditated on everything that both the British and the French went through.

For me, surely for most in the spellbound audience, but above all for the people on the screen, telling their stories now, everything pertaining to the occupation of all Europe is still, in 1971, a thing of passionate breathtaking emotion. History, this history above all, has made our individual lives more intense. A tension is created, between the people on the screen and the audience, between the audience and its memories and private fears, that gives certain anecdotes and confessions in the film the effect of explosion.

The voices in 1970 are often slow, hesitant, old - lots of water under the bridge between the Petainiste youth leader, Lamirand, who in newsreels of the period is a sleek fast-talking leader, but interviewed in 1970 looks and sounds an amiable fool. Two aged lycee teachers don't seem to know how many of their students and colleagues were rounded up, or that a memorial tablet on the wall refers to 1939-1945, not 1914-1918. The camera focuses on the tablet and shows them up. Then there is the amazing story of Denis Rake, the English secret agent. With simple dignity Rake in the film says that he is a homosexual, and he says that he probably became a British agent in occupied France to show that he was as manly as other men. And he goes on to say-no novel would have been content with this but in the film it is enough - that he lived with a German officer during the war and ended the relationship only because he was afraid that it might keep him from doing his duty to England.

With even greater impact Pierre Mendès-France recounts in his unhurried, always considered way, how, because he was a Jew and had served in the Popular Front government under Leon Blum, he was imprisoned by the Pétain regime as a "deserter". He managed to escape from his cell and to scale the prison wall only to find that the street below him was not clear. A young man was reportedly urging a girl to go to bed with him, and the girl was taking a very long time to make up her mind.

Mendès-France is in a sense the "hero" of this film because he is so obviously a man whose experiences have not got the better of him. His is the unwounded and unposturing face on the screen, especially by comparison with Lavai's son-in-law, René de Chambrun, who, whether he knows it or not (and why shouldn't he?), is lying in his teeth when he portrays his odious, rat-faced father-in-law as a "savior" of the French from the most extreme depredations of the Nazis. The biologist and writer Dr. Claude Levy, recounting the round-up of Paris Jews, says that the French police, when requested by the Gestapo to bring in all Jews over 16 for deportation, in an excess of zeal also rounded up 4,000 children. While the Germans were trying to cope with this unexpected "administrative" problem, the Protestant Pastor Bougner appealed to Laval, who replied, "It's of no importance. I am practicing prophylaxis." Not one of these children survived.

In the film Dr. Levy goes on to say: "France collaborated. It is the only European country which collaborated. The others signed armistices, capitulated. This is the only country in Europe which adopted laws which on a racialist level went even further than the Nuremberg laws, since the French racialist criteria were even stricter than the German. France was covered with concentration camps: Lurs, Avgeles, Rivesaites, Drancy."

Ophuls's film, intended for French television, was kept off the air because it tells the unpalatable truth that France was largely Pétainiste, and that most of the French were indifferent to the struggles of the Resistance and the deportation of the Jews. So far, the film has been shown in only one Paris movie theater, but has been seen by many thousands of people. The lines of people patiently waiting for many hours to get in have been an extraordinary sight, and as Mendès-France himself commented, the great number of young people on line has been especially moving.

When I saw the film here in New York, I was struck by the almost painful attention of so many people around me who had clearly been born after 1945. The Nazi era is a throbbing wound for those not alive during the period because, as any teacher in contact with the young knows, their "nihilism" covers up a good deal of fear of those who were alive then and helped make the period what it was. The young understand better than we who lived through the war - and who will never recover from it - that human cruelty, human vanity, egotism, selfishness, often express themselves most disgustingly in the form of "national" ideals, as "love of country". One hundred eighty seven denunciations of colleagues were sent to the Nazi-French police by French physicians. The peasant Louis Grave, sent to Buchenwald on the testimony of a neighbor, says movingly in the film that he knows now who his betrayer was but doesn't want revenge, for that would put him in the same "category".

But what happened to so many Frenchmen between 1940-1945 was most often done in the name of "France". Maurice Chevalier is shown on the screen first collaborating, then apologizing; Danielle Darrieux and other movie stars are shown going to Germany to make films. The nightclubs in Paris are shown doing a roaring business while resistance fighters were being tortured in the cellars of the Gestapo. Pétain announces in an old newsreel that he was giving "France the gift of my person."

France was betrayed by many Frenchmen in the name of "France", and the mean personal jealousies and vendettas behind these betrayals, the sometimes still unbelievable sadism, hardness, murderousness, all expressed themselves as love of country. It is recounted in the film that some patriots tore out the eyes of resistance fighters, put cockroaches into the empty sockets, and then sewed up the eyelids. Books do not and cannot explain such viciousness. It belongs only to the mystery of the human heart, that most untrustworthy organ. But the "heart" does not explain anything either. There are no explanations. But for a moment, in 1971, we can look at a face. For an instant, only for that, it tells us - in the darkenss of the theater - what people went through. What happened, what will dwell forever in our minds, and what will perhaps never be understood is that people can be this bad. Then others, of necessity, have to fight them - and sometimes never get over that.

"Sandbox" And Streisand Are Irresistable

By Bob Nesti

Up The Sandbox

Written for the screen by Paul Zindel, from the novel by Anne Richardson Roiphe; directed by Irvin Kershner; starring Barbra Streisand.

Pauline Kael has written that Barbra Streisand is "a complete reason for going to a movie, as Garbo was" and her latest film Up The Sandbox is a constant joy. It has a resilliant joy which transforms the fantasy world of a troubled New York housewife into a delightful piece of self-analysis. Barbra plays Margaret Reynolds, the wife of an up-and-coming Columbia University professor, who finds herself three months pregnant and troubled by her role as wife and mother. She teeters between all out resentment of her harried and mundane domestic scene and a healthy acceptance of motherhood as a viable and fulfilling lifestyle. The film opts out for the latter alternative, and has subsequently been denounced as an anti-feminist tract in which Barbra Streisand has been an unwilling accomplice. The criticism tends to ignore the film's own persuasive logic. Barbra is not meant as some superwoman of the movement, leave that routine for Jane Fonda; she's a sensuous, vibrant, intelligent woman who works her own therapy through a series of wacky fantasies. They occur in the film almost imperceivably and make it a great deal of fun. Director Irving Kershner has a brash knack for wacky comedy and makes the divergent themes congeal through sheer exuberance. He has a firm sense of humor and a fresh visual style. Few young, American directors compose a film as well as Kershner and few directors have such a beautiful subject to work with as Barbra Streisand; the combination is irresistable.

Margaret begins the film with a doctor's confirmation of her third pregnancy and the news fulfills her deeper fears. Although she lives comfortably in a west-side walk-up apartment and Paul, her husband, appears set for a meteoric rise at Columbia, another child will only lead to further complications. She decides to keep the news from her husband while she decides on a coherent plan of action. Paul's quick success worries Margaret: she's afraid it will estrange him and he will become something of a cocktail party Cassanova while she wastes away in the kitchen. Her first fantasy conforms this reasoning when she imagines Paul having an affair with his attractive research assistant. Later in the park her housewife friends articulate their frustrations as if they were confessing to a reporter from Ms. Magazine and this upsets Margaret further. She appears nurtured for her anger. The social and historical tie-ins rely heavily on conventional connections, and given this conditioned awareness Margaret would be a dolt not to rebel. Her first long dream places her firmly with the forces of upheaval; it's an encounter with Fidel Castro in which she strongly denounces his cries for feminine militarinism in favor of the stronger, humane benefits of motherhood. Throughout Up The Sandbox the maternal role is viewed as Margaret's chief inspiration. She sees in children a radiance and innocence which can be nurtured to fullness, care and warmth. Toward the end of the film Margaret dreams of escaping through her a ghoulish abortion clinic to glide on a hospital gurney through a playground filled with children. Her final decision to have the child reflects a confirmation of these stronger values in her mind.

Her fantasies sometime take the form of neat red herrings, as if Kershner wanted to complicate Margaret's confused state. The film slides into a black revolutionary scheme to blow up the Statue of Liberty in which Margaret plays an important part. Kershner directs this sequence in a mock "Mission: Impossible" style which plays on the suspense while sharply parodying the genre. The film is filled with these wonderfully inventive moments which seem detached from Margaret's immediate problem, but finally fit in the schematic whole quite nicely. Margaret uses each fantasy the same way a logician might approach each assumption in a proof. She weighs each value before making a final conclusion. One negative value she considers is her mother, a full-bodied caricature of Middle Class Jewish suburbia. Margaret fervently rebels this woman's insistance that Paul move his family to an adjacent suburban lot and live a placcid and anemic existance. She frustrates Margaret to a point that she dreams of stuffing the older woman's face in an anniversary cake. It's another very funny bit of therapy and culminates the film's most ingeneous designed scene in which Kershner merges super-eight home movies with 35 mm technique to portray the loud vacuousness of the family gathering. He has an imaginative way with each sequence-they build with their own casual and independent logic. Up The Sandbox is an extremely well-thought out film, despite all its fervent drive and ecletic style. Each fantasy eventually works as an imput in Margaret's problem solving process and leads to a clear, perceptive resolution. After a funny bit with breast expansion at a cocktail party, a bizarre African journey, and a nightmarish trip to an abortion clinic, Margaret tells Paul she's pregnant while they ride a carousel in the park. It's a joyous moment which reflects her final realization of her freedom of choice. The film sounds like a feminized Walter Mitty, but its heroine is more a spiritual sister to Fellini's Juliet. Both these women act out of bored frustration and both find a peculiar peace in their fantasies.

Director Kershner and scriptwriter Paul Zindel work off Anne Richardson Roiphe's novel with a clear eye at the talents of Barbra Streisand. She has never been more beautiful in a film and has never given such a subdued and resonant performance. The marquee should read "Streisand acts", for clearly her Margaret is a more finely sketched, well-thought facet of this performer's overwhelming talent. As Ms. Kael also observed it is doubtful that there's a better camera subject in American movies today than Barbra Streisand. She is, like Garbo, a natural screen personality. The skilled professionals who wrote, photographed, and directed this film clearly intended it to showcase the unique comic and dramatic capabilities of its star--they do that and more. Paul Zindel writes dialogue with exhilerating ease. It's a wonderfully written script filled with comic punches and scatterbrained starts and stops. Even detractors of the film find it difficult to criticize Irvin Kershner's direction. His sense of timing is sharp, and his characterizations are warm, never bitter as in the similar situations portrayed in Frank Perry's Diary Of A Mad Housewife or Otto Preminger's Such Good Friends. Best of all his handsome visual design. Many directors lack an aesthetic perception of framing an image; either they look lacklustre or homely, or too pretty-pretty.

A few years ago Kershner made an often delightful but uneven satire about the mental breakdown of a successful writer called A Fine Madness. He subsequently made the equally uneven Flim Flam Man and the highly tauted, but little seen domestic drama Loving. All his films concern themselves with bruised, frustrated lives. In Up The Sandbox he resolves some of these frustrations with a spunk and intelligence which clearly indicates his best work is yet to come. It is difficult, then, to understand the rabid criticism this film has received in the press. Many critics have been disturbed with its final statement, others with the specific meanings of the fantasies, and nearly all detractors condemn its lack of social consciousness. The film invites such criticism, but I have a feeling that most of these critics were attempting to watch a different film than Up The Sandbox. It's ridiculous to expect a domestic comedy about a maildy anxious housewife to sound off like an omnipotent Everywoman, despite all its social reverberations. Presuppositions often influence a critic's perception of a film and this one was probably canned by most detractors before the first reel concluded. But a film of this much invention and exuberance deserves not to be placed on the bottom of someone's ten worst list because it doesn't wear its social consiousness on its sleeve.

Note:

A number of typographical errors and ommissions were found in the two film reviews in last Friday's edition, but one printer's error in Brian Dailey's review of Deliverance seriously altered the plot line of the film. As printed the synopsis went as follows: "While traveling alone, Drew, upset by burying the body, suddenly tumbles out of the canoe without his life-jacket." The italicized "alone" in the above quote should have read "along." - Editor

The Auteur Critic: His Time Has Come

By Jim Holdsworth

Poor Richard's has commissioned me to compile an auteur study on a trilogy of Randy Shwartz's finest works. While many of the less cultured, anti-intellectual, boors, of our society refer to this great art form as; "skin flicks," I remain secure in my knowledge that they are truly free expressionism with deep symbolic overtones. I proceeded on my task by immersing myself in all of the literature available on this talented man.

His career began in 1961, when he appeared in They Loved With Their Boots On and later, Wearing Spurs In The Saddle. Soon he discovered that his true talent lay on the other side of the camera, and a director was born. After only two years in his new role, he was established as the greatest erotic symbolist of them all.

At first he does not seem an impressive figure, standing a little over 4'2", but as one realizes the wit of his green eyes, the intellegence of his large lips, and the magnificence of his nose, you cannot help but be in awe of his presence. He commands the set, storming about in dark glasses, riding pants and a beret, in his hand, a megaphone and crop, cleverly satirizing the directors who would strive to outshine him.

Shwartz has gathered a troupe of young men and women working their way through college, and withdrawn to his island off Norway, where they perfect the films, that the whole worth breathlessly awaits. While his biggest grossers are My Seventh Squeal and Citizen Came, this study will deal with his three most critically acclaimed films.

I Can Feel It Coming, the first of our trilogy, concerns an American GI returning from Viet Nam. He has developed a deep psychological wound which causes him to become flacid at the wrong times. Attempts to cure him include new positions with his wife, a trip to the doctor, a book of lewd pictures, fellatio with a prostitute (who, unable to get an ejaculation out of him, gallantly refuses to be paid) and an orgy with the neighbors. In short, everything except tobasco sauce. His cure finally comes when his wife helps his rape an oriental girl who's delivering some hashish.

During the screening, I had been unable to grasp the underlying message of this film. There was the obvious statement on the cruelty of war, as seen in the soldier's plight, but I could not clarify that extra brilliance that I sensed. Perhaps this was due to the surroundings. I had arrived expecting to see the audience full of tomorrow's promise, but instead was horrified to find it filled with the dregs of Amherst society. They were ill-mannered and frightfully disrespectful. Many made repulsive noises and shouted obscenities such as: "Here we are at the 19th hole!" I was mortified to realize that many clapped transgressions. Not only were they tolerated, they were solicited.

Once home, I again pondered the film's message, and only then did I come to understand it's full impact. The soldier is obviously symbolic of the President of the United States. As the nation becomes more impotent in it's involvement, it is soon apparent that rapid withdrawal is not the solution. Many cures are tried, but few are chosen. I was dumbfounded at the eloquence of Randy Shwartz's statement.

I had expected sub-titles, and was surpirsed to find the film dubbed into English. This must have proved quite easy, as very few lines were spoken, and also quite necessary, as it is most difficult to write out a groan. Another surprise was the use of music. The title song, "I Can Feel It Coming," (which com-prizes all of the lyrics) was a masterful touch, setting the tone for the entire piece.

Waiting for my second screening, some weeks later, I nearly died at the sight of the rabble that groped down the aisles. There were bepimpled boys with grotesque, gum chewing dates, a scraggily older couple, clusters of high school boys and several rowdy fraternities. Turning my head to either side, I observed a few degenerate derelicts in the back corners. I later was to learn that they were something of a legend, coming every week.

As the program began, I felt rather insulted to be forced to sit through Woody Woodpecker and Chilly Willy cartoons, but they ended soon. The feature presentation was Dark Dreams and I frankly feel that it is the finest of the trilogy. It told the story of a honeymooning couple who are trapped in an old mansion with a hallucinatory-causing witch, and her three henchpersons. The most controversial scene takes place when the groom opens a door, and for four minutes, watches a belly dancer in stop-action. Many critics believe that this is intended to satarize American pro football coverage, but I have concluded that it is actually a magnificent comment on today's destruction of our temporal matrix. My favorite scene is the one where the groom and a buxom henchperson roll on the floor, squirting each other with canned whipped cream. Igor Shwartz is here delivering a stern lecture on the evils of waste in an industrial society.

The overall message of the film can easily be found by allowing the witch to represent the ecological crisis. One gasps at the floundering of a civilization on the throes of destruction. One nearly weeps, as he realizes the condition of our plight, as brought out in this great epic.

After the conclusion, I resolved to embark on several interviews, to accurately gauge the audiance reaction. Most of the people I appraoched stared, then hurried away. Eventually I was able to stop a group of boys, who identified themselves as members of the ΔΙΔ fraturnity. Most of them were quite friendly, but I am sure one of them called me a "jerk." They became mystified when I began asking questions about the symbolic nature of Randy Shwartz's work. One stated that they only came because it was, "fun." Horrified at his lack of appreciation, I stammered on about Shwartz's expose of the nature children; Broccoli Patch, or his slapstick farce about the boots and whip crowd; Orgy Of Revenge. They began to laugh at me. "What about his doomsday satire; Dr. Spacelove that took four years to film at a cost of three million dollars?" I pleaded. They began to move away. "And his symbolic treatment of hunger in India from; Sex And The Office Girl?" They broke into a run, and I was left with the policeman. He threatened to throw me out if I didn't stop screaming, so I left, most disillusioned.

The last of our trilogy is; Barbie's Hospital Affair. It is a stunning film, that makes The Sound Of Pubic look like a milk fed carrot. It begins with an orderly and a nurse having fornication in the supply room. Next, another nurse commits adultry with the head surgeon, on his office couch. She is in turn blackmailed into a lesbian relationship with a can-dystripper. The action cuts to three women performing cunnilingus on each other in a chain. While this action has nothing to do with the plot line, it is a beautiful symbol that Shwartz has given us. It is an impassioned plea for cooperation and understanding in a Godless society. The action then flows to Barbie, who is an amnesic, and an intern on her case, who wishes to marry her. In a series of flashbacks, she is aghast to learn that she was once a $100-a-night-call-girl, and confesses that she cannot marry him. Shwartz has intentionally made this situation appear ludicrous, because the only way this women could make $100 in a night with her portliness, mustache, moles and scars, would be at a seeing eye dog camp. This is in short, a satire on the Horatio Alger stories. The audience beged her to remain clothed, but she could not, and many were turned to stone.

During the film Randy Shwartz makes wonderful use of a cucumber, a vibrator and a telephone receiver, to symbolize the deaf, dumb and blind of the world. Also his imaginative camera angles were most stimulating. One I had never seen before was a long shot of Barbie's face, taken at wide angle, from between her knees. I was quite puzzled, when at this point, a boy up front sang; "Deep in the jungle, the mighty jungle, the lion sleeps tonight," and received a standing ovation.

There is a set of metaphors that run throughout Shwartz's films. His use of sexual symbols to convay his deeped meanings have made him popular all across the globe. The language of intercourse is universaly intelligible. Whether satirizing Ezra Pound or the missle gap, Shwartz is the man to find just the right position. A smiling female with her tongue at the corner of her mouth, is always sure to represent the lack of love in the world. The manipulation of breasts is a call for better care for the elderly, and closed eyes with groaning is a plea for a more existentialist lifestyle. Just as Alfred Hitchcock's trademark is to appear in all of his films, Igor Swartz's are the words; "Oh my God!" Watch closely, they are always used just before the climax of the plot.

During the last night, my conception of the audeince began to change. Some I am sure, came for the enjoyment of Shwartz's artistry. Others however, seem to be more interested in the writhing flesh used in Swartz's brilliant imagery and find some sort of immature thrill, at thinking that they are getting away with something "naughty". In any case, for whatever reason they came, everyone seemed to enjoy himself.

FRANKENSTEIN
The scene: A gloomy laboratory. A stormy night. An obsessed scientist. A huge covered form on an operating table. The storm rages. The machinery crackles. At last the covering is pulled away. A hideous creature made up from pieces of the dead. The master switch is thrown. The noise is deafening. The light is blinding. The monster is alive; This is the familiar opening of Frankenstein; the archetypal gothic horror tale. Now, for the first time, Frankenstein has been adapted to the stage and will be performed by the University of Massachusetts Theatre. The adaptation has been made from the Mary Shelley novel by Dallas Murphy who is also directing.

Murphy has managed to maintain the flavor of the original while making it work within the conventions of stage melodrame. The experienced cast of students has been working since early January to realize an appropriate and convincing style of performance. The setting by Paul Wonsek is one of the most costumes. The play will be performed tonight and tomorrow at 8:30 p.m. in Bartlett Auditorium. Also, spend midnight with the monster! In keeping with the nature of the production, there will be a special late night performance of Frankenstein tonight at 11 p.m.

INTIMATE RELATIONS
Jean Cocteau's autobiographical master piece compares to the great works of Lawrence and O'Neill in its poignant portrayal of family dynamics. Tonight and tomorrow evening at 8 in the East Lecture Hall, Hampshire College.

Films

ALL QUIET ON THE WESTERN FRONT (1930)
Even two generations removed from the war this film scathingly portrays, it remains one of the most gripping antiwar film ever created. Adapted from the widely read novel by Erich Maria Remarque, it stands as a remarkable social document reflecting the strong pacifist leanings which flourish between the two World Wars. The story concerns a handful of German soldiers, students who volunteer, and how their romantic vision of war is shattered by the squalor of the trenches. The adaptation was by Maxwell Anderson, who restrains from his usual overripe poetic text. Lewis Milestone's direction never flinches from presenting the death of soldiers as an appalling waste of lives. By presenting the war from the German point of view, the universality of the horror made American audiences flinch with disgust. The craftmanship of this early sound film may seem niave by today's standards, but the strength of its message is not. Oscars for Best Picture and Director, with Lew Ayres, Slim Summerville, and Ben Alexander. Thompson 104. Tuesday, 2/27, 7 and 9.

AVANTI
Billy Wiler's anochronistic comedy is reminiscent of the romatic comedies he made in the mid fifties and somewhat at odds with his hard edged social comedies and dramas. The story concerns a square American businessman who goes to Italy upon his father's accidental death only to learn that his father had been romantically involved with a British widow for years. He meets the widow's daughter, a chubby British girl, and they repeat their parent's story. Wilder adapted the Broadway flop by Samuel Taylor and mistakenly allows it to lag for some two hours and a half. It's something of windy trifle; with Jack Lemmon and Juliet Mills. Campus Cinema, Hadley.

CABARET
One of the most acclaimed films of the year is this film version of the 1967 Broadway musical which mixes spectacular cabaret entertainment with the rise of Nazism. The musical was hailed on the stage as one of the more innovative and exciting of the past decade and has been transformed, through the skillful hands of Bob Fosse, into a truly unique and stunning film. The story concerns the romantic encounters of a young British writer in the Berlin of the early Thirties, immediately prior to Hitler's takeover. The songs here are dispersed through the action, not the plot, and comment rather than further the story. The effect is the first truly unique film musical in quite some time. The score, by John Kande and Fred Ebb, beautifully echoes the era as does the performances, chiefly those of Liza Minnelli as Sally Bowles and Joel Grey the Cabaret's Master of Ceremonies. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

CHLOE IN THE AFTERNOON
The final of Eric Rohmer's six moral tales has been generally considered the best. Rohmer's films are beautifully photographed, if long winded examinations of an individual placed in a romantic dilemna in which he must make a moral choice. This film ask the question will the married, upstanding hero sleep with the bohemian and seductive Chloe? The film is even more precise and mannered than the earlier "Claire's Knee" and does adhere to standards usually ascribed to the best works of art. What's wrong is Rohmer's polished, witty arguments about civilized, bourgeoise behavior are too wise for their own good and the film suffers from a rhetorical onslaught which also made Claire's Knee a pretty, but emotionally vapid film. Two nice performances from Bernard Berley as the happily married husband and a bewitching new personality named Zouzou. Cinema X, Springfield.

DELIVERANCE
A superior adaptation of James Dickey's novel about four men on a canoeing trip who find themselves caught up in a whirlpool of catastrophe, murder and rape. The film was directed by John Boorman, who made the crackerjack gangster flick of the late sixties, Point Blank, and it is filled with the same ferociously tense quality of man struggling against an alien environment that enriched the earlier film. Whatsmore, while the movie stands up as a tremendously engrossing adventure story, it also has an intruigingly ambiguous viewpoint regarding its violence and the morality involved. John Voight gives a highly controlled, intelligent and precise performance in the lead role. Showcase Cinema, West Springfield; Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

FUNNY GIRL (1968)
Again all those who missed it or those of us who keep returning to it have the chance to see the magnificent portrayal of Fanny Brice by Barbra Streisand for which she deservedly won the Best Actress Oscar in her first film role. Streisand possesses that mystical "star" quality which so few actresses have these days but which is definitely necessary if an actress is called on to carry a whole movie as Streisand is and so aptly does. Pauline Kael says "Streisand has the gift of making old written dialogue sound like inspired improvisation; almost every line she says seems to have just sprung to mind and out." Her comic rapport is reminiscent of the great screen comediennes of the thirties; Carole Lombard, Myrna Loy and Rosalind Russell with Omar Shariff. Academy of Music, Northampton.

THE GAY DIVORCEE (1934)
One of the more inspired musicals of the Thirties best loved screen duo Fred Astaire and Ginger Rodgers. The film followed their sensational debut as supporting players in Flying Down to Rio the previous year. Now stars they brought to the screen this Cole Porter success of the early thirties in which Astaire starred on the stage. Fred and Ginger are featured in two splendid dance numbers. Playing with The Merry Widow. Thompson 104, Thursday, 3/1, 9:30.

THE GETAWAY
Another cops and robbers thriller, this time from Sam Peckinpah who follows the critical success and financial failure of the mellow and reflective Junior Bonner with this glossy and violent gangster fantasy. Steve McQueen and Ali McGraw play a latter day Bonnie and Clyde who rob and murder the most viscious group of villains to appear on the current screen. The stars are mismatched, (her head is bigger than his) and both give mannered, boring performances. McQueen always manages a withdrawn sensuality that's always captivating on the screen, but Ms. McGraw better hide behind her footprints in Grauman's Chinese Theater as being her acting credentials. Sally Struthers is fine as one of the bizarre accomplices. Peckinpah again revels in violence, for those who remember Straw Dogs with extreme distaste evade this one. It's more of the same simplistic and nasty dribble. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield. Campus Cinemas, Hadley. Jerry Lewis Cinemas, Northampton.

THE GREAT WALTZ
Andrew Stone, the Neanderthal director of such musicals as Song of Norway, returns with this lavish, almost prehistoric adaptation of the Thirties operetta about the Waltz King Johann Strauss. Clearly a man born two generations too late, Stone attempts to recreate the mood and decor of late Nineteenth century Vienna with a chauvinist's delight. He manages to return the film musical to the days before

JERIMIAH JOHNSON

Robert Redford as a nineteenth century mountaineer which makes him a legend through narrative design rather than heroic action. Sidney Pollack directs this in a grand, ponderous manner. It's a beautiful film to watch but a bit difficult to swallow. With Will Geer. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

THE LAST PICTURE SHOW (1971)

The Best American Film of last year is this depressing, bleak vision of life about the coming of age of three youngsters in a small Texas town in 1951. Directed by Peter Bogdanovich, the film is a straightforward beautifully crafted, well-acted narrative about the perils of growing up in the finest tradition of the great Hollywood directors. The film is nostalgia in the negative sense and despite some melodramatic plotting, it is the most poignant film in quite some time. The acting is superb by a cast of mostly unknown character actors led by Cloris Leachmen, Timothy Bottoms, Jeff Bridges, Eileen Brennan, and Ben Johnson. The film won four NY Film Critics awards and finished second in voting for Best Picture behind A Clockwork Orange. Calvin Theater, Northampton.

MAN OF LA MANCHA

The play enchanted many, despite a book, score, and lyrics that merged comic book Cervantes with the worst of Tin Pan Alley. The film appears to be doing well in lieu of the fatal reviews it has received. This popular boulderization of classic themes has a popular resiliancy, but isn't either a good musical or workable adaptation of Cervantes. The production seemed cursed from the start; once principlas Peter O'Toole and Sophia Loren were signed to work with director Peter Glenville, United Artists took the Project away from the director. He conceived the film more along Cervantes original intentions, which didn't appeal to the UA bosses who spent millions for the rights. The logic was they could have "Don Quixote" for next to nothing, but Man of La Mancha cost plenty and had road-show box-office appeal. Director Arthur Hiller (Love Story, The Hospital) was called in and everyone worked on the production with professional but half-hearted spirit. None of the principals could sing, which didn't help matters at all. The film has a hackneyed persuasion, like being sucked in by a whirlpool of sentiment. Peter O'Toole plays Cervant/Quixote in much the same mad way he played the crazy Earl in The Ruling Class, and he's adequate. Sophia Loren as Aldonza, the spitfire Quixote converts, has a beauty few actresses can equal on the screen fiery and a temperament which makes the film worth watching. Although misconceived as a play and mismanaged as a film, it has its own peculiar charm. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

THE MERRY WIDOW (1934)

The second film version of the Lehar operetta. Undoubtedly this charming, tongue-in cheek version by Lubitsch comes closest to the composer's and librettists' intentions, even though only half the score is sung and that almost entirely by Jeanette MacDonald. Although the silent version had made a fortune for MGM, the public did not respond to this film at all. It was the fourth and last appearance together of Maurice Chevalier and Jeanette MacDonald. Thompson 104, Thursday, 3/1, 7:40.

ONE DAY IN THE LIFE OF IVAN DENISOVISH (1971)

Casper Wrede's controlled, and thoughtful adaptation of Alexander Solzhenitsyn's novel about the hard, tedious life at a Siberian labor camp. The film has a subdued power, less about men and events than about the ideas which rule their lives, and drama may seem more boring than is probably necessary. Still the futile existence of wasted intelligence put to use at its most mundane level is always fascinating and the film boasts a controlled title portrayal by Tom Courenay, under-rated British actor. Gamble Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke College, Saturday, 2/24, 8.

PLAY MISTY FOR ME (1972)

Clint Eastwood directs and stars in this suspense melodrama about a radio disc jockey whose life is threatened by one of his listening fans, a demented young lady played by Jessica Walters. A few of the suspense scenes show some knowledge on the part of Eastwood as to what he is attempting to do with this his first try at directing. Most of the film is cluttered with lyrical scenes like Eastwood constantly scowling, and his girl friend swimming in the nude while Roberta Flack sings "The First Time I Ever Saw Your Face" in the background. Let me warn those who like this song not to go because it will never be the same after seeing this film. When I first saw this film during its initial release it caused such an uproar in the theater that it got more laughs than the comedy that was playing on the same bill. If you're in a campy mood and don't mind wasting time and money, then get stoned and come see this one. Student Union Ballroom, Thursday, 3/1, 7 & 9:30.

Gene Kelly, Debbie Reynolds, and Donald O'Connor in Singin' In The Rain.

THE POSEIDON ADVENTURE

A harmless pop epic that aims to please but tends to disappoint. The film tauts an incredible roster of second-rate stars playing passengers on board a luxury liner which, on its final voyage, becomes capsized in the Mediterranean. The suspense is built on who will escape and how they'll do it. It's the latest in the series of assinine entertainments made popular in recent years, like Airport and Skyjacked. At the start the situations and relationships are contrived; the film picks up once the boat capsizes, but not much. The special effects and the capsize itself would look great on television. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

REBEL WITHOUT A CAUSE (1955)

One of the most memorable of the Fifties youth films which is distinguished by a strong plot and performance, specifically from James Dean who turned a pose into an acting mode whose reverberations can still be felt today. The film concerns three mixed-up kids who form a tender alliance while blindly fighting belligerent peers and senseless parents. Rebel Without A Cause is dominated by its character study of Jim. The late James Dean's moving portrayal of a tormented adolescent was a reflection of his own character and his blue jeans and T-shirt became the standard dress of other "rebels without a cause" during the late Fifties. This remarkable study of disturbed youth, ironic, tender, and understanding, is certainly one of Nicholas Ray's most personal films. The film is played Hampden Dining Commons, Southwest, Friday, 2/23, times not available, see ad or consult an additional calendar

ROOM SERVICE (1938)

The Marx Brothers, in the Broadway farce about bankrupt theatrical producers holed up in a hotel room with their stranded players, fighting off famine and creditors. Unfortunately, the play fits them like a straitjacket. With Lucille Ball, Ann Miller, Frank Albertson, and Donald MacBride, grinning his great bulldog grin. Directed (lamely) by William Seiter. Mahar, Friday, 2/23, 7, 9, 11.

SAVAGES

James Ivory glittering social satire which travels epochs with a hit of a croquet ball and strikes all targets with an exhilterating ease. His first American film, and finally available in general release, the film is one of those underrated triumphs which will be hailed as richly stroked masterwork in years to come. Penelope Gilliat in the New Yorker has written that the film is "full of withering social comedy and a peculiar, erratic stateliness of style." Richard Roud in the Manchester Guardian said that James Ivory "achieves a kind of sophisticated apocalypse that is both witty and terrifying. And Boston - Phoenix critic Stuart Byron wrote in Rolling Stone that the film "displays a sheer precocious love for what moves can say that I haven't seen since the films of the early New Wave." Amherst Cinema, Amherst.

SINGIN' IN THE RAIN (1952)

This is undoubtedly one of the best musicals of the Fifties, matching An American in Paris in its pace, rhythmic structure, and memorable songs, and On the Town in its smoothly constructed and witty script by Adolph Green and Betty Comden (who also wrote On the Town). Its background of the Roaring Twenties and its satire on Hollywood during the introduction of sound add much to the film's appeal, as do the numerous excellent visual and sound gags. The imaginative choreography includes several (ironic) tributes to Busby Berkeley (such as "All I Do is Dream of You" and "Beautiful Girl") and a striking semiabstract ballet by Gene Kelly and Cyd Charisse in "Broadway Rhythm." In supporting roles, Jean Hagen is memorable as the dumb star and Donald O'Connor brings a touch of American vaudeville, especially in his number "Make 'Em Laugh" (originally used in The Pirate). Gene Kelly is the true creative genius behind this film, which many consider his masterpiece. Co-directed by Stanley Bonen and Kelly. Hampden Dining Commons, Southwest, Tuesday, 2/27, 7:30.

THE SORROW AND THE PITY

Few superlatives could ably describe this extraordinary documentary exploration of a French village during the German occupation from 1939 to 1945. Marcel Ophuls has created what has claims as being the best documentary of the post-war film. He explores his subject matter and subjects with a piercing eloquence that moves beyond recorded history into a psychological exploration of the implications of memory. The film recently won a special citation of the New York Film Critics. Four-and-one-half hours short, it may well stand as one of the greatest films of all time. See ad for exact location, Saturday, Sunday, 2/24, 2/25, 7:30.

THEY SHOOT HORSES, DON'T THEY? (1970)

Horace McCoy's popular underground novel was the source for this depressing, well-acted portrayal of the meaninglessness of life. A great favorite with the French existentialists, McCoy's novel is adapted in a spare and evocative manner by screenwriter Robert E. Thompson (James Poe receives top credit, but most of his work is all but evaporated from the final film.). Sydney Pollack makes excellent use of the dace marathon as a metaphor for the degrading life of the period. He uses underexposed and overdeveloped film to portray the grittiness and shoddy look of the dance hall. The film follows the events and characters of a dance marathon, specifically that of two of his contestants, Gloria and Robert. Jane Fonda proves herself to be one of the screen's leading actresses in her despairing portrayal of Gloria and Gig Young won an Oscar for his remarkably crass portrait of the dance hall barker. Good support from Bonnie Belinda and Susannah York. The flash forwards are annoying, but do not diminish the effect of the film. Mahar, Saturday, 2/24, 7, 9:15, 11:30.

UMBERTO D (1952)

Umberto, a retired civil servant whose only real friend is his dog, has to survive on a very meager pension, living in a furnished room and eating cheaply. He sacrifices part of his pension for his dog, cannot pay his rent, is turned out by his landlady, and contemplates suicide. Vittorio De Sica has described his "favorite film" as: "the tragedy of those people who find themselves cut off from a world that they nevertheless helped to build, a tragedy hidden by resignati and silence but one that occasionally explodes in loud demonstrations or that is pushed into appalling suicides. A young man's decision to kill himself is taken seriously but what does one say of the suicide of an old man already close to death? It's terrible. A society that allows such things is a lost society. Is it possible to describe Umberto D as "pessimistic" because the demonstration takes place at the beginning and the attempted suicide at the end? The public would surely be more likely to be aroused by this portrait of a man in the depths of distress than by suggesting the demonstration was immediately effective. The film's uncompromising approach to its theme made it only a limited commercial success. Mevill Science Center, Lecture Room One, Amherst College, Sunday, 2/25, 3:30 and 7:30.

Gun Control Is Not Crime Control

To The Editor:

In regard to Mr. Cataldos editorial I wish to offer the following rebuttal.

"Crime Control", the slogan upon which gun confiscation schemes are based, may be the biggest of the anti-gun lies. Ample facts, some of which I will mention show that guns neither cause nor contribute to the nation's crime problem. At the same time, increasing amount of evidence indicate that the ownership of firearms by responsible, law abiding citizens is a decided deterrent to serious crime.

While the public is fed the thought that gun confiscation would miraculously reverse soaring crime rates, the truth is that guns are actually used in only about four percent of all serious crime. Even if all firearms could be eliminated, 96% of this nation's serious crime would not be affected! Police officials are the first to admit that the amount of crime deterred by gun control is virtually zero because a criminal does not (be definition) obey laws. Geoffrey M. Alprin, general counsel for the Washington, D.C. Police Dept. has stated, "There is no evidence anywhere that if you have even substantial registration it would make much different in keeping guns away from criminals, besides, guns owned by law abiding citizens are not the ones used in crime, according to statistics recorded nationwide."

While anti-gun spokesmen erroneously assert that homicides have decreased under strict repressive anti-gun laws, facts prove otherwise. In Philadelphia, an ordinance requiring a license to purchase firearms was passed in April 1965. While it reduced legitimate gun sales by about 75%, homicides increased 17% in the following two years. Pittsburgh, on the other hand, had a net decrease in homicides of 1% without the "benefit" of such a law.

Studies which show that the availability of guns does not contribute to higher crime rates are, of course, ignored by the anti-gun buffs. Wisconsin compared the murder rates of all states in 1960, concluding that "The average murder rate does not appear to be appreciably different....(between strong and weak gun control states)...and that Wisconsin, a non-licensing state, has one of the lowest murder rates in the country."

Efforts by the anti-gun fringe to "prove" their assertions border on the ridiculous, and comparing British crimes to American crimes is a common fraud. Colin Greenwood, Chief Inspector in England's West Yorkshire Constabulary who conducted a six-month study of English and other European gun controls explodes this lie. The highly vaunted pistol controls introduced there in 1903 actually had negligible effect–that is crime patterns and crime rates remained unchanged after the law took effect. Finally, between 1960 and 1970 British gun crimes increased 700%–a whopping figure–despite the strictest of controls over a long period of time. Greenwood also points out that Switzerland, with the highest rate of gun ownership (they trust their citizens), also has the lowest crime rate of all nations.

I point out that pistol shooting is an Olympic sport, and is a widespread recreation here in Massachusetts. I find hunting big game with a pistol to be a real challenge, and though I often come home empty handed, when I am successful I really feel as though I have accomplished something. Pistol hunting adds more sport, and gives the game a chance.

One last example, and I will rest my case. Birmingham, Alabama, plagued with increasing crime rates, and especially attacks on women instituted a pistol training course. It taught the basics of firearms safety and use. The importance of knowing when to shoot, as well as how to shoot were emphasized, and local law regarding homicide in self defense was taught. The results to date have been over 2500 female graduates, and waiting lists start with a six-month wait. A decrease in crime, especially against women, has been the result. Once again this proves that guns, and the possession of them by our citizenry, is to our advantage.

Rape Science

To The Editor:

Yesterday the Faculty Senate voted to restore academic credit to the ROTC program. On Wednesday evening, the Student Senate passed a similar motion.

The principal argument used by the proponents of restoration was that students have a right to learn whatever we want, and that the university should not use any moral or political criteria in deciding what deserves credit. Therefore, whatever the merits of teaching military tactis, we should grant academic credit.

Based on this logic, I have a modest proposal to present. I suggest that the university immediately establish a Department of Rape Science. Certainly police records indicate a high demand for such training. Our jails would be willing to loan convicted rapists to serve a faculty to teach the science. And, consistent with ROTC, we can pay students to major in Rape. Such a program might even liberalize rapists so that they'll be more polite as they ravage women.

Making war and committing rape are certainly morally equivalent. But the Senates don't believe that we should make any judgements about that.

Oily Waterways

To The Editor:

You recently ran a story on the recent findings of massive amounts of oil pollution in the mid-Atlantic. The government scientist performing the study found that the pollution was distributed "far more widely than had previously been suspected". The story continued to describe the pollution as "grain to fist sized balls of tar which 'appear to have been formed from bunker oil jettisoned from ships'". Your readers may be interested in an article from this month's Scientific American, indicating that the primary source of this pollution is crank case oil from automobile and other engines. The U.S. alone dumps 350 - 400 million gallons of dirty engine oil into our waterways and thus the oceans each year.

Take A Break, Nixon

To The Editor:

Thank you, Mr. Rashed, for Tuesday's thoughtful account of radical uncompromising thinking on amnesty. Such thoughts are the basis for action (or no action as the case may be) and a point to consider in bringing everyone home from Vietnam.

Pat Nixon's point is at the other end of the spectrum. Fuck and God damn those Commie draft dodgers! Another account of radical uncompromising thinking on amnesty. A fine position coming from the maker of a compromised "peace with honor".

TAKE A BREAK NIXON! Think about it. And everybody else out there in Apathetic City: THINK and ACT!!

Bring our boys home. NOW!!

Open The Pool

To The Editor:

Sunday, Feb. 18, 1973, I had some free time, so I decided I would go swimming at Boyden Pool. I called at 11:30 A.M. to see if the gym was open from 1:00-4:00 P.M. I talked to someone on the swim team who was going to be using the pool with the swim team up until 1:00 P.M. He suggested I call at 1:05 P.M., and in doing so I found the pool to be closed.

What I want to know is why, out of three pools, none of them were open. On a long weekend, when many people have time to spare, all three pools are closed??? I saw thirty individuals who were using the main gym get kicked out because the gym was supposed to be closed, no reason given, just "you can't use the gym".

I spoke to eleven people who wanted to use the pool and couldn't. Two out of those 11 then decided to go to the Blue Wall and get drunk . . . "Makes alot of sense" . . .

1.) Why must the pools be closed so often

2) Why can't the athletic facilities meet the needs of the students/ The University is here for the students, isn't it? . . . Or are the students here for the University?????

Why couldn't the pool, just one of them, be open 6:30 to 9:30 every evening???????

YOU certainly don't get much for your athletic fee . . .

Wanted: A Male Reporter

To The Editor:

For a liberal paper (i.e. The Amherst Record) which now and then tokenly supports peoples' liberation, I was not surprised to read the following advertisement in the Record under help wanted–"reporter MALE with experience, Publisher Michael de Sherbinin, Amherst Record." I have experience as a reporter with the Amherst Record and the now defunct Scope, however I apparently do not possess the anatomical qualifications required by Mr. de Sherbinin. I do however, along with 4 other WOMEN, qualify as a part time small town correspondent working ridiculous hours for a meager pay which has been frozen for nearly two years now, despite a promised raise in October.

Why must being a woman mean that I only qualify for low paying, low prestige jobs, while higher paying, more responsible, and interesting positions are reserved for men? God forbid I as a woman should ever entertain the ridiculous notion of being an editor someday unless I discover how to grow a penis in the meantime.

The Mobe Is Ready

To The Editor:

The anti-war movement is now faced with a set of objective circumstances such that it has not faced before in its history. The treaty is signed and segments of the anti-war movement are proclaiming that the N.L.F. has won. These contentions, however, don't hold water when tested against the objective conditions in Southeast Asia.

The United States government is still propping up the Thieu regime both militarily and economically. "Civilian" personnel are now taking over such roles as the training of Thieu's army in the use and maintenance of sophisticated American military equipment, while others work on projects given the false label of pacification.

In Thailand, Guam, and the South China Sea remain the U.S. Air Force that devastated so much in Vietnam, Cambodia, and Laos, poised and ready for continued activities if so ordered by Nixon. They have, in fact, been flying missions in Cambodia and Laos since the treaty was signed.

On the ground in southern Vietnam, fighting still continues. In the February eighth New York Times, Joseph Treaster reported that since the cease-fire was proclaimed, 200 to 300 hamlets had changed hands. Tran Ngoun Phieu, an official of Thieu's regime, said that the total number of homes destroyed between January 28th and February 7th could run as high as 40,000 in southern Vietnam.

All of this amounts to one thing. There is no peace and American re-escalation is still possible. This is not a time for the anti- war movement to sit back and say a job well done. The Student Mobilization Committee stands ready to answer to any re-escalation that might occur.

You, Too, Can Be A Head Of Residence

To The Editor:

The Head of Residence position is a one year appointment. They are reappointed every year by a renewal of their contract. Once a Head of Residence, always a Head of Residence, or so it seems. Only in extreme cases is a Head of Residence fired. As a matter of fact only one Head of Residence's job has been terminated. A Head of Residence may not be doing anything wrong, but they may not be doing anything.

The general information sheet describing the Head of Residence position states that one is required to have at least a Bachelor's Degree or to have related experience in student personnel administration. To become a Resident Director it says that one must be enrolled in the Graduate School of the University or have a Bachelor's Degree.

But you can become a Head of Residence. Your dorm can become a student-run dorm. For some dorms a traditional Head of Residence can be stifling to the members of the house and be a definite obstacle. The house must vote and decide how to split the responsibilities and write a constitution.

Coolidge Upper has three distinct student coordinators working together in conjunction with the counselors and government in the operation of the residence hall. The counseling staff of T-5 is led by a grad student, selected by the dorm, who resides in the tower. Student representatives run the house, and the needs are discussed with each floor. Cance house has a student and a grad student working together.

These situations are working very well. The $3400 salary is divided among those carrying out the responsibilities. Be assertive. It is up to you to declare your independence.

Parking Meters At New Africa House

To The Editor:

I would like to call to the attention of the University community to a situation which besides creating an intolerable situation also threatens to become the basis for an unfortunate confrontation if it is not rectified. I am referring to the placement of parking meters in front of the New Africa House.

Anyone aware of the area knows that it is bounded by the infirmary on one side and by some dorms across the street. All the parking spaces on these blocks are reserved for dorm or infirmary personnel. Yet anyone aware of the purpose and activities going on in the New Africa House knows that this building as well as being the headquarters for CCEBS is also a cultural center for Black and Hispanic students. In addition, classes are held there for college students as well as an elementary school and a nursery. Many students work there either as volunteers or with assistantships.

It seems, however, as though the parking authorities have designated this area for constant scrutiny. There are two full-time guards in this area, one on the gate and the other whose sole purpose, it seems, is to ticket people in that area. Teachers and staff have been ticketed, as well as parents while they went to pick up their children. The alternative, it seems, is to put money in the meter. This sometimes means 50 or 60 cents daily often merely for the privilege of offering service to the University free of charge.

I think this is grossly unfair and something should be done immediately. What I suggest is that the parking bureau provide a limited number of parking permits which would be divided among the organizations working in the New Africa House so that people who have a legitimate function during certain periods of the day can pick one up from that organization and return them when they leave. The bearer of this parking card would then be able to park in front of the New Africa House without being penalized.

I cannot see any other alternative unless bus service is provided to this area which at present is not. I sincerely hope that the people in authority see fit to listen to this sincere attempt to correct this unfair situation before an unfortunate situation occurs.

A Responsible Press?

To The Editor:

It comes as no surprise that "an active member of the John Birch Society," Timothy R. Heinan, is given a half-page write up in the paper. It also comes as no surprise that one of the most important rallies of 1973 two days ago in Washington was given less than a quarter of a page. The JBS is a known right-wing, racist, fascist organization. While trade unions find no place in its society, Hunt and other super millionaires are its open supporters. The demonstration in Washington was organized for the defense of reforms that the working people fought over 30 years for.

The John Birch Society is anti-education—they consistently fight against all public funds to higher education. What students need, JBS attack. What students oppose—JBS support. JBS wants to bring higher education back to the Dark Ages.

Under the battle cry of "save Democracy", Western capitalist countries have waged the most barbaric wars in history. "Making the world safe for Democracy" was the rallying cry of the Allied Powers in World War I. Behind this mask of democracy, racism was allowed to permeate society. To save the world from the "Jewish-Communist Conspiracy", Hitler ordered the enslavement of 500,000 Germans. Over 23 million soldiers alone died before the defeat of the Nazi war machine. The German people themselves paid the awful price of 8 million dead and 37 million wounded along with the destruction of their cities. And today everything that is rotten or corrupt in the "free" world is defended on the grounds that it would be undemocratic to limit the power of millionaires, bankers, and industrialists. And so the "Fat Cats" send Timothy Hienan around the country talking to the people about the "communist conspiracy.

As chairman of the Young Workers Liberation League, I call the printing of the article "Bircher Says..." a scandal for any responsible press. While there continues to be a lack of articles on the struggle of students, Black people's struggle for survival, rank and file trade union work, there remains the ever present article like "Bircher Says . . ." This is not masochism but suicide. JBS hates students and works for the abolition of public higher education. Any Third World organization will be attacked by JBS. The people that are students allies in the fight for quality education are ignored by the student paper.

1. full freedom for books with one exception
2. full freedom for the theater with one exception
3. full freedom for the visual arts with one exception
4. full freedom for music with one exception
5. full freedom for films with one exception

The restriction: No freedom for books or works of art which glorify war or represent it as inevitable or which encourage racial hatred. Responsible press to who and to what? To war, racism, imperialism, facism, the wealthy class? NO! A responsible press to students, working people, Black Liberation, peace, justice? YES!

Afro-American Conf. At Amherst College

The Amherst College Afro-American Society will host an All New England Black Students Conference Saturday, Feb. 24, on the Amherst campus. The all-day gathering will begin at 8 a.m. in Converse Hall and will offer a full schedule of speakers, workshops and concerts.

The goal of the conference is the establishment of an alliance between various black campus groups in the New England area. Leaders of the conference feel "the isolationism that has resulted from the geographical dissemination of black students throughout the New England colleges has engendered the need for such a conference." Invitations have been sent to the region's black student organizations.

Mayor Gordon Hatcher of Gary, Indiana and Amherst College Professor of Black Studies Sonia Sanchez will be the featured speakers at the conference. Their talks will focus on various political and cultural problems facing contemporary black America. Maxwell Roach and Archie Shepp, both jazz musicians and professors of Afro-American studies at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, will also be on hand for varied contributions.

A series of workshops will take up most of the participants' time. The workshops will focus on the interdependent relationships between black culture and politics. The series of six two-hour sessions have the following titles: "Black Awareness," "Political Analysis," "Black Women," "Latin American Problems," "Cultural Politics," and "Leadership."

A black cultural dance show is scheduled for the evening. It will be followed by an informal social gathering. Both events will be held in Valentine Hall on the Amherst College campus.

More specific details concerning all events of the day will be available during the registration session to be held in Converse Hall at 8 a.m. on the day of the conference.

Latin American Exhibit Saturday

"Tropic of Cancer-Tropid of Capricorn", an exhibit by 45 Latin American artists, will open Saturday, Feb. 24, at the University of Massachusetts following a roundtable discussion on "Latin America Today".

Participants will be: Leopoldo Castedo, chairman of the Stony Brook art department; Jacqueline Barnitz, historian and critic of Latin American art; Arnold Belkin, Mexican artist and muralist; and Enrique Castro-Cid, Chilean painter.

Among the 45 Latin American artists to be represented in the exhibit will be : Jose Louis Cuevas, Claudio Bravo, Arnold Belkin, Fernando Botero, Roberto Matta, Omar Rayo, and Edgar Negret. The show will continue to March 25, with prints, drawings, paintings, and sculpture of 20th Century movements with an emphasis on contemporary trends. The Herter Hall Art Gallery hours will be: Wednesday through Friday, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., Friday from 7 to 9 p.m., and Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m.

Racketeering Law Impotent

By VERNON A. GUIDRY JR.
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-A federal law to prevent labor racketeering cannot be used against workers pushing, no matter how violently, for legitimate union objectives, the Supreme Court held today in a 5 to 4 ruling.

State laws are available to punish extortion and violence, the majority noted in upholding a lower court's dismissal of an indictment against four men charged with destroying property of Gulf States Utility Co. in Louisiana during a strike in 1969-1970.

The men were indicted under the Hobbs Act which makes extorting payment for unneeded or undelivered work a federal crime.

In bringing the indictment, the majority said, the government swept too broadly in its concept of extortion.

"The worker who threw a punch on a picket line, or a striker who deflated the tires on his employer's truck would be subject to a Hobbs Act prosecution and the possibility of 20 years' imprisonment and a $10,000 fine," if that concept were accepted, wrote Justice Potter Stewart for the majority.

Justice William O. Douglas dissented, and was joined by Chief Justice Warren E. Burger and Justices Lewis F. Powell Jr., and William H. Rehnquist.

"Seeking higher wages is certainly not unlawful," wrote Douglas. "But using violence to obtain them seems plainly within the scope of 'extortion' as used in the act, just as is the use of violence to exact payment for no work or the use of violence to get a sham substitution for no work.

"The regime of violence, whatever its precise objective, is a common device for extortion and is condemned by the act."

Christian Life Style Talk

Dr. William Stringfellow, attorney, social critic, lay theologian and author will speak at the Student Union on Sunday evening, February 25.

Stringfellow will discuss "A Christian Life Style for Today" which is scheduled for 8:00 in the Commonwealth Room. The event is open to the public, and is sponsored by the United Christian Foundation.

A decade before the 'war on poverty', after being graduated from Harvard Law School, Dr. Stringfellow lived and practiced in Harlem. His experience as a white lawyer in the black ghetto is seen in a best-seller, My People is the Enemy. His other works include Count It All Joy, Dissenter in a Great Society and The Bishop Pike Affair.

Trash: A Report On Drug Analysis

People usually don't have any way of knowing what drug they're really buying on the street. At UMass, however, drugs can be analyzed anonymously - a service very valuable to the community. One of the main reasons for this article is to alert people that a white powder being sold as cocaine was just analyzed. It turned out to be nothing but an antihistimine. In the past 7 months, we have had three samples of "cocaine" analyzed: one turned out to be low dose cocaine, one was cocaine cut with procaine (local anesthetic used by doctors and dentists; like novacaine) and the third, was the antihistimine.

It is becoming increasingly clear, having operated this service for two years, that many drugs are not what they are purported to be. For example, in the first year of service, only two of forty-seven drug samples sold as mescaline were indeed mescaline. All others varied in content from low dose LSD to DMA to PCP to nothing. Right now there aren't any organics around. This statement will surely meet with a lot of resistance. The whole organic popularity stemmed from the hype that they are better for you, more natural. Trouble is, poeple experienced unfavorable reactions from these 'milder drugs' some effects they were trying to avoid by not taking LSD. The mystery was solved with the advent of drug analyzation programs. As samples showed up, it was discovered that virtually all of the 'psilocybin' and 'mescaline' was LSD, PCP, STP, DMT, or a combination. Even when this information started coming out people still liked to think that even though there are a lot of bummer drugs going around, somehow this one prticular drug from this one particular dealer is going to be genuine (He's a friend, why should he lie? or He knows the chemist). The dealer may be equally convinced, but equally naive; he or she may have been lied to by their sources, and these sources by their sources and so on. The point is, only one batch in a thousand, anywhere, is really mescaline or psilocybin.

The THC rap is rather similar. All three (THC, mescaline, and psilocybin) have considerable sales appeal on the street. Since September nine samples of 'THC' have been analyzed. One was in fact, THC. The rest were shown to be PCP. PCP is found very often in street drugs because it's cheap to produce, but it is usually sold under a different name. The power of suggestion is tremendous. Users of fake THC often swear that the reaction was like a heavy grass high, even though PCP's effects are unlike marijuana. Yet, often times the power of suggestion is not strong enough to counteract the actual effect of the drug. The following is an excerpt from Bulletin #3, Volume 1, Pacific Information Service on Street Drugs, University of Pacific School of Pharmacy, Stockton, California:

"Low doses produce sedation and general numbness which is followed by analgesia and anesthesia as the amount ingested is increased. The cardiovascular system shows an initial rise in blood pressure and heart rate with a decrease at higher doses. Other signs are muscular incoordination, double vision, dizziness, and in some cases severe nausea and vomiting. Unlike the medically used anesthetics, there is a severe state of agitation at high doses and convulsive seizures have been noted."

Grass is another interesting item. Since September five samples have been analyzed. They were sent in by users who were blaming symptons of nausea, dizziness, headaches on the marijuana. None of the samples were found to be treated.

The problem of unknown constituents in street drugs points out that this analyzation service is a necessary and vital one. It allows the community, physicians, and drug-treatment personnel to know what is happening. Another implication of this service is fairly obvious: a dealer can't continually burn people if everyone knows better than to buy from him or her. It is a positive method for members of the community to take care of their own.

Room to Move Drop-in Center has envelopes available for people who wish to have their drugs checked out. Each envelope has a number which corresponds to a number in a book. By that number in the book is written a short description of what the drug is thought to be. When results come back from the chemist they are posted there. So if you've got something to be analyzed, come in to Room to Move, pick up an envelope, give a description, and drop it in a Campus mail area. (NOTE: That is CAMPUS MAIL. Some samples never get received because people attempt to mail it in a regular mail box.) Call or come in in about a week and ask for the results on your number.

The results of last semester's drug analyses are posted on the front window of Room to Move as a safety measure, and the latest analyses of this semester are posted as they are processed. We will continue to post incoming results in our window and submit articles of this nature to the Collegian when we notice particularly outrageous results.

Where The Ice Fell Through

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

(Editor's Note: This is the second and final part of Antosiewicz's history of UMass' attempts at getting an ice facility on this campus and the possibilities for the future.)

In the short span of a year, an idea had blossomed into a multi-million dollar proposal. In May of 1969, the proposal was under consideration of the student senate. No action and, more important, no funding was forthcoming.

The proposed Convocation and Activities Center had a price tag of $16 million, which was to be raised through a student tax which was estimated at $50 per student per year. The center would consist of a main arena seating 12,000-15,000, which would be used for basketball, convocations and other large audience events, and a 6,000 seat ice arena.

The facility would benefit the university varsity sports, but was also aimed at recreational and intramural use, along with providing space for student groups, such as the Roister Doisters and the Flying Redmen, and space for student radio and TV facilities.

Richard Story, the education editor of the MDC at the time, suggested that the entire scope of the center's proposal was too vast. He favored a facility which was "much smaller and much less expensive."

After the Student Senate failed to consider the proposal due to the end of the semester, the matter just floated.

When classes resumed in the fall of 1969, there was a report that the original committee would reactivate shortly. On October, 27, 1969, Athletic Council Chairman George Richason stated that the status of "the Convocations and Activities Committee to be in limbo." He went on to say to the council that there was "a feeling that students would not support such a facility at the present time."

In the spring of 1971, the Athletic Council tried to resurrect the matter. There was a meeting between the Executive Committee of the Council and Chancellor Oswald Tippo and supposedly a "rough draft of a hockey rink" was to be made by Jack Littlefield of the Planning Office. According to Littlefield, "the matter was essentially dropped."

For all practical purposes the Committee and its grandiose scheme had disappeared. With it went the idea that students would fund another new building, as the grumblings from having to pay for the Campus Center still linger.

In March 1972, Acting Athletic Director David Bischoff stated that the first priority as far as an athletic building goes was an ice facility. At the time Bischoff stated that the ideal would contain "minimum seating for 6,000 students, bleacher style, with connected locker rooms that could be also used by other sports."

The emphasis over the years has changed from a multi-million dollar facility back to what was greatest need in the beginning— ice. There is still some hope for student funding, but this is in terms of a more realistic $5-10 in combination with other funding.

Another possible method of funding a facility is through state funds. This is even tougher than the student appropriation method. An ice facility is the number one priority of the School of Physical Education, but as the matter goes from that list upward, it sinks lower and lower in priority list.

Last year the funds for capital outlay were not approved. These funds were destined for renovations to existing, landscaping as well as supplies. On the next budget, these requests will probably be once again first on the list. If the hockey facility proposal were somehow to get on to the list, it would then have to compete with budget requests from the Worcester and Boston campuses, then requests from other state schools and other institutions such as hospitals.

So, even if the proposal did get on budget list for the University, its chances of being approved by a reluctant legislature would be minimal.

The last way for funding is through Alumni contributions. This is doubtful, if one realizes that UMass has been a large university for only 10-15 years. This is a short time in comparison to other schools which have a strong Alumni backing, such as Harvard, Holy Cross or Providence. Right now, the Alumni are not a powerful, nor a particularly wealthy group. Their strength lies in the fugure—maybe ten to twenty years from now.

So, that is where hopes for a hockey facility stand. The cheapest facility runs about $2 million. Money is still the big question. "The proper case," according to Littlefield, "has not yet been presented for this facility."

Then again, why not put a roof over the campus pond?

Carl Dambman: Three In A Row?

By JOHN BOCK

Anyone for a stereotyped view of a heavyweight wrestler? The ones most people think of can be seen quite frequently on Saturday afternoons grunting, growling, and tossing their flab around in front of a television audience. They of course are the Studio "Wrestlers" who are paid outrageous wages for entertainment that requires no more than a big mouth and big stomach.

So much for stereotypes. Carl Dambman is a heavyweight, or he was one. For the last four years Carl has donned the Red and wrestled his way to two consecutive New England Championships at Heavyweight. As a senior in his last year of collegiate wrestling Carl is trying to do the very difficult. He is dropping to 190 pounds in hopes of copping a third title. This is a tough drop and means almost a whole new style of wrestling for Carl. It means watching his weight, something he never had to do at heavy. It means trying to use some speed and not being able to wait around for the other guy to move.

For a lot of wrestlers this would be tantamount to hanging up their shoes. Not Carl, though, because he is a different breed of wrestler. Heavyweight has been his bag for a long time. Ever since high school where he took two straight section titles, was twice district runnerup; and third in the regions his senior year. All this for Upper Darby High School, one of the outstanding teams from Eastern Pennsylvania.

Carl was a lot better high school wrestler than his credentials show as he beat a kid in the regions 11-0 and the same wrestler had bested the state champ twice. While wrestling for UMass Carl has had the opportunity to beat a Pennsylvania State Champ, an Ohio State Champ, a two time New York State Champ, and a few others.

Strangely enough, Carl was brought to UMass to play football and he was starting defensive tackle his freshman year. Sounds like a very typical joke: Things change when Carl steps off the mat. He is a Bachelors Degree with Individual Concentration major and his concentration is defined as the Christian Community. It is a mixture of Sociology and Religion with a lot of independent study. It is the independent study that keeps Carl busy to the tune of fifteen hours a week at Amherst High working with Young Life. Young Life is a nondenominational Christian organization whose purpose is to share the Christian faith with high school students through meaningful relationships.

"When I was in high school someone took the time to show me what life is all about. I'm glad to have that same opportunity. Since then I've found that life to its fullest is only experienced when you are in a relationship with God and I've found that experience with Jesus Christ."

Maybe it's this experience that helps Carl when he needs it most. He has been referred to at times as a great pressure wrestler. To be sure, in Coach Barr's words, "Carl is one of the worst practice wrestlers around, but when he gets in front of people he is really tough to beat." Last year Carl pulled three matches out of the fire for UMass and this year has won a couple of critical bouts, most notably the one against Springfield that put UMass into the lead.

It might be up to Carl again today and tomorrow as he wrestles at 190 in the New Englands at the Cage. "The reason that I am wrestling at 190 is because I feel that is where I have to compete on a national level. Then the team is stronger with me at 190."

If Carl wins the New Englands and makes his second trip in two years to the Nationals his best fans are sure to be there. His mother and father have traveled all over New England and the East Coast to see Carl wrestle. His mother never fails to wear something with the UMass red on it.

Carl plans to stay in the Amherst area for a couple more years as that is where he has had some of the more meaningful associations of his life. He might work with the College Church in Northampton. He, too, has been approached by Athletes In Action to wrestle for them.

Wherever he goes he will take a quiet confidence with him and win or lose in the New Englands he will withstand the pressure better than most.

Gymnasts End Chief's Reign

By BRENDA RAU

Penn. State may have been beaten in gymnastics--and that's a headline story--but more important to the local gymnastics world is the fact that UMass gym men took Springfield for the first time in five years. The meet was the closest score for the Minutemen this year.

It was an interesting evening. U.M. Co-captain Steve Scuderi was pitted against his Springfield College brother Sal. Both all-around men, they performed back to back on parallel bars. Sal, who is the younger, took first there; Steve a strong third. They were also matched on high bar, but here Steve (U.M.) showed far better colors, taking a fine 9.2.

Springfield's All Heller led floor exercise men with a 9.05 routine with teammate Jack Avona a very nice second at 8.95. UMass' Jay Thomsen was third at 8.9. Floor exercise was a close event; SC was in the lead at the end.

On sidehorse, Springfield outscored UMass by almost two full points and showed real promise by some newcomers, one earning a 9.0. SC all-around Jack Avona also looked good.

Still rings is a strong event for UMass greatly due to Senior Jay Aronstein who seems, lately, to average around the 9.5 mark. Wednesday night was no exception as he hit a new routine for an on-the-dot 9.5. He was followed by a tough Springfield man who could only manage an 8.9. UMass made up almost a point here with additional help from Dan Spier and Jim Battista.

Vaulting was the event that really got UMass moving as their event score was a good 27.1 out of a possible 30. Again, sophomore Jack Fabbricante came through with a piked cartwheel-back somersault, 9.3, second highest score of the meet. Jay Thomsen was valuable with his trusty piked front somersault at 9.1. Jack Avona (SC) and teammate Schmall managed excellent vaults (8.9 and 8.95 respectively).

Parallel bars saw UMass take the lead for the first time, although it was a generally disappointing show from both teams. Springfield managed only a 24.4; UMass 25.55. Danny Spier tied for first with the Springfield Scuderi at 8.65 marks. UMass also counted in Steve Scuderi and Rich Seikunas, tied at 8.45 apiece.

And so it came down to high bar just as predicted by the program writer:

The Minutemen should also dominate this event, and claim their first victory over Springfield in the last four years; but it is easy to fall off the "pipe", so I wouldn't leave your seat early.

It was uncertain right down to UMass' next to the last man, again Danny Spier--an excellent performer all night long--had a deciding set, a tricky one with a few nice stoop-in dislocates (8.9). The crowd knew this mean victory for UMass. But this was not the total finish, for Steve Scuderi's 9.2, near flawless routine was still to come. Springfield had a surprisingly low show with Cousens (8.7), Scuderi (8.5), and Avona (8.15) all hitting, but not as well as was needed.

Women Gymnasts Tonight

This evening at 7:30 p.m. in the Boyden Auxiliary Gymnasium the women's varsity gymnastics team hosts West Chester State College in an Eastern Regional competition. At present, the Minutewomen are undefeated, posting four wins. Although the team has won all its meets, it has failed to near its potential. Several small injuries, broken or sloppy routines, and limited workouts have hampered the team's performances to date. West Chester State will be putting its best effort forward in an attempt to capitalize on any UMass mistakes. With Springfield College on tap for next weekend the UMass women will have to show much improvement this evening.

J.V.'s Drop Boston State, 7-5

By JAY LUPPOLD

The little Minutemen put together a fine two-way effort Wednesday night at Orr Rink and downed Boston State 7-5.

The first period saw some good hockey with both teams skating hard. The scoring opened with Boston State's Dennis Gilbert finishing off a two on one rush. Goalie Bruce Gledhill made a fine stop on the first shot but Gilbert was right on the doorstep to put away the rebound.

Fifty-five seconds into the second period, Jimmy Lyons broke up a clearing pass in the Boston State zone and walked in for a pretty unassisted goal. At 2:20 Dave Alesandroni went off for holding and the UMass short-handed team stood up to the task with Bruce Gledhill making a couple of big stops.

However, the roof fell in at 9:29 with Boston State's Dennis McCleary converting and then, 30 seconds later, when McCleary's linemate Jim Malano tangled the twines to make the score, Boston State 3, UMass 1.

Dave Alesandroni came right back at 10:28 jamming home his own shot for an unassisted goal.

Bill Katchpole came right back at 11:50 to make the score 4-2 and it looked like the Minutemen would have a long night. But Steve "Smiley" Dee came right back at 16:06 after taking a perfect pass from Jim Lyons.

Coach Russ Kidd instilled something in his boys for the third period as they dominated Boston State.

At 3:23, Matt Devine tallied on Steve Mason's rebound to tie the score. Then at 7:39 Don Reddick finished off some beautiful passing with Neil Drawbridge and Steve Dee for the go-ahead goal.

Boston State finally came back at 10:07 when Jim Melano hit on a powr play goal with Minuteman Wayne Douglas off for hooking.

Ten seconds later Steve Ryan scored from Douglas and Murphy to put UMass in front to stay.

Jim Lyons finished off the scoring at 19:15 when he hit the empty net for his second goal of the game along with one assist.

Hoopsters Face Crucial Road Trip

By EARL BARROLL

For a team that was supposed to be no better than seventh in New England, third or sixth (depending on your magazine) in the Yankee Conference and somewhere in the past in the East, the prospects that could be awaiting the UMass basketball team as they embark on their weekend trip to northern New England are a bit on the staggering side.

The young, mistake-laden hoopsters of early December who found it was easy to win by 20 at home as it was to squander leads and lose by a point or two on the road have matured into a cohesive and exciting unit that has risen to second in the region, on the verge of an outright Yankee Conference title, a major upset of Penn at the Palestra and a chance for extending its season in the middle of next month.

With already one more win (15-6) than last year's team accumulated during their entire season (14-12) and a win skein that is now at eight, this season's quintet is being favorably compared not only with the manner in which the 1970 (first N.I.T.) team made its way to the tourney (winning 13 of its last 14) but also to the people who were involved.

How does Julius Erving's team of 1970 (and '71) rate with the present Minutemen? Jack Leaman feels this year's group (yes, the one without Erving) is all around superior. Why? "Because this team has more depth and more players that can do more things than the other teams," he says.

"The 1970 team had one standout performer in Julius. We don't have an Erving, but we do have a couple of guys who come close to him in Al Skinner and Tom McLaughlin. Both of these guys can really fire the team up like Erving did."

Which brings us to this weekend.

It was only a couple of weeks ago that Leaman was saying "if we need to win at New Hampshire and Maine I'll guarantee you these guys have too much pride to let them get by us."

"Need them" is an understatement. It is imperative that both games are victorious if any aspirations for a post season bid are still in the fire. It is imperative that both games are victorious if the Minutemen are to win the Yankee Conference title outright after being humiliated last season finishing behind UConn and Maine.

"If we are thinking N.I.T." said Leaman yesterday at the Cage, "if we are thinking about playing the likes of Indiana, Maryland or Florida State in New York we better be able to beat Maine and New Hampshire if we're dreaming about beating these other teams."

The setup for this first of its kind road trip (since Leaman's been here) has the Minutemen at New Hampshire tonight for a game with the Wildcats (8 p.m.). Immediately following the contest they'll travel to Portland to stay overnight and then on to Orono for a game with the Black Bears (7:35) on Saturday night.

"This trip will be more of a mental thing than physical", emphasized Leaman. "It's a tough assignment, but I think we have the talent to accomplish it."

There shouldn't be any need to re-introduce the ground rules governing Yankee Conference etiquette on the road. The fans are involved, for some the coaches are involved and even at times the officials are involved. "But," added Leaman, "if we're playing the way we're capable of there's no way the referees can effect the outcome."

Maine and New Hampshire play very much the same brand of basketball, which Leaman said "is a break as far as preparations are concerned." UMass lost to both these teams on the road last season. Since that time the Minutemen destroyed both at the Cage, but this is par for the course.

Actually the Black Bears have not lost at home to a league foe since the Ervings of 1970 beat them at the end of that season. Their most recent backyard conquest was a double overtime affair with UConn, 110-105, thus vaulting UMass into sole possession at the top (8-2).

And if U.N.H needs any home court examples check the Collegian of two days back that features the Wildcats' stunning upset at Durham of Holy Cross, 71-67, after being behind by as much as 17 points at one time.

The N.I.T. is not guaranteed with a Conference title. It is not guaranteed with a 19-6 record as some have said it was assured. But if the Minutemen are to have any prayer of New York City, the Conference title is a must, 19-6 a must and so tonight the "must" begins.

Wrestlers Host Tourney

By JOHN BOCK

"We need four champions to win it." With this brief statement Coach Homer Barr summed up the job his team has to go out and do as UMass hosts the first Championships of the New England University Wrestling Association. The field of competitors is Boston College, Boston University, Brown, UConn, Dartmouth, Holy Cross, Maine, UMass, UNH, and URI.

First question is where is Springfield? Answer—At the College Division New Englands at Wesleyan College. The NEUWA has been recognized by the NCAA as an official qualifying conference for the National Championships because they have "cleaned house" of all the College Division schools in the Conference. Some think this will take all the excitement out of the tourney.

To the contrary the NEUWA is expecting this event to be the stellar wrestling event of the year in New England. It will be a four team race; a real barnburner."

The four teams are Rhode Island, Boston UM, UMass, and Dartmouth. Ever since the Yankee Conference Tourney a few weeks ago New England wrestling has gone bananas. URI finished at the top of the pile in the YanCon with the Minutemen and BU close behind. Then three days later BU wrestled the Rams in a dual meet and beat them 21-19. UMass who had only two losses to their name went on the road and got zapped by army and Wilkes College. So going into the New Englands BU seems to be slightly favored on the basis of the 11-0 record and YanCon post mortem over URI.

Now UMass wrestles the toughest schedule in New England next to Springfield College and some of the schools with 10-1 records would have been hard pressed to break even with some of the same schools on their schedule. URI wrestles some of the same schools on their schedule. URI wrestles some tough teams, too but some of their kids run hot and cold so they are a question mark.

Perhaps the best way to figure it is to look at it weight by weight. At 118 Dave Amato of UMass is the top seed and by all rights is the tourney favorite after besting the field at the YanCon. He will be pushed by Rich Adham from URI, second in the YanCon, and Mike Beck from BU.

At 126 it seems to be between Scott Pucino of URI and UMass' Larry Reynolds. Pucino was the victor in a close match at the Yan Con but could be in for a surprise at UMass. The 134 pound bracket sees three standouts in Joe Savino of Rhody, Mike McGlaughlin representing the Minutemen, and Rick Freitas from BU. Savino was the Champ at the Yankee Meet, McGlaughlin was second. Freitas didn't make weight but was the second seed and has had an excellent dual meet season.

The 142-pound class has BU's Kryzak a slight favorite over UMass' Steve Rome. Dartmouth's John Burke could pull a few upsets and make it interesting. At 150 Dartmouth could have a real spoiler with Steve Morelli, last year's NEIWA Runnerup. He will be right in there with YanCon Champ Walt Bennett of BU and second place finisher Cliff Blom from UMass.

Steve Benson seems to have sort of a clear route to the 158 pound Championship. Brown University has a possible threat in Jim Miller but more likely opposition will be from BU's Davenport or Dartmouth's Dick Clark. The 167 pound class has URI's Jim Urqhart as a potential best but it will be much closer with Bill Donovan from Boston U and Darryl Gibson from Dartmouth as the chief threats.

The 177 pound bout may be the best of the tourney because it highlights the defending NEIWA Champ Stu Horowitz from URI and third placer Charlier Estin from Dartmouth as the number one and two boys. Estin lost in the New Englands to Horowitz last year but pinned him in the dual meet this year. Jones from BU lost to Horowitz in the YanCon but tied him in the dual. At 190 pounds BU's John Stoll is probably the top seed as he has beaten both Dambman and Rhode Island's Tad Sargent along the line. His victory over Dambman came in the C.W. Post Tourney and he beat Sargent in the finals of the YanCon.

The UMass Minutemen Basketball team will try to clinch the Yankee Conference Title and enhance their NIT hopes in traveling to Durham, New Hampshire, and Orono, Maine. Hear all the action on WMUA with Kent Best and Don Gorski. Air time Friday night will be 7:50 and Saturday night will be 7:25. (Photo by Gib Fullerton)

Trackmen In New Englands

By WALT POWERS

The track at the Coast Guard Academy site of tomorrow's New England Indoor track and field championships, is the fastest in New England, and for this reason, every record in the book is in jeopardy. A large contingent of the participating athletes figure to qualify for the national championships here, and this should do a lot for New England track.

B.C., Northeastern, and UConn are the teams to beat in this one. All three teams boast top quality competitors in nearly every event, but UMass coach Ken O'Brien thinks UConn will windup on top. UMass finished seventh last year, and O'Brien expects a similar showing this time around. "We have more depth than last year, but the loss of last season's top five scorers has been a major weakness, especially in the championship meets", said O'Brien.

Co-captain Steve Levine has the best shot at a victory in this meet. The tough, crafty senior has a fight on his hands every time he runs the 600', but he's only been beaten once this year, and on one of those occasions he was ill.

The other co-captain, Tony Pendleton, will buck a tough field in the dash. He's coming off the strongest indoor performance of his life last week in the Conference Championships. Freshman Curt Stegerwald conference runnerup in the hurdles, and Jim Hennessey have the potential to place in the hurdles.

In the 1,000 yard run, Peter Byron will make a run at the UMass freshman record as will junior John Maloney, who ran the fastest thousand of his life last week. O'Brien will run most of his distance men in the two-mile. UMass has scoring potential in the long jump, but only if Pete Ryan and Kelikeni Banda can avoid the fouling that has plagued them throughout the season.

Strong performances in the New Englands should qualify a big UMass contingent for next week's ICAAAA's, the final meet of the season.

Pucksters Take On Merrimack Saturday

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

The UMass hockey team faces some stern competition Saturday night as the Merrimack Warriors invade Orr Rink in a key Division II contest.

The Warriors are 11-4-1 in the division, the Minutemen 10-4-1. Thus, a UMass victory would propel the home squad ahead of the Warriors on the Division II ladder and a step closer to the top dog (UVM).

Both teams are coming off big victories: the Minutemen Wednesday night over Boston State 9-1, the Warriors Thursday night topping St. Anselm's 5-1. (UMass defeated St. A's 5-1 earlier in the season).

The last meeting of the two teams laid good evidence to the closeness of abilities of the two teams, as they fought to a 4-4 sudden-death tie at Merrimack's luxurious Peter S. Volpe Sports Complex. In that game the Minutemen came from behind twice (0-2-, 2-3) and took the lead (4-3) only to be caught by the Warriors in the third period.

UMass had their chances in the sudden-death overtime as they spent 4 minutes on the power play.

Come down to Orr Rink, Saturday night. Game time is 8:00.

Night Buses Start Wednesday

By BOB SCHEIER

The buses of the new UMass transit service are scheduled to start evening service later this week. Above, one of the buses approaches a stop near the Graduate Research Center . . .

After requests from women and others concerned over rapes and attempted rapes of hitchhikers in the UMass area, the Student Senate Transit Service's new off-campus routes are scheduled to begin night service starting Wednesday, service operations manager says.

According to operations manager Bob Godding, all seven of the routes will be serviced from around 6:30 P.M., to around 11 p.m. Four buses instead of the ten during the daytime will be running.

Announcement of the evening service follows a vote last week by the student senate to pay the operating expenses for the buses during the evening. The original federal/UMass/Student Senate funding did not provide for evening service.

Godding said a new schedule for the bus routes, including corrections of earlier errors and the addition of several new bus stops will be printed in the Collegian later this week.

Acording to Godding, one bus would run at night on the South Deerfield and Sunderland route, one on the Belchertown Center and Belchertown Rd. route, one bus on the North Amherst Stadium route, and a fourth on the Orchard Hill and Southwest route.

The vote by the senate to fund the costs of the evening service—which Godding estimated at about $60 per night for drivers' salaries and fuel—came after students and others had praised the transit system, but asked why it couldn't be extended to nighttime to protect students from hitchhiking or walking to their destinations.

Original funding for the project came mostly from the federal government, with smaller amounts coming from the UMass administration and the student senate. Coupled with anticipated changes in parking regulations and traffic patterns in the area, the system is designed to be a test of how well mass transit can cure urban traffic problems.

So far, the only part of the system to be put into effect—the buses—seems to have been a success. Godding said that of a total daily capacity of 1,400 persons a recent passenger count had showed 1,270 had actually been carried.

He said the "total capacity" figure assumed all 39 seats on each bus were full, with another dozen or so persons standing.

While some persons had called for weekend as well as night service, Godding said the original proposal did not fund either night or weekend service for the first semester.

He said the federal grant did include funds next semester for experimental night and weekend service.

Godding also said he has no changes in the routes this semester "unless there was a drastic need," although he said the service might recommit some buses (transfer them from one route to another) if the need developed.

He also said the service might commit more than the present ten buses out of the 13 being used for the project to actual service, if the traffic and parking changes make it necessary.

Currently, only ten busses are actually being used on routes. The rest are set aside as backups or are being maintained.

Several of the buses will also be converted to propane fuel during the spring vacation, Godding said, with the rest converted over the summer.

Propane fuel is much cleaner than either gasoline or diesel fuel engines, Godding said, emitting only "trace" (barely detectable) emissions.

Conversion of the buses would only require additional carburetors, pressurized propane tanks, and new fuel lines, in addition to a slight retuning of each bus engine, he said.

Hoopsters Beat New Hampshire, Me.

By EARLE BARROLL

DURHAM, N.H., ORONO, Me.—Where does one begin to relate after 650 miles plus of the most unique and perhaps important basketball venture in the history of UMass? Indeed, it is a hard act to follow.

Without question you had to be there in person to fully appreciate what this journey was all about. For within a span of 24 hours the Minutemen performed in two foreign gyms and emerged as the champions of the Yankee Conference for this season.

On Friday night they defeated New Hampshire, 76-64; Saturday night the victim was Maine, 78-71. The double win upped their season record to 17-6. It also keeps the victory string alive at ten. And it convinced a coach that his team is ready for a post season tourney.

"I feel that we deserve a bid now," said a relieved Jack Leaman. "I felt that we needed to win the Conference outright before we could be considered for a bid. We have a big string of wins going, we beat Penn at their gym, we played Providence nip and tuck at theirs. This is definitely a tourney team."

Book Sold Out? Here's Why

By JOANNE RESTEGHINI

You've just finished a 20-minute walk through howling gales, mud, and slush. You squeeze into a building that would make a Kennedy corner room seem spacious. You fight a vicious crowd and finally reach your destination: the Economics section of the textbook annex. But woe is you. The book you want just isn't there.

Sound familiar?

It should. Practically everyone on campus has been hassled at one time or another hutning for textbooks.

"The Textbook Annex is faced with several problems," says Peter Pezza, Manager of the Annex. "However, the two main problems which effect students are the physical limitations of the building and the selling out of textbooks."

Pezza says there are three reasons why a book might not be in stock:

The publisher might not have had the book in his stock or it might have been out of print and the publisher did not notify the annex in time;

Or, the professor of a class may not have given the annex an accurate estimation of the number of texts needed;

Or the class may have been overenrolled and therefore, fewer books were ordered than needed.

The actual process of ordering books is a complicated one. It begins with the yellow order form which is sent to each professor three months before the next semester. The Professor orders any text and edition he wishes. The Textbook Annex acts as an agent by placing the order and keeping the master cards. When a book comes in depends on the efficiency of the publisher. When a book is reordered it usually takes the order two to four weeks if the publishing company is on the East Coast and six to ten weeks if it is on the West Coast.

Pezza said, "There are some cases where we do underorder. This is only when we know a book has been used for a few semesters. We count on a certain number of the used copies to be returned to us to sell. If enough students do not return their used books this can create a shortage."

"On the other hand, many professors overorder and we get stuck with texts which are never sold and we lose money." The Textbook Annex is part of the Campus Center. Any loss or profit does eventually effect the students.

Pezza explained that the Publisher determines the price of a book. The University receives a twenty percent discount from the Publisher and they, in turn, offer a five percent discount to students on textbooks.

"Many students do not realize that UMass is one of three colleges in New England which offers a discount on textbooks to students. But by offering a discount to students, that leaves with a small margin for operating costs."

The Textbook Annex is also faced with problems concerning the physical limitations of the building it is in.

"The conditions of the Annex are poor," said Pezza. "The building was built as a warehouse, not for use as a bookstore. It is not a very pleasant place to come to or work in."

Students are aware ot the limited space of the warehouse when they come to buy books at the beginning of the semester. During the first few weeks of the semester, which Pezza calls "the rush period", police are often needed to keep too many students from entering the building at the same time.

"Not only is there a lack of space for students to move around in but there's a lack of space for all the books," he said. "We're forced to keep many books stored in boxes under the counters since there's just no room to put them out. There's also not enough room to add more registers to shorten the wait of the students in line to buy a book."

Among the steps taken to make it easier to find a book has been the changing of the floor plan. The courses are now arranged in alphabetical order.

According to Pezza, negotiations are under way to move the Textbook Annex to Goodell Library when the new library is opened. "All these problems could be worked out if we could use Goodell," he said.

Student Aid Urged If Tuition Hike

By MARK VOGLER

UMass administrative heads said Sunday that there would be no hike in tuition for state colleges and universities unless adequate financial aid for students could be provided by the legislature to help pay the increase.

Peter Edelman, UMass vice-president for policy and plans, said that the State Board of Higher Education voted Friday in recognition of the fact that there is a "great gap" in financial aid in the state. "The secretary of educational affairs had taken steps to propose a program to the legislature to fill the financial aid increase," he explained.

"And if that's done, the Board of Higher Education would be prepared to recommend to the Board of the individual segments of the state to increase the tuition consistent to the autonomy of the institutions."

Edelman said it was important to understand the fact that there is an estimated deficit of 30 million dollars for financial aid in Massachusetts.

He also indicated that state colleges and universities could stand a chance to lose 10 to 15 million dollars in federally funded financial aid "if the kinds of problems connected with Nixon's budget materialize."

If financial aid can be met by the state, then students would pay 30 to 40% of the actual tuition expenses, providing the Board's proposal becomes effective.

Currently across the state, $1200 per year is spent to educate each student at a Community College while $2400 per year is spent to educate each student at the state university.

Tuition at state universities now runs $300 per year.

Edelman said that if the Board's recommendation goes through, tuition costs could rise to an amount between $360 and $480 at Community colleges and up to between $720 and $960 at state universities and colleges.

UMass President Robert C. Wood said he would understand the Board's proposal, saying that "we certainly don't want any increase in tuition until there's an assurance of adequate student aid."

Wood said that he's basically a "low man" when it comes to tuition. He said he agreed with the Board's linkage of tuition increases with adequate financial aid, but added "I'm not ready to sign off the costs of tuition which the students must pay."

"I'm glad that the Board has finally put the horse in front of the cart," he said.

Wood said student aid was not a prerequisite for proposed tuition hikes last year.

"It's really not time to focus in on a tuition hike. I'd much rather see student aid and reorganization settle before we start delving into this issue. I think it's important to understand that the Board's proposal is only one of a variety of proposals," Wood said.

Wood also said that there existed a problem in low cost tuition in that it "could place a damper and depression on getting quality education."

"But, somehow, there must be consideration taken of a contingency of a rising tuition along with adequate financial aid to support the hike."

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said he was a "low" or "no" man when tuition hikes are proposed. He said that a rise in tuition would ultimately lead to a "welfare educational system."

According to Bromery, "The trouble is the very people who so desperately need financial aid don't know how to get it.

"I feel the poor are the last people to find out how to attain financial aid or grants. The system requires too much of a level of sophistication to get to it. That is why until we find some way not to be blocked by rising educational expenses, we should try to find a way to get the financial aid we need.

Bromery maintains that a rising tuition would generate more money for financial aid, but at the same time discourage the "poor segment" of the Commonwealth from even seeking help which he claims they are unknowledgeable of in the first place.

"Unless we devise some other system to meet the financial aid of the needy students, then these people aren't going to make it. How many poor people make it into large private institutions of the state? Financial aid is supposed to aid those who show the most need."

Bromery said that a possible increase in tuition would cause the growing segment of "have-nots" in the Commonwealth to grow larger.

Faculty Favors ROTC Credit

By DON DESHOT

While the motion concerning the re-granting of academic credit to the ROTC program highlighted last Thursday's meeting of the Faculty Senate, other motions were passed at that time which could have campus-wide importance.

A motion was made Thursday, on behalf of Prof. Howard Brogan, which urged the administration "to immediately reassess the fire hazards in the high rise buildings on campus."

The motion gained quick acceptance, after brief testimony from a small number of senators.

Aside from the dangers present in those buildings on campus with heat activated elevators, testimony was given as to the present liability of the Amherst Fire Department to deal adequately with fires above approximately 12 stories.

One senator from the psychology department, whose new headquarters in Tobin Hall were recently damaged by fire, stated that Amherst Fire Chief Basko confided to him that his department was not overly concerned with dealing with fires in any of the low rise buildings on campus, but that they were "deathly afraid" of the possibility of fire in any of the high rise buildings on campus, especially the Campus Center and the new Graduate Research Center.

Chancellor Bromery, who was present at the meeting, stated that the administration was very much aware of the problem, and was currently attempting to find a solution to the problem.

A proposal from student senator Nick Apostola, that any study initiated into the fire hazards in the high rise buildings on campus be certain to include the towers in Southwest, was accepted without question by the Senate.

According to the wording of the recommendation, the Administration is supposed to report its findings back to the Faculty Senate no later than March 8th.

Another issue which received much discussion last Thursday, but which was left unresolved, was a motion that stated: "That each new faculty member be provided at the time of his appointment with a copy of the University policy on tenure and with a written account of the tenure status of the department."

This recommendation, which came from the Senate's Tenure and Grievance Committee, was the subject of a good deal of amendment and debate.

Some professors argued that this material should be made available to each prospective faculty member at the time of his application. Others felt that this information should be kept fairly confidential, so as to not "broadcast throughout the country" the faculty status at UMass.

No final decision was forthcoming on Thursday and the entire motion was tabled.

UMass Debate Team Continues To Win

By ED PEPYNE

The UMass debate team continues its winning streak with victories over such first rate teams as Northwestern, Ithaca and Columbia.

UMass was awarded a quarter finalist trophy at Northwestern where UMass was represented by the almost untouchable Terry Hofmann and Roger Legendre. In the preliminary rounds Terry and Roger had a 6-2 record beating the University of Wisconsin at Milwaukee, Cal. State at Fullerton, University of Wisconsin at Madison, Texas Christian, and Houston. Their losses were to Pittsburg and Macalaster.

In the elimination rounds Terry and Roger soundly beat top seeded Canisius on a 5-2 ballot. UMass then advanced to the quarter final round where they lost to Houston.

Jill Peltin and Gary Jackacky went to the Ithaca College tournament on February 18 and came back with a second place varsity trophy. Jill and Gary had a 4-2 record downing Cornell, St. John's, and East Stroudsberg (twice). Both the UMass losses came at the hands of tournament winner Niagara.

Columbia University witnessed two first year debaters from UMass advance to the final round of the tournament held at Columbia this past weekend. Ronnie Arnold and John Adams qualified for the elimination rounds by beating Pace, Bridgeport, Princeton, and Albany. They were dealt losses by Scranton and Bowdoin.

In the quarter final round Ronnie and John beat Scranton and advanced to the semifinal round where they overpowered Delaware. In the final round UMass was nudged out by Bowdoin on a 3-2 decision and was presented with a finalist trophy.

SW Blackout

A blackout ended shortly after it began around 7 o'clock last night in John Adams tower, but Physical Plant workers were still not sure late last night how the lights came back.

According to Ed Cadran, a technical specialist at the work control section of Physical Plant, repairmen were "just working there (Adams tower) and the lights came on again. "The cause of the failure is expected to be known sometime today."

10,000 UMies Pay WMPIRG (So Far)

By AVIS YUNI

While final computations will not be completed for at least one and one-half months, are that about 9,600 UMass undergrads and Stockbridge students elected to pay the $2 optional Western Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (WMPIRG) fee this semester.

A spokeswoman for the Registrar's Office explained that the final tally on the number of students who paid the WMPIRG fee this semester cannot be computed yet because all tuition bills haven't been paid.

The money that may be allotted from students with scholarships, loans, and those coming under the GI bill has not yet been cleared.

"Last semester it took from September through December, four months, for the money to be cleared and accounted for," said Ronald Bogard, lawyer and Director of WMPIRG.

At the final tally, WMPIRG received $25,115.20 last semester, the support of 12,557 UMass undergrads and Stockbridge students or 70% of the same.

So far, about 54% of these students have been determined to have supported WMPIRG this semester through the optional fee.

"At this point, the 9,600 people is more than (what was determined) after two months last semester but it's not the final tally," Bogard stated. "They may be just further along in their computations."

"I'd be very disappointed if only 9,600 paid because 13,000 did last semester before we did anything."

Man's Best Friend Helps UMass Grad

By DON GLICKSTEIN

You got the graduation blues, a bachelor's degree in English, bleak prospects for getting a teaching job, and somehow, getting a job with the First National Bank isn't very appealing.

So what's a body gonna do?

You might buy a used book shop from a retired New Yorker sick of the bucholic Pioneer Valley, and you might start raising bull mastiff guard dogs.

That's what Jeff Dwyer did.

Jeff is a senior English major, a Navy veteran, who commutes to UMass from Florence. A year ago, he wandered into the Hadley Book Shop on Route 9 and struck up a conversation with its owner, Haskell Grubruger, a retired book dealer from Manhattan who had come to Hadley in 1970 for some peace and quiet in the country.

The two talked about cars, and speculated about opening a do-it yourself auto repair shop. The shop never became a reality, but Grubruger gave Jeff a part-time job. By the end of 1972, Grubruger decided that he had had enough of the country and that he missed New York. He sold the Hadley Book Shop to Jeff, who knew little about business, but who was fascinated by books. Jeff also wanted a job when he graduated.

Meanwhile mastiffs are watch dogs extraordinary. Weighing 120-145 pounds, the dogs were originally bred in the 18th Century by game wardens to attack poachers.

"Their appearance is awesome," explains Jeff, "and the males automatically attack any other male dog. And win."

John D. Rockefeller introduced bull mastiffs to the United States in 1947. They are gentle with children.

Jeff's dogs have won several prizes at dog shows, where they are judged for poise, response to commands, and alertness. Contacts with prospective buyers are also made at dog shows, for bull mastiffs are too aggressive towards other dogs to be kept in pet shops. Jeff gets a stud fee for the use of his male—either the cost of a pup or the choice of the litter.

Food for Jeff's 3 dogs runs to only $6 a week. He doesn't feed them much canned dog; a prepared baked "kibble"—an amalgamation of various stuffs—doesn't absorb water like commercial food, but instead, is coated by the water. This, Jeff assured, is much easier on the dog's stomach.

Jeff plans to make his book shop a relaxing place to browse by adding easy chairs and a couch to the store. He also hopes to provide tea and coffee on a donation basis.

Currently, the book shop has a large stock of psychology books, literature, philosophy, sociology, and American history.

And a couple of dog books.

Cronkite Raps Pres. Nixon

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP)—Television newscaster Walter Cronkite accused the Nixon administration Sunday of manipulating public opinion so that "to stand up and defend freedom of speech and press is to appear anit-Nixon."

Cronkite made the charge in a speech before the 105th annual convention of the American Association of School Administrators.

The CBS-TV News anchorman said the Nixon administration was trying to raise its own credibility "by dragging down that of the press."

Cronkite also referred to the government's recently announced proposal to hold local stations responsible for the contents of network news. "The administration seeks to bring the network news programs to heel by making them responsive to the local stations, where it has licensing authority, and thus can bring political and financial pressures to bear," he said.

UMass Offers Bowles Tenure

By BILL DENSMORE

Harvard "radical" economist Samuel S. Bowles says he has received a verbal offer of a tenured position for 1974 on the economics faculty at UMass-Amherst.

The offer came, he says, from the acting head of the Economics Department, Dean Alfange, Jr., who is expected to send a formal letter to Bowles within a few days. Both Robert L. Gluckstern, Vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs and Alfange are reluctant to discuss the offer.

"We do not give out such information," Gluckstern said Friday, "because it might be damaging to the people involved." Gluckstern explained that job offers should be public only if the people involved wish them to be so, and that he considers them "confidential".

The Economics Department here plans to hire up to six new faculty members, among them Herbert M. Gintis, a lecturer in education at Harvard and a close associate of Bowles.

Gintis said Friday that "the decision is still up in the air" but that if a position is offered, "I'll have to think about it."

Of the five other economists being considered, two are presently at the City College of New York, one with a Ph.D. from MIT; and a third is studying at the University of Nairobi in Kenya, Africa.

According to one source, the five other men being considered for positions at UMass all share "non-orthodox" views of economics, because they attempt to relate economics to sociology and politics, instead of treating it in a more rigid, mathematical sense.

Bowles was denied tenure on the Harvard faculty last December allegedly because of his "radical" economics, and is a member of the Union of Radical Political Economists (URPE) a group which works with the orthodox American Economists Association but is separate from it.

He is the son of Chester Bowles, former Governor and Congressman from Connecticut, Ambassador to India, and aide to President Kennedy.

Dean Alfange has said that Bowles "has a reputation as being an outstanding economist" particularly in the economics of education.

The UMass Economics Department was assessed in recent years by a group of nationally known economists which recommended that it diversify. The present hiring is thought to be an attempt at bringing diversity into the department.

One academic source said that Bowles may not accept the tenured position here unless several other "un-orthodox" economists are hired at the same time.

Acting Department Head Alfange said Friday that the possibility of offering positions to the other four economists "appear to be good," and that "at this point the machinery is in progress."

According to an administration source, two of the four, including Gintis, are to be offered tenured positions. The UMass economics faculty presently has eleven tenured and fourteen non-tenured positions.

Russian Diet Improved

By WILLIAM N. OATIS
Associated Press Writer

(AP) — A new U.N. study shows that Russians eat almost as well as Americans and certainly much better than they did 20 years ago before the Soviet Union shifted emphasis from industry to agriculture.

The bulky study on "the realization of economic, social and cultural rights," says that up to the early 1950s Soviet food consumption standards "must be described as low."

The average Russian ate only 63.8 pounds of meat and fats a year, no more than the average Bolivian and Peruvian today. His fish consumption was only 15-18 pounds.

By 1970, the average Russian was eating 121 pounds of meat and fats yearly and 39 pounds of fish, second only to the fishing peoples of Scandinavia, the Iberian Peninsula and the Pacific.

"It was only after the wholesale reorientation of economic policy in favor of agriculture in the early 1950s that nutritional standards began to improve," the report declares.

Communists Fail To Give US New POW Release List

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP) — The Communist side failed Sunday to give the United States a list of the American prisoners scheduled for release this week in North and South Vietnam or to fix a specific day, time and place to hand them over U.S. spokesman said.

There was no official reason given. But the Communist side was embittered by rock-throwing, banner-waving, shouting mobs of South Vietnamese compounds in the northern cities of Hue and Da Nang. The demonstrations apparently were tacitly sanctioned by the Saigon government, but got out of hand.

Seven North Vietnamese delegates to the four-party Joint Military Commission and two South Vietnamese policemen were reported injured. The chief spokesman for the North Vietnamese delegation, Bui Tin, said four of the Communist delegates were seriously wounded in the Hue demonstration.

Tin told Associated Press reporter Carl Robinson, however, he did not think the demonstrations would affect the American prisoner release, expected Tuesday according to U.S. reckoning.

Although declaring that South Vietnam "is now on the verge of a very dangerous situation," Tin said North Vietnam is "determined to abide by the peace agreement and the protocols."

He indicated that one major problem still unresolved is a dispute between the Communist side and the Saigon government over the release of Vietnamese civilian prisoners.

"While we sympathize with the families of the American POWs, I want to remind you that here in Vietnam there are thousands of families waiting for their kin to retun from detention," Tin said. "We want to satisfy this sentiment and bring them back together."

Maj. Gen. Daniel James, a top spokesman at the Pentagon in Washington, refused to tie the delay in the list to the troubles at Hue and Da Nang.

"We are still expecting the list tomorrow," James said.

James said he understood that North Vietnamese and Viet Cong representatives in Saigon told Maj. Gen. Gilbert Woodward, the chief U.S. representative on the Joint Military Commission, that they were having trouble communicating with their people in the field. Other sources expressed the view that the Communists are "playing games with us."

U.S. spokesmen said that according to the U.S. timetable, the list of about 140 POWs should have been handed over Sunday and the prisoners released on Tuesday. They added, however, that if the United States receives the list Monday and gets agreement on times and sites, they probably still can get the prisoners out Tuesday.

"They are trying to humiliate us, making us sweat it out," said one U.S. source.

Ministers To Complete Pact

By ARTHUR L. GAVSHON
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP) — Foreign ministers assembled for a Vietnam peace conference neared agreement Sunday on rules for their whirlwind talks to round out the Washington-Hanoi peace deal.

On the eve of the conference beginning today, two developments were reported in the works:

—A "hands-off Vietnam" pledge by the big powers and the international community in general. This is likely to take the form of a conference declaration.

—A formula that would put the chairmanship of the conference into the orbit of the four-nation Commission of Control and Supervision that is to police the peace settlement. Members are Canada, Poland, Indonesia and Hungary.

The conference, provided for the in cease-fire pact signed Jan. 27 has brought together foreign ministers of six Communist and six non-Communist regimes plus Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim of the United Nations.

Participants are the Soviet Union, China, Poland, Hungary, North Vietnam, the Viet Cong's Provisional Revolutionary Government, the United States, Britain, France, Canada, Indonesia and South Vietnam.

Waldheim is taking part as a symbol of the interest of the international community.

Formal proceedings begin at 10 a.m. in the former Hotel Majestic, now a conference center in downtown Paris near the Arc de Triomphe. It is expected to last less than a week.

A rush of consultations among the delegations improved prospects for a compromise over the chairmanship and other procedural arrangements.

Several countries, including the United States and Britain, had favored Waldheim as the only true neutral chairman. But North Vietnam, the Viet Cong's Provisional Revolutionary Government and China objected. All appear dead set against any U.N. role in postwar Vietnam.

Another possibility that came up for discussion behind the scenes was to select as chairman the foreign minister of France, representing the host country. But this idea was short-lived. South Vietnam objected vehemently.

It was then that Canada, playing a middle role in the comings and goings, put up the idea of rotating or sharing the chairmanship between the four members of the control commission.

Foreign Minister Mitchell Sharp of Canada, like China's Chi Pang-fei, had a long private session during the day with Secretary of State William P. Rogers about these and other conference matters.

One idea under study would have the conference turn into a continuing structure, complete with a secretariat that could receive and deal with reports. American, British and Chinese diplomats have reported, however, they want to set up as little as possible in the way of new organs or institutions.

Delegates reported the "hands-off-Vietnam" pledge will amount, in effect, to a commitment by outside powers to leave the people of Indochina to sort out their own problems in their own way and in their own time.

Panel Investigates Peace Violation

By RICHARD BLYSTONE
Associated Press Writer

SA HUYNH, Vietnam (AP) — International peacekeeping observers made their first field investigation Sunday–a one-sided look at a month-old cease-fire violation in the pastel rubble of this seaside town.

Violation Occurred

"Obviously a violation has occurred," said Maj. Jerrold Donahue of Ottawa after a guided tour of what looked like a village plucked from the Mediterranean shore and dropped from a thousand feet onto the northern Vietnamese coast.

"We got what we came for," said Donahue, "but it's very difficult to say what the conclusion will be. You must remember that this violation took place at the end of January."

Donahue said he would frame the International Commission of Control and Supervision report and discuss it with the one Canadian, two Poles, two Indonesians and two Hungarians who accompanied him from the team base at Chu Lai.

He said that if the conclusions of the team are unanimous, they will be submitted to the commission at Da Nang by March 1.

"We're just here to find out what we can," he added. "We could only find out from one side. The other side isn't here and there's no way to contact them."

Viet Cong Ask For Probe

It was the absent Viet Cong who originally asked for a probe of what happened at Sa Huynh, an ideal port and roadblock in a region where they have many friends.

But there were no Viet Cong, officially, within 10 miles when the peacekeeping team arrived by helicopter with an escort of U.S. and South Vietnamese Joint Military Commission officers and the commander of South Vietnam's 2nd Infantry Division, Brig. Gen. Tran Van Nhut.

North Viets Assist U.S.

North Vietnamese delegates to the Joint Military Commission at Chu Lai had been invited to help the American and South Vietnamese members "assist" the peacekeeping team, said U.S. Lt. Col. Leland Holland, but they declined. As for the Viet Cong, they have not yet displayed their commission teams to the northern region.

Nhut and the Quang Ngai Province chief, Col. Ngo Van Loi, pointed out Communist 82mm mortar rounds and recoilless rifle casings to illustrate their contention that this was South Vietnamese territory that was attacked by two North Vietnamese regiments after the cease-fire, and that taking it back was their right.

One South Vietnamese officer said his troops were searching for a graveyard of 30 militiamen, village officials and policement reported executed after the Communist force entered the village Jan. 28 and militia forces withdrew. No corroboration for the reported execution was

Israel Offers To Pay Kin

By MAL McCLURE
Associated Press Writer

TEL AVIV (AP) — The Israeli government announced yesterday it will offer payments to the families of victims of the Libyan airline tragedy.

"In deference to humanitarian considerations, the government resolves its readiness to effect ex-gratia payments to the families of the victims," said a communique from the government's weekly Cabinet session.

A spokesman said the word "compensation" was deliberately not used because "it implied Israeli guilt for the incident."

Ex gratia means "out of kindness."

Israeli warplanes fired on a Libyan Boeing 727 jetliner last Wednesday and forced it to crash land after the airliner strayed off course and flew over Israeli military positions along the Suez Canal. One hundred and six of the 113 persons aboard died in the crash.

The Cabinet said they had received no requests for an international inquiry into the incident, but were making available to "competent international factors...any information available to Israel concerning the interception of the plane."

The Cabinet communique said the government "took note" of a military investigation into the crash and chief of staff Lt. Gen. David Elazar's decision to shoot at the airliner.

The spokesman said the question of Elazar's resignation never came up at the Cabinet session and added that Israel's top soldier has "the full backing of the government."

News Analysis

Opinion Against Israel

By C.C. MINICLIER
Associated Press Writer

CAIRO (AP) — As Egypt moved on several fronts toward peace last week, Israel attacked a Lebanese refugee camp 112 miles from her border and downed a commercial airliner, killing 106 persons from eight countries.

The combination of events shattered Israel's carefully developed stance as the peace-loving little country amid hostile enemies, as world public opinion condemned the attacks shortly before premier Golda Meir goes to Washington in quest of new American arms.

"Israel proved to the whole world that it does not want peace," an Egyptian newspaper said Sunday.

The Soviet press said earlier that the plane incident was designed to hinder efforts toward a peace settlement.

The dowing of the plane over Egyptian Sinai–occupied by Israeli troops in total disregard of repeated U.N. resolutions since 1967–raises the question of the Israeli occupation once more, Al Ahram said yesterday.

Families Beset On All Sides

By LYNNE OLSON
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP)-The families of today aren't receiving much help from the institutions around them, including government, schools and churches, according to a psychiatrist specializing in marriage and the family.

"Institutions exist to destroy the family," said Dr. Robert A. Ravich, associate professor of psychiatry at Cornell School. "The more the family goes downhill, the more the power of the institutions increase."

Ravich appeared on a panel discussing the future of the family at a conference on new lifestyles sponsored by the New York Society of Clinical Psychologists.

Most of the psychiatrists and psychologists participating agreed the modern family is far from dying, although it does face serious problems.

"If you don't help, you're doing things to destroy, and these institutions certainly aren't helping," Ravich said.

"I've asked a number of people in government offices, 'Is the government interested in the family?' " Ravich said. "The answer is repeatedly 'no'."

The recent return of the Vietnam prisoners of war, he said, pointed up the fact that their families had been splintered for several years because of the military and other institutions.

"Churches haven't concerned themselves with the family. They don't support the family," said Ravich. He said the churches' concern ends with the wedding ceremony.

Education, he added, has shown no concern for preparing students for future parenthood and family responsibilities, and large corporations and businesses do little or nothing to encourage the strengthening of family life of their employes.

Nixon To Set Flexible Wage Standards

By BILL NEIKIRK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — In doing away with a numerical pay standard, President Nixon may be assuming more cooperation from organized labor, fewer strikes and wage demands that are not so large, during a year when several large contracts expire.

The White House is set to announce Monday that it will put into effect a flexible wage standard to replace the old 5.5 per cent that has prevailed since November, 1971.

The new standard, although it does not focus on a number, is expected to make some allowance for the recent sharp increase in food prices, a sore point with the working man.

Also, the administration is expected to name a committee composed of union and business leaders to monitor the food price situation.

A high level administration source said Sunday the flexibility will allow workers to catch up with recent sharp increases in the cost of food.

"In addition, to flexibility for wage inequities and historical wage differences between and among unions, there will also be recognition of the recent extraordinary rise in food prices," the source said.

He added, however, that it would be wrong to conclude that the basic 5.5 per cent guideline was being abandoned altogether, and that when food prices level off the additional wage flexibility would also be removed.

The new standard was written by a labor-management advisory committee to the Cost of Living Council composed of the nation's most prominent business and labor leaders. George Meany, president of the AFL—CIO, sat in on the discussions.

The 5.5 per cent was adopted for the Phase 2 economic program, and the President kept it for the early part of the largely voluntary system of Phase 3 controls. In addition, workers could get an extra 0.7 per cent annually in increased fringe benefits.

Sources describe the new standard as "very carefully worded" and representing the work of the administration, organized labor and business.

The administration late last year had been predicting that the wage negotiations in large industries in 1973 would be relatively peaceful. It said that the control system had helped to restrain the rate of inflation and to give workers an increase in real spendable earnings, factors which would tend to moderate wage demands.

But the sharp rise in food prices at the wholesale and consumer levels in December and January, and probably for the next several months if Nixon's own forecasts are correct, threatened that argument.

Congress Must Act On Blocked Funds

By JOE HALL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress must act this week to provide money for agencies covered by two appropriations bills stymied in the battle between President Nixon and the legislators.

The situation illustrates one of the many difficulties facing Congress in its struggle to set up machinery to bring the federal budget under control.

Even though the current fiscal year is two-thirds over, bills covering the Labor and Health, Education and Welfare Departments and foreign aid have not yet been enacted.

Nixon twice vetoed $30 billion Labor-HEW measures last fall, contending they were too big.

A $3.6 billion foreign aid bill has been blocked because Congress has not been able to agree with the administration on terms of the basic legislation authorizing this money.

The House last week voted to take care of the agencies for the remaining four months of the fiscal year with a stopgap measure called a "continuing resolution".

This permits them to spend on the basis of previous actions taken by Congress.

The agencies now are operating under such a resolution but it expires Wednesday. The Senate will take up the new resolution Monday.

Congress has a joint committee studying the problem of budget control. Under a procedure that is being considered Congress would act in three steps:

1. Fix a spending ceiling for the year at the outset of each session.
2. Act on the money bills separately through the session as at present.
3. Enact a final cleanup bill makings cuts or other changes necessary to assure that the final spending total stays within the ceiling.

The crucial step in this process would be the third. Obviously it would not work if the White House and the Capitol got into a battle as in the current year and some of the money bills were not enacted until eights months or more into the fiscal year.

Veteran congressional staffers view this as only one of the obstacles that will make it hard to set up an effective system to hold down federal spending.

More fundamental, they say, is the anomaly under which Congress acts on an appropriations budget each year in a way that has little or no effect on the spending budget.

The amounts included in appropriations measures may be spent in the upcoming year or in future years. The sums in the spending budget are made up of appropriations from past years as well as those voted currently.

NATORE, BANGLADESH (AP) — Prime Minister Mujibur Rahman proposed Sunday that Bangladesh and Pakistan immediately swap hundreds of thousands of unwanted civilians. He indicated that if Pakistan doesn't agree, he might dump 300,000 non-Bengali Moslems in the lap of the world community.

Mujib said Bangladesh has no room for the members of the Urdu-speaking Bihari minority who have told his Bengali government they would rather live in Pakistan.

If Pakistan rejects them, he said, "the world community should purchase an island for them."

Mujib's exchange proposal envisions trade of the dissatisfied Biharis, still living in refugee camps 15 months after Bangladesh was born of what was East Pakistan in the 1971 India-Pakistan war, for as many as 400,000 Bengalis stranded in Pakistan by the war.

"This can be done even before Pakistan recognizes Bangladesh," the sheik said in an interview. Mujib has said previously that any negotiations between the countries must be conducted as equals, with full recognition on both sides.

The offer went beyond a proposal already under consideration by India, Pakistan and Bangladesh to repatriate about 6,000 Pakistani women and children held in India in exchange for 10,000 Bengali dependents in Pakistan.

Mujib said the offer would not apply to 70,000 Pakistani military prisoners held in India, although he refused to rule out the possibility that the 20,000 civilian and paramilitary internees might be involved.

A Tribute To Dr. H.T.U. Smith

By MARK VOGLER

Three colleagues personally recruited to the University of Massachusetts Geology and Geography Department by the late Professor Harold T. U. Smith said Saturday that he was responsible for building an "unknown" department into one that has become internationally known.

Professor Smith, 64, of Arnold Road, Pelham, died Thursday night in Holyoke Hospital of complications from a gunshot wound inflicted in his home three weeks ago.

Myron Smith, his son, 30, was charged with assault and battery with a dangerous weapon and attempted murder in the shooting.

"Professor Smith took the department out of the basement of Fernald Hall to the first floor of the Morrill Science building and put it on the map," UMass Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said.

Bromery, who had been a geologist with the United States Geological Survey, was recruited by Prof. Smith in 1967. There are 23 faculty members presently in the department whom Smith recruited.

According to the university chancellor, "Professor Smith was sought all over the world. And aside from the fact that many people could testify to his competence, he was a gentleman the like of which I never met before—just a perfect gentleman."

Bromery labled him as a "rugged outdoor-type guy."

"He was just a bundle of energy, a bundle of intellect, and a bundle of goodness. He trampled in the sands of the Sahara all the way into the snowbanks of the northern climate."

Oswald C. Farquhar, a Geology professor who had worked with Smith at both the University of Kansas and UMass, said the deceased professor would be remembered as "an inspiring leader of Geology and education in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts."

Farquhar said that his wide knowledge of desserts, peri-glacial terrain, and other sparsely populated parts of this planet, "uniquely qualified him to be called upon to interpret surface features of the Moon and Mars."

"H.T.U. Smith's work on deserts and sub-arctic lands is well known in many countries throughout the world," Farquhar said.

"Throughout a teaching career divided between two universities, he extended his investigations into other parts of the mid-continent, the northwest, Poland, Australia, and Antarctic, as well as North and South Africa," continued Farquhar.

Prof. Joseph Hartshorn, head of the UMass department of Geology and Geography, had been recruited along with Chancellor Bromery in 1967 while with the U.S. Geological Survey.

"I really don't know where we are going to look to find an adequate replacement for Prof. Smith. We are certainly not going to get anybody of the experience he had; especially with his special expertise," Hartshorn said.

Hartshorn stated that a great deal can be accredited to his (Smith's) driving force in the university. He noted that Smith was internationally known in two fields.

"Prof Smith was an expert in the geology of arid regions, particularly the deserts of North Africa. He was also skilled in the area of pre-glacial geology, the study of areas around the ice sheet."

Hartshorn remarked that the loss of Prof. Smith would also leave a "big hole" in the specialty of aerial photography interpretation.

Prior to his shooting, Prof. Smith had been working for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) on an investigation said to involve moon rocks.

He was also affiliated with the Earth Resources Technology Satelite team which is studying the features of the surface of Mars. Smith had been head of the Geology and Geography department for 13 years before relinquishing the title to Chancellor Bromery.

Trustee Appointed

By BILL DENSMORE

A forty-year-old Worcester businessman has been sworn in as a UMass trustee by Governor Sargent.

Gavin D. Robertson, of 11 Birchwood Road, Worcester, fills the position recently vacated by Col. John J. Macginnis, also of Worcester, who resigned from the Board. Col. Maginnis was in his seventies.

Robertson is personnel director at Morgan Construction Company in Worcester and the husband of Worcester school committeeperson Sarah Robertson. He has taught at several private schools and is presently an instructor in industrial relations at Clark University, Worcester.

He holds a BA from Yale, a masters in edication from the University of California, is co-chairman of the "Community Dynamics" program in the Worcester Public Schools which puts teachers in touch with their communities.

"I can only guess why," Robertson said about being appointed last week. "I think they were looking for someone with a general business background," he added.

He says that he was interviewed by both Secretary of Education, Joseph M. Cronin and Lt. Governor Donald Dwight for the post, but found out only a few days before he was sworn in that he had been selected.

"The more I thought about it the more fascinating and challenging it sounded," Robertson said yesterday, adding that "I have never been that close to UMass."

"Mr. Robertson has become well acquainted with the challenges of higher education in the central region of the commonwealth," Gov. Sargent said in a press release after last week's swearing in.

"The state will benefit greatly by Mr. Robertson's presence on the board, where he will bring a fresh perspective to the needs of the entire commonwealth," Sargent added.

Ethnic Awareness Bill OK'd

By HOWARD ULMAN
Associated Press Writer

PROVIDENCE (AP)—The Rhode Island Senate has received legislation requiring that educational materials used in public schools present an accurate picture of the contributions of men and women of various ethnic groups and cultural groups to the country's development.

The bill, submitted Thursday by Sens. Julius C. Michaelson, D-Providence, and Erich A. O'D. Taylor, D-Newport, would prohibit communities from approving instructional materials which do not reflect that.

The measure bars the use of materials which include illegal sectarian and denominational doctrine or which denigrate people on the basis of their race, color, creed, national origin, ancestry, sex or occupation.

Appeal Frees Father and Son

BOSTON (AP)—The convictions and prison terms of a father and son on charges of sending obscene books through the mail were struck down Thursday by the 1st Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals.

The opinion, written by Judge Frank M. Coffin, said the two were wrongly convicted because the prosecution failed to present expert witnesses to testify the books were obscene.

Joseph N. Pallidino, 50, of Saugus was sentenced to six years in prison, and his son, Joseph N. Pallidino Jr., 26, to four years, on conviction in U.S. District Court in 1971. They have been free on bail pending the appeal.

Harvard Honors Lemmon

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP)—Harvard University's Hasty Pudding Theatricals, which bills itself as the nation's oldest theatrical organization, has chosen Jack Lemmon as its man of the year.

Lemmon, chosen for "his outWednesday, the opening night of "Bewitched Bayou," the Hasty Pudding's 125th production.

Lemon, chosen for "his outstanding achievement in film acting and directing," is a former president of Hasty Pudding and was in its 1945 and 1947 shows while he was a Harvard undergraduate. The organization's woman of the year award recently went to Liza Minelli.

Hasty Pudding also said it will present a surprise award Wednesday to celebrate its 125th an-

The show this year is scheduled to play Cambridge until March 28 and then go to New York. Philadelphia and Bermuda.

Lottery Tickets Change Image

BOSTON (AP)—The Massachusetts Lottery will get a "new look" ticket next month, along with a new incentive to thousands of clerks across the state to push tickets.

If supermarket clerks next month step up their campaign of asking customers if they want tickets to "The Game," it is because the new system gives them a direct stake in selling winning tickets.

The new tickets will also speed up the purchaser's chances of participating in a Million Dollar game.

The new tickets, slightly smaller, on lighter paper and of a slightly different color than present tickets, go on sale for the weekly drawing of March 15, the Lottery commission announced Thursday.

Priests Recruit In Playboy

GARRISON, Md. (AP)—The Trinitarian Fathers, who had notable success in recruiting candidates for the priesthood from the world of swingers, now are turning their search to devotees of rock.

The Trinitarians once advertised for potential priests in Playboy magazine. Now the order has taken an advertisement in Rolling Stone, a biweekly journal that concerns itself primarily with the world of rock music.

The Rev. Joseph Lupo, director of vocations for the Trinitarians, an eight-century old Roman Catholic order, said he was pleased with the response to the playboy ad.

But Rolling Stone is cheaper," he said in an interview.

Father Lupo said the January 1971 Playboy ad brought about a thousand priests.

"About 700 were bona fide inquiries. And of them, I still correspond with about 200 with still more potential," he said.

The advertisement, he said, "provided the best year we ever had, the biggest year we ever had."

Father Lupo said 27 men recruited by the Playboy ad are now studying for the priesthood. Recruiting six novitiates a year is considered good by the order, which has chaplains in prisons, hospitals and orphanages and also teaches in some high schools.

It is still too early to judge the Rolling Stone response, he said, since the newspaper has been on the newsstands for only two weeks.

"I really believe, really and truly, that a lot of people, not just young kids, will commit themselves to a life of sacrifice if they believe in the commitment," he said.

If I want to talk to them, I have to go where they are," he said.

Group To Attend Conference On Black Perspective In College

By CHERYL WALSH

"Much student involvement and planning," has gone into a proposed class trip to Atlanta, Georgia, according to Carl Thomas, instructor of "Social and Political Systems of the University in a Black Perspective."

A group of 49 students will leave by bus March 23 for a weeklong stay at Atlanta University Center. The purpose of the trip is to compare student systems and perspectives of blacks on all black campus to those of blacks in a white university.

Atlanta University Center is the combined physical facilities, administrations, instructors, staff, student bodies, financial and educational aspects and resources of six adjacent Atlanta institutions: Atlanta University, Clark College, Interdenominational Theological Center, Morehouse College, Morris Brown College and Spelman College.

The students involved will share dormitory rooms with other students of the 6,500 academic population.

Besides comparing student government; campus activities, classes and social life, lectures and meetings with the black Vice-mayor of Atlanta, deans of the various schools, and Julian Bond have been scheduled. The main topic of discussion will be the historical significance of black colleges.

A possible UMass reciprocal exchange program, seeing how a southern city functions and in general taking part in a communication experience were the shared expectations of the traveling students.

"All university students, not just those attending will benefit from information brought back", said Thomas, adding , "It may revive class trips."

The group is currently soliciting funds from student organizations on campus to help cover costs. The trip, costing $32 per person, is open on a limited basis with class members given preference.

After March 6 anyone interested in attending may contact Clyde Beatty, 510 Grayson, 546-6987 for further information.

Wood Knocks Nixon

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Robert Wood, President of UMass and former Undersecretary and Secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) from 1966 to 1969, Friday denounced President Nixon's "New Federalism" as "flawed in conception and fraudulent in application."

"What the Nixon program does; in Justice Benjamin Cardozo's phrase, is to make a promise to the ear and break it to the heart," said Dr. Wood. "The proposal is flawed", he said, "by the abdication of responsibility for national action to set national priorities. Just as we at last turn our attention from a devastating war to the country's mounting domestic problems, so long deferred, we find our federal government turning its back, shrugging off its established responsibility to provide leadership and priorities in the name of local democracy."

The application, however, "is downright fraudulent", he added, "in brief, the Nixon programs are but a new version of the old shell game—whichever shell you look under, the federal funds you thought were there have vanished.

"On the one hand the American people have been told that general revenue sharing is extra money, to be used by states and cities to relieve the growing tax burden and to fund new programs. But it has not been made clear that sharing is coupled with massive cutbacks in educational and social programs upon which the same states and cities depend heavily.

"Mr. Nixon is offering local governments $6 billion in general revenue sharing while phasing out or terminating 112 social action programs costing $16.9 billion, in effect a $10.9 billion withdrawal."

Dr. Wood called the rhetoric of the "New Federalism" appealing because of the needed simplification of the federal grant-making structure and strengthening of local initiative. But, noting that Congress intended general revenue sharing to be supplementary to other federal funding and part of national priority setting, Dr. Wood criticized the Nixon proposal as going too far. "It is not only the poor and minorities who will suffer from 'special' revenue sharing," said Wood. "The fact is that every constituency with special needs and no special political leverage will suffer. Programs for the handicapped and mentally retarded, scientific research, and the creation of new towns are just three obvious, widely disparate examples of needs which local governments are unlikely to respond to when the pie is divided solely according to local initiative.

"Mr. Nixon's New Federalism-which I'm certain Thomas Jefferson would angrily disavow—would not have the federal government but each of the 100,000 governmental units additively setting our national policy on such matters as housing, civil rights, mass transportation, urban development and education.

"When there is only a sum of local priorities, there are no national priorities."

Dr. Wood said the president's recent impounding of congressionally authorized funds was a "cousin" to the "New Federalism", with the two having disastrous effects on both higher education and social programs. ". . . if the New Federalism asks Congress to abdicate standard-setting and oversight regarding the use of federal tax dollars at the state and local levels, the doctrine of impoundment says the president can ignore what Congress instructs at the federal level."

Give ROTC Credit

The ROTC program has been subjected to more scrutiny than practically any other course offerings on this campus, to the extent that it was denied academic credit last year. Last week, the Faculty Senate voted to urge the Board of Trustees to re-establish credit for courses taught by the Division of Military and Air Science.

One of the prime arguments in favor of retracting ROTC credit was that the appointment procedure for ROTC instructors is initiated with the armed forces and not with the University. Another argument is that salaries of ROTC instructors are paid by the military. This, in itself, is not a valid reason for not granting academic credit.

A strong anti-military sentiment on campus resulted in a widespread disdain for all military-related activities, and the ROTC program was the first target. Political emotionalism should not be a factor in determining what learning experiences should or should not receive academic credit. We urge the Board of Trustees to restore academic credit to the ROTC program.

For A Student Union

Two weeks ago, Walter Meinelt, a student employee at Worcester Dining Commons, submitted his letter of resignation. Meinelt accused Worcester Commons of sexism, non-union pay, and a condescending attitude toward student employees.

In the letter, Meinelt said, "There should be someone that students can go to with their grievances, other than management." He suggested that student dining-commons employees might be able to join the full-time workers' union, or form a grievance committee to air their complaints. Meinelt said there was an understanding among student employees that they cannot complain about their working conditions or occupational grievances. "It is always the one who complains the loudest who is going to be replaced first," he said.

Tom Richard, another employee at Worcester Dining Commons, said, "There definitely exists the condition where all students work with an axe over their heads. The manager takes control of a situation by telling you that if the conditions aren't right, then just quit."

Richard felt that a union formed on campus for student dining-commons workers would be practical. "It would give some weight to student grievances," he said.

Concerning the question of student concerns, Arthur Warren, Assistant Director of Food Services, said, "students should feel free to discuss, with their superiors, what the problems are and what can be done about them."

Warren felt that students had no representation because of a lack of initiative, and the part-time, temporary nature of the job.

Barbara Stange, Manager of Worcester Dining Commons, said; "We try very hard to give good service to the student employees."

Ms. Stange also felt students should feel free to speak to their supervisors on any matter.

Two female employees at Worcester Dining Commons felt there was no student employees' union because no one had ever thought about it. "People drift in and out of this job," one of them said. "It's a job that is convenient; no one has ever thought about a union."

Another female employee said, "I think a union or student grievance board would be beneficial." A girl working next to her agreed.

It seems the student employee at Worcester Dining Commons is in a precarious position. The situation in other dining commons is probably not much different.

The part-time, temporary nature of employment at the dining commons inhibits student workers from realizing their stake in forming some type of collective bargaining agency.

Most student workers seem to feel that the convenience and hours of dining-common employment is worth giving up any qualms they might have. The workers feel they need the money and they will only be there temporarily, so why make waves. They decide to withhold their grievances.

However the complaints are there. Complaints that would easily be rectified, if there was a way to communicate them to the management—a way that would be credible to the students.

The reluctance of employees to go directly to management with their problems could be allayed by the formation of some type of body to represent the student workers.

A student dining-commons employees' union, or even a student employees' grievance committee, would establish better communication and better rapport between students and management.

ROTC Is Not Academic

The chairman of the Student Senate Committee on Academic Affairs is perennially incensed over the fact that students are required to take an occasional course which may not be right down their alley of academic interest. The School of Education gives students credit for doing things which have about as much intellectual value as building a snowman. The heads of departments have been instructed by the administration to formulate "affirmative action" policies designed to attract more women and minorities to their departments. (It apparently did not occur to the administration that, if some departments attract more women and minority majors, others will lose them).

The exercise of common sense and academic wisdom is an increasing rarity in the halls of academia these days, and in the last couple of years intellectual banality and superfluity have become all pervasive at UMass.

The most recent manifestation of this institutional mindlessness was last week's vote by the Faculty Senate favoring, by a wide margin, the reinstitution of academic credit for the ROTC programs. The ROTC program is one which trains men for careers in the armed forces and has no place within the walls of a university. The argument, implicit in the remarks of several of the faculty members who spoke in defense of ROTC, that the program should be given credit in the name of academic freedom is highly specious. All too often those who speak in favor of academic freedom forget what the definition of the term "academic" is, and seem to feel that it should encompass any activity in which some group of individuals wish to engage. But the definition of "academic", in this context, is that which pertains to studies that are liberal or classical, rather than technical or vocational. Academic freedom, then, properly means the right to pursue such forms of study unhindered. It is difficult therefore to see in what way a program which serves as a training ground for Army, Navy, and Air Force officers has the right to locate itself within a University under the guise of academic freedom. The ROTC program simply has nothing to do with the proper goals of an educational institution.

To deny the ROTC program status within the university is not, as some have claimed, to deny career officers the right to participate in a liberal arts education; it is only to say that they should do so in military institutions.

The ROTC program is part of a wider and alarming trend toward turning institutions of higher learning into what Clark Kerr has dubbed the "multiversity" and Robert Paul Wolff more aptly described as the "social service station" for societal and governmental needs. As Wolff has persuasively argued in his book, The Ideal Of The University, the increasing myriad of ties between the government and the university can only have the effect of eroding the university's capacity to serve as a source of critical evaluation of governmental policies and turn the latter into a willing repository for whatever demands, regardless of their merit, society places on it. For the sake of real academic freedom, and for the purpose of preserving the political integrity of UMass, the ROTC program should not only be denied credit but should be tossed out of the University altogether.

A Little Space All Over The Place

By MARIAN PROKOP

Imagine yourself sitting in the backseat of a Volkswagon with five other people. Your legs feel cramped, you're being poked by elbows and knees on all sides and there's barely room to breathe. What you could really use is some more space.

Perhaps there is an interesting course here at UMass that you'd like to take or a particular residential area that you'd like to live in but can't because there isn't enough space.

Or you're walking along in a huge metropolis like New York or Chicago, but there are so many people and buildings and so much smog that you can't find where you want to go because there is so little space between all the people, buildings, and smog to detect anything familiar.

There is an obvious shortage of space in this country. The three situations given are typical examples of this problem but there are hundreds more that you have witnessed yourselves. It is virtually impossible to find a parking space, the space between time intervals is getting smaller and smaller, and soon there will not be enough space to separate wordsandlettersontheprintedpage. Think of all the accidents that have occurred due to a lack of space. Lives that could have been saved if there had been enough space for two oncoming cars to avoid a collision or enough space between an innocent victim and a falling object such as a rock, which had suddenly fallen off a cliff. There certainly is a shortage of space but now the question must be faced, Why is there such a shortage? There are several reasons.

First of all, there are too many people. The population of the world is growing at such a tremendous rate that soon there will not be enough space for all its inhabitants. Look at Southwest for example with approximately five thousand people living in an area which covers about one square mile. This is an extremely densely populated area comparable to the city of Tokyo which has a population of ten million people, not including its suburbs.

Secondly, there are too many buildings. Fields and plains of open space are being filled with industrial and apartment complexes to the extent that in most large cities any empty areas immediately become parking lots or realms of perpetual construction.

The third reason is an unequal distribution of widespread space. For example, India with its population of approximately 480 million people has about 390 people in each square mile, while the Soviet Union has a population of 230 million people with only 27 people per square mile. These problems could be solved by a more balanced distribution of space.

Some alternatives to this problem of improving the space shortage have been discussed and aroused some realistic controversy. For instance, since the earth is three quarters water, cities under the sea could be developed which could house a large percentage of the population. However this alternative raises its own share of problems. People will have to adapt to a totally new environment. They will have to learn to breathe all over again, take special courses in underwater swimming, and develop new modes of transportation. This will take an incredible amount of time and cost an unestimable amount of money.

Another alternative is moving to outer space, the final frontier, with its unlimited planets. Once a suitable planet is found people will still have to adapt to a new environment. Again, new methods of breathing and walking without an atmosphere will have to be invented. This alternative would take even more time than the sea cities because of the incredible distance to the planets in comparison with the bottom of the ocean. The amount of money necessary for the establishment of colonies on different planets would be even greater than the already unestimable amount needed for colonies in the sea.

The most economical and logical solution is one that is rarely if ever given fair hearing. Whether it is admitted or not, there is a great deal of wasted space on the earth. The Sahara desert, for instance, stretches over 3 million square miles, most of which is wasteland. Nor is this the only one. There are regions of useless wilderness all over Africa, Asia, and Australia. All the barren areas of enormous space. There are the tundres of Alaska, the Arctic circle, and Siberia. What is proposed is that all these vast wastelands of space be put in areas where space is necessary.

Surely there is a scientist or inventor somewhere who can develop a simple way of developing this idea. You merely take the unused space and put it somewhere that it would do some good. For example, say you're moving a table from one room to another but there is not enough space in the doorway to get the table through. To solve this problem, you could take a piece of space, perhaps from the Ukrainian steppes which would make the doorway wide enough for the table to pass through easily, and then save the rest for later. Just imagine all the trouble this method would save. No more traffic jams, or crowded buses, trains or elevators, to push your way through. You'll always be able to make your own parking space and have plenty of space left to fit into a class or even a sell-out crowd for a big concert. The uses are inexhaustible.

Once this is developed, it will be simple to use. No one will have to adapt to new ways of living since they will be using another space of earth. People won't have to leave their homes since they will only be a little more spread out. Finally, it shouldn't cost much money, once this method is developed, since the only added cost would be for added transportation over distances that have been stretched further apart. This plan is ideal because it conserves time, energy, and space and should be given more serious thought since it is an important space saving theory, which could eventually solve the problem of worldwide unbalanced space.

Guns Are Not The Problem

To The Editor:

In last Wednesday's edition of the Collegian, Gerry Cataldo authored an editorial calling for more gun controls to stem the mounting wave of crime in the United States. He backed up his claim with "facts" that were simply untrue. His way of reasoning was open to much doubt. Also he totally missed the real cause of crime in evolving his solution.

He first pictures gun owners as either right-wing radicals or gun profiteers. He labels their arguments as "old cliches". He has probably never even bothered to think about the pro-gun side of the issue. If so, he is not alone.

After that, he tells us about the ease with which one may obtain a gun. That is definitely true if one is a criminal, but if one is an honest citizen trying to obey the law, it is quite different indeed.

Cataldo then states that the guns that are used for "protection" are mainly used against other guns. If so, and he is successful in his bid to outlaw guns, criminals won't relinquish their guns. But what of the people who do? What do they use for protection? Over one-tenth of the people in the United States use guns for just such protection.

He also feels that the gun owner should have no "qualms" about registering their guns. In the first place, it would cost the taxpayers millions to put this into effect. In the second place, it would have no effect whatsoever on crime. In the third place, one of the leaders of the anti-gun movement, Senator Thomas Dodd stated that gun registration was the first major step in the eventual outlaw of all guns. That is why gun owners have "qualms" about such laws.

As further proof for his argument, Cataldo claims that "in Japan, the murder rate has dropped drastically as a result of gun control legislation". The fact is that guns have never been used to any extent in Japan. Outlawing guns in Japan is like outlawing Samurai swords in New York.

He also claimed that "in England where even police officers do not carry guns, there is a sizable difference in the murder rate compared to the United States." Actually, although Englands Crime rate per 100,000 people is lower than ours; the rate is increasing faster there than here. Soon it will be larger than ours. Before England's law, there was almost no crime with guns. Now it is a major problem. One reason that police there do not carry firearms is that they are afraid that if they start to carry them, the criminals will use the guns they have even now.

Mr. Cataldo's solution will not reduce crime at all. A gun is not the only weapon people can use. Because of the strict gun laws in New York, knives have become the main weapon of murder. People will always find a way to kill if they want to. The real solution to rising crime is to stop the people from wanting to kill at all. The answer is to change the society that spawns crime. Isn't it time we get down to the roots of crime? Only then will we be able to stop it.

Mythical $100,000

To The Editor:

William Densmore's article in the Feb. 20 Collegian creates some erroneous impressions about the Massachusetts Society of Professors and its efforts on this campus. I tried to make clear to Mr. Densmore that I am not a "spokesman" for the Society and that my statements about goals and aims of the Society represented my personal perceptions as a member.

The $100,000 figure for an organizing budget seems to have captured the imagination of the press, but the digure does not represent a budgetary outlay of the MTA, nor has anything remotely near that amount been spent at UMass. I personally feel that with the direction of the tide of events, this campus could eventually be organized for $1.15. The MSP has spent some money in a determined effort to make faculty aware of the basic issues involved, through newsletters and information bulletins, but the society primarily relies on the issues, and on the individual efforts of concerned members in its organizing drive. The mythical $100,000 will not organize the Amherst campus—concern for quality education will.

A Chance To Speak

To English Majors:

If you are an English major, and you still haven't seen one of those English Department Survey Forms— please stop off in Bartlett 252, and fill one out. (You should have received one in your English classes.) It will take only a couple of minutes, and it will give you a chance to say what you like or dislike about some of the things that an English major faces.

The faculty of the English Department is now reviewing the requirements for all English majors, and they will soon be voting on some new ones. Both of our Advisers want to know what the students really think, and they—and the teachers who passed out the forms—are going out of their way to give us a chance to speak.

Let's grab it.

Liberal Naivete

To The Editor:

Whether or not the possession of firearms should be a legal right, or is indeed a right at all, has become a target for comment by responsible and irresponsible editorialists throughout the country. On Thursday, the Collegian's Mr. Tackeff joined the ranks of the latter.

A responsible editorialist will always realize at a glance that any issue as important and controversial as gun control legislation became controversial because there are valid arguments on both sides of the coin, and realizing this will always respect the opinions of those he opposes. Mr. Tackeff, unfortunately, chooses to label all the world's proponents of gun control indiscriminately as "suckers", and refuses, obviously, to take their convictions seriously. How, then, can we be expected to consider his?

One argument most often used against gun control is that even if such laws are enacted, "those whose intentions are unholy will always find a way around the law", or more commonly, "if guns are outlawed, only outlaws will have guns". But it is this ill-conceived image of "outlaw" that points out the most basic fallacy in such reasoning. Potential misusers of firearms are certainly not restricted to hardened criminals with connections in the black market and cunning to outwit the law. There are hundreds of passion crimes committed every year by previously law-abiding citizens who obtained their firearms in a perfectly legal manner, and would not have been able to otherwise. And while wily criminals do unquestionably abound, it is fearfully poor reasoning to think that because a law will not be perfect, there is no reason to enact it. If we should work day and night for years and pass a law which prevents one man from obtaining one handgun and taking one life, then our efforts will have been more than justified.

Certainly no rational proponent of gun control believes that any law will solve the problem overnight. But one does what one can, and it seems to me that lack of action due to cynicism constitutes a crime far more serious than the worst of liberal naivete.

Only A Town Election

To The Editor:

Under ideal circumstances, Representative Democracy is an illustration of a plurality of interests working through diversity and varied concerns.

Historically the ideal has been agonizingly evasive, however our principles have prevailed and managed to sustain our Democratic system.

When the will and concerns of a minority are not expressed, the majority is placed in a position in which it must assume, and at times dictate measures, values and policy that invariably affect the minority regardless of their wishes.

Tuesday, we had a situation in which students were placed in a position to voice their concerns and interests in the direct fashion given us by our system, fellow students running for elective office. The issues are viable and certainly have a direct affect upon each and every one of us. The only problem, however, is that students as well as many other segments of our society are crisis oriented. They fail to realize the tangibility of the issues and their affect on their daily lives. If only people could realize that unless we voice our concerns, our rights will slowly diminish until eventually authoritarian dictation and assumption will become the working order. We must not wait until blatant acts such as Kent State and Vietnam motivates our selfishness and apathy into action. The oppression is now, our voices are growing weaker, the complacency is apparent, our minds and reason are not.

Perhaps it is trite to assume then we are rational beings, and we will follow somewhat intelligent paths in the course of our brief tenure on this planet. It is becoming increasingly apparent the collectively our concerns rarely transcend the status quo and its task of running our lives.

Awareness as it seems is becoming a highly personalized element consisting entirely of shallow, narrow environments. They say that history leads the wise and drags the fools; therefore, if this is the inherent intention of our society, concessions or dissasociations are certainly in order for many of us.

After all, it was only a town election.

They Dig The Gay Life

In response to the article of Drs. McCashin and Klein on homosexuality—(MDC— 2/21/73):

The mere questions posed by Drs. McCashin and Klein present a prejudicial basis for hypothesis about homosexuality. The question "can homosexuality be successfully treated?" supports and answers their first question "is homosexuality a form of mental illness?" The rest of what the good doctors write is merely a camouflage of excess verbiage designed to create an illusion of liberal; academic understanding for homosexuality.

The doctors often refer directly or indirectly to homosexuality as an emotional difficulty, a problem, a deviance . . . They defer their analytical responsibilities to a larger social opinion: 'homosexuality may be mental illness according to social definitions.' (They also state, and contradict themselves, by writing that it's really awful how " . . . the concept of mental illness has ironically been misused by some in the service of oppression." The real irony is that the professional psychotherapist, 'friend of the homosexual,' has often been a major tool in the service of oppression and negativism concerning homosexuals.)

They also go on to defensively assume opposition to their liberal, academic verbiage by including the qualifying statement—"regardless of one's 'political' position on the question of homosexuality . . ." The assumption in this qualification is that any argument posed to the good doctors comes from a political, philosophical disagreement not a real, personal one. For the majority of homosexuals, politics has very little to do with our personal Gay life. Homosexuality, for many of us is a very private, personal matter. Our disagreement comes from positive self-awareness in the face of negative judgments. And . . . we are little concerned with the origins of 'causes' of our sexual preference; we just dig it.

The reason why the success rate of psychological "treatment" (indoctrination?) of homosexuals is low, and the value of treatment is suspect is because usually psychiatrists treat homosexuals with the goal of curing or converting. Psychiatrists often view homosexuals with the same negative attitudes of the larger society; this approach does not recognize the real reason why any homosexual would go to a psychiatrist. That primary reason is what the doctors classify as secondary: family disapproval and complications of homosexual life—or a negative self-image. Those difficulties of homosexual life are rarely reduced because they are re-inforced by the ignorance and false morality of society, and the misdirected therapy of the therapist. If the professional would redirect the emphasis of therapy, it would help the homosexual who seeks treatment to integrate aspects of their lives more positively.

Homosexuality is a sexual preference, the capacity to love someone of the same sex.

Pollution, Pollution-- Oh, What Is The Solution?

"I can report that America is well on the way to winning the war against environmental degradation—well on the way to making our peace with nature."
—President Nixon February 14, 1973.

WASHINGTON (LNS)--In a report released during the second week in February, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) said that research ships it used to carry out a study of oceanic oil pollution discovered oil in the form of fist-sized balls of tar throughout the Atlantic Ocean from Massachusetts to the Caribbean.

The study said one of its survey ships reported that its nets were fouled by oil clumps so thick they extruded through the mesh "like spaghetti," 75% of the time.

In the open sea bits of plastic were discovered in the form of small disks or balls of polystyrene, the crumbly plastic foam widely used as a packing and insulating material.

Major sources of oceanic oil pollution include oil discharged from oil tankers, leakages from off-shore oil rigs, and accidental oil spills.

Other researchers from NOAA at the Woods Hole, Mass., Oceanographic Institute found bits of the indigestible plastic in the larvae of fish. They feared that the plastic might threaten the survival of the fish larvae that swallow it.

Analyzing samples of the microscopic organisms that form the basis of the ocean's food chain, NOAA reported that "more than half the plankton sample collected from surface waters were oil contaminated."

Ocean explorer Thor Heyerdahl who sailed across the Atlantic in 1970, had reported seeing tar balls plastic all the way from Africa to the Americas.

The report estimates that the pollution covered 50% of the area from Massachusetts to Florida, 80% in the Caribbean and the Gulf of Mexico, and 90% in an area surrounding the Bahamas and the West Indies.

NEW YORK (LNS)--Claiming that the auto industry has "been backed to the cliff edge of desperation," Ford Motor Company president Lee A. Iacocca proposed recently a major relaxation of the Federal Clean Air Act to avert "a complete shutdown of the United States auto industry."

Ford's reasoning is clear--in order to comply with the 1970 Federal law designed, in theory, to protect the quality of the air in this country's smog filled cities, the auto companies would have to spend far more money than they would care to, thus reducing their profit margin.

Instead, Iacocca, in his February 15 address to the New York Chamber of Commerce, offered what he termed "a rational, orderly, temperate and effective program for improving air quality in all of the 50 states without unacceptable penalties to our national economy, our personal mobility, our industrial vitality or our Government's credibility."

Actually, this plan calls for less stringent requirements on car emission devices set for 1975 by the Clean Air Act. Ford's proposals could be achieved with existing technology while a testing program is initiated in California to determine if it is really necessary "in terms of air quality needs, technological feasability and cost-effectiveness" to extend the stricter standards to the rest of the country.

Environmentalists present at Iacocca's speech were quick to disagree with the Ford Company chief. In an interview with the New York Times, New York City's commissioner of Air Resources, Fred C. Hart, said that tighter, not looser, controls were needed because "carbon monoxide (a major pollutant that comes almost entirely from autos) is now recognized as an even greater problem than when they set the Federal standards."

Wood Knocks Nixon And 'New Federalism'

Regarding the affect on higher education; Dr. Wood said the president already has impounded at least $128 million in higher education funds and proposed a student financial aid program that is contrary to the congressional program and which will result in a congressional-executive branch stalemate that will be destructive to higher education. In addition, there are widespread program cuts in graduate student training, college teacher fellowships, college housing, university-community services, and undergraduate teaching equipment. "The Nixonian rhetoric would have us turn to the state to make up for the lose resources," said Dr. Wood. "The problem is that many states are already making a major effort (and) it is rather hard to expect the state to take up the Nixon slack as well."

Concerning social programs, Dr. Wood said, "the budgeting shell game is at its worst in the urban area, with a budget request of only $2.7 billion for programs of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, a reduction of 36 percent from the current fiscal year's $4.2 billion. Not only have nearly $600 million of current funds been impounded, but all community development programs are to be terminated."

The purpose of the Model Cities program was to allow cities to set their own priorities, strategies and tactics in dealing with their mounting problems, Wood added. But the unrestricted block grant had "closely regulated standards of performance (which) encourages institutional reform instead of simply dumping more money on top of an already overburdened and inefficient local government."

The Nixon Administration has charged that the housing programs of the 1968 Housing and Urban Development Act which it is dismantling are inept and inefficient. Dr. Wood pointed out that "it was the Administration's George Romney and Elliot Richardson who administered the program for four of the Act's five years. The scandals in housing Mr. Nixon speaks of were not scandals of the administration that created the law. They were the scandals of the administration that managed the law."

In ending his testimony, Dr. Wood said that the New Federalism's effects "are grievous losses that weaken the federal-local partnership; reduce the capability of state and local governments to respond, and short-change us all. They add up to a governmental strategy of irresponsible buck-passing that is unique in this century."

Parking Regulations Listed

As a result of recent student-faculty expansion, the University of Massachusetts/Amherst, is suffering from a severe shortage of parking space. This condition unfortunately necessitates the rigorous enforcement of existing rules and regulations. In an attempt to minimize parking problems and prevent unintentional violations, the following list of frequently-violated restrictions has been prepared.

1) No parking is allowed in any dormitory or dining commons area, at any time, by vehicles not specifically assigned to spaces in those areas.

2) Towable offenses are strictly enforced. They include parking in fire lanes, no-parking zones, reserved spaces, and on sidewalks. Tow zones are clearly marked.

3) Any person having a vehicle registered with the University, and occasionally finding it necessary to bring an unregistered vehicle onto the campus, must obtain a Temporary Parking Permit, or park the unregistered vehicle in the Campus Center Garage.

4) All vehicles brought onto the campus by students, staff, and faculty must be registered at the Parking Office within seven (7) days of the arrival or use of the vehicle on campus. A vehicle to which proper vehicle registration insignia has not been affixed is not considered a registered vehicle. Any citations issued to the vehicle are the responsibility of the registered owner.

5) Vehicles must park only in the area, or lot, to which they are assigned. Allowance is made for vehicles on official University business.

6) In other than dormitory or dining commons areas, any registered vehicle may be parked in any legal space on campus between the hours of 6:00 p.m. and 7:00 a.m., Monday through Friday, except where such parking violates snow removal regulations. Parking is permitted at all times during the weekends.

7) During periods in which students are moving in or out of dormitories, temporary parking in dormitory areas for purposes of loading and unloading is permitted; however, a person must attend the vehicle at all times, to ensure that the vehicle can be moved upon request.

8) An appeal of a parking violation ticket, issued under the University of Massachusetts motor vehicle regulations, must be submitted in writing to the Traffic and Parking Appeals Board within seven (7) days after issuance of the ticket. Appeal forms can be obtained from the Parking Office.

9) Vehicles assigned to area 5B must park in the lot adjacent to Boyden Gymnasium. Those assigned to 6L must park in front of the Engineering Laboratory. Those vehicles assigned to 8L must park in the first five rows of "F" lot.

Bill On Repossession Filed

That used cars of yours could be repossessed if you default on payments, and you might not even have a chance to explain why your payments are behind.

This practice would be changed in Massachusetts if a bill drafted by two UMass legal studies professors is passed by the Legislature.

The bill, filed by State Sen. John Olver, for Asst. Profs. Ethan Katsh and Peter d'Errico, both attorneys, would amend existing legislation so that a seller or finance company could repossess your car only through judicial process--where both buyer and seller could state their cases.

Prof. Katsh appeared this month before the joint State Legislative Committee on Commerce and Labor, explaining that present legislation allowing repossession without court intervention is "quite simply a euphemism for 'taking the law into one's own hands'."

"This practice places the consumer, who may have only a few installments remaining and who may have many valid reasons for defaulting, at an extreme disadvantage. It is particulary damaging to the poor, whose limited economic means cause them to enter into conditional sales contracts most often. In addition to those instances in which repossession actually occurs, are many more cases in which legally naive consumers are harrassed with the threatened use of the practice," he told the Committee.

The bill would amend the Massachusetts Unform Commercial Code.

Under present law, as long as no breach of the peace results, a seller may repossess goods from a buyer without first going to court to determine who is in the right.

SAVINGS ON TEXTBOOKS of up to 75 per cent has been predicted in the University of South Florida Oracle if the faculty accepts an administration proposal to keep the same textbook for at least a year on this campus which is on the quarter system.

The new textbook retention policy has been in effect for half the books used on campus. The savings to students have doubled, as a result, the administration says.

WMUA Hosts Scheurer

Tonight at 10 p.m., WMUA's "Focus" series will host a discussion on the effects of last week's Amherst town election.

Moderator Ken Mosakowski's special guest on tonight's live, 60-minute forum will be George Scheurer, who was defeated in his bid for the office of Selectman in Tuesday's election.

Also on hand to participate in tonight's panel discussion will be a number of UMass students who ran for Town Meeting seats and who participated in poll work on election day.

Only six persons who listed their occupation as "student" were elected to Town Meeting. Five of the six were elected from Precinct 2, which includes the Southwest Residential Complex. They are: Susan Bamford, Howard Bloom, Steve Ferber, Diane Simpson, and William Sage. The other student elected was Carol Scheurer, in Precinct 5.

Local analysts have estimated that fewer than 10 percent of students registered to vote in Amherst bothered to take part in Tuesday's election.

Interview Panel Seeks New Members

One of the vehicles for student involvement in the provision of personal health services is participation in the selection of new professional staff members. The interview panel of the Student Advisory Board is composed of both undergraduates and graduates who represent as much as possible the interests of the entire student body. Four or five members of the Interview Panel meet with each candidate for an informal discussion--an exchange which allows the applicant to learn more about the needs of our community, and which gives the students a chance to estimate his ability and interest in working with students.

Often the question arises concerning how adequately one can determine such qualities as dedication to work, interest in the position, ability to work outside the traditional individual patient-professional setting, etc., during a one-hour meeting. However, other staff members must assess professional competence and experience in the same amount of time. Moreover, it is the students who can best determine how well an applicant can empathize with issues of importance to them.

The impact of the Interview Panel on the actual selection process is by means of a written evaluation by each participating member. These evaluations are then considered along with those of the other staff of the Health Services. Students have as much say in selection of new staff as the staff of the Health Services.

Thus far, the Interview Panel has met with prospective physicians, Health Educators, psychiatrists, clinical psychologists, and social workers. Recently; we have extended our function to include meetings with applicants for the Nurse Practitioner Clinic and the regular nursing staff. The Interview Panel meets periodically with members of the Health Services staff for feedback on the status of applicants for selection and for continuous re-evaluation of the role of such a consumer group.

The Interview Panel is continuously seeking new members. All you need to participate is some interest and an occasional free hour. For more details, call the Health Education office at 545-2492.

Study In Bologna This Summer

Study in Bologna this summer is offered by the University of Massachusetts-Amherst Summer Program in Italy. And applications for the seven-week session will be accepted until March 15, according to Asst. Prof. Anthony Terrizzi, program director.

Enrollment will be limited to 65 students, from various colleges and universities.

Although the UMass Summer Program in Italy is not geared specifically to any one discipline or to language study, Italy--its language, its history, and its people--is the focus of all courses. Courses to be offered are: Art 255-Baroque Art and Architecture in Italy; History 203-Urban Life in Medieval and Renaissance Italy; Anthropology 261-Peoples of Europe, The Western Mediterranean, Italy; Italian 291-Italian Literature in Translation; Italian 110-Elementary Italian. Italian majors and other qualified students may arrange to take independent study in Italian literature. Students will take two courses for a total of 6 credits.

Classes will be in the Bologna Center of John Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies. This building, which is thoroughly air-conditioned and one of the most modern in Bologna, is located in the heart of the University of Bologna and is close to the center of the city.

The group will arrive in Bologna June 17 for a brief orientation. The seven-week summer school session will include field trips to nearby cultural centers, and after Aug. 8 students will be free to travel on their own, in Italy and nearby countries. Departure for the United States will be Aug. 24.

Estimated cost is $875, for round-trip air transportation, tuition, health and library fees, travel and lodging in Italy, and most meals in Bologna. Expenses for the free travel time at the conclusion of the seven-week session are in addition to $875.

More information may be obtained from Asst. Prof. Anthony Terrizzi, Herter Hall 429, UMass-Amherst, 01002. Telephone 545-0495.

Supervision Course To Meet

A 10-week course in basic supervision is being offered representatives of local government in the Holyoke area by the Institute for Governmental Services of the University of Massachusetts.

Beginning Wednesday, March 14, the class will meet from 4:30 to 7 p.m. each Wednesday at Holyoke Community College. Personnel of the UMass-Amherst Office of Community Development and Human Relations will teach.

Focus will be on problems faced by municipal supervisors who will be taught elements of communication, decision-making, and a variety of human relation skills.

Interested persons should contact Mrs. Mary Risciotti, associate training coordinator of the IPA program of the UMass Institute for Governmental Services. Attendance will be limited.

The course is supported by the Federal Intergovernmental Personnel Act of 1970. Certificates will be awarded upon completion of the course.

Women Gymnasts Remain Undefeated

By MDC STAFF

In what was their brightest performance thus far, the women's varsity gymnastics team slammed the West Chester State College team, 97.5 to 83.6 points. Before a capacity crowd, the UMass girls sported new team leotards and demonstrated a new team spirit that improved their performance tremendously. Yes, the potential that you have been reading about is becoming a reality for all challengers.

In an evening filled with many sparkling routines, none received more audience response, or a better score from the judges, than did Anne Vexler's floor exercise routine. Anne, executing a difficult full twisting back somersault for the first time, electrified the crowd with her intricate dance and superior performance of tumbling and leaping. She was awarded a 9.1 for her efforts. Jeannine Burger also tumbled well and finished second. She was, however, more than one-half a point behind Vexler. Alicia Goode did a fine job and captured third place and Candy Gross, Marion Kulick, and Heidi Armstrong, respectively, completed a UMass sweep of the top six places on the event.

Uneven bars was another event that thrilled the crowd and pronounced UMass' dominance of the meet. Margie Combs outdid herself and swung her difficult routine with ease. She demonstrated the abilities of a top calibre gymnast. Jeannine Burger, taking second place here also, showed good improvement and performed very well. Anne Vexler, competing bars for the first time this season, was solid and finished in third place. Heidi Armstrong performed one of her best routines and was a close fourth. Betsy East did a complicated exercise and, very surprisingly, finished a protested sixth.

The balance beam event, usually a weak one for UMass, was very exciting and one of the highest scoring events. Vexler and Combs tied for first place. Both performers showed good control, executed well, and received decent scores from the judges. Although Jeannine Burger was second again, she showed her best poise and tricks to date. A relaxed Heidi Armstrong kept her cool and took third place. Gail Hannan was fourth and West Chester's Bambi Armstrong (Heidi's sister) was fifth.

The vaulting event was slightly under par for some UMass performers. Burger did a good yamashita and captured first place. Margie Combs, performed the same vault, and took second. Heidi Armstrong was third and Bambi Armstrong followed her older sister and finished fourth. In the all-around UMass was well represented by Burger and Armstrong, Burger winning with a 32.6 total and Armstrong, going all-around for the first time in her collegiate career, set a lifetime high of 29.9 points.

Next Saturday evening at 7:30 p.m. in the Boyden auxiliary gym it's an all out battle for Eastern regional supremacy. UMass hosts the defending Eastern regional, and the defending National Champions, Springfield College. Both teams are undefeated and scoring about the same. Springfield is coached by Mimi Murray the present World University Games team coach. The gym will be packed, so come early for good seats.

Trackmen Stumble At N.E.

By WALT POWERS

When Peter Ryan, a wiry, redheaded UMass sophomore sailed 22'1/2" to a fifth place finish in the long jump, it looked like the start of a big afternoon. After all, the field events had been a UMass weakness all season long, and in the New England indoor track and field championships, this was only the second event of the day.

The team should have gone home after that, because it turned out to be their only scoring in an embarrassing afternoon. Lack of outstanding individual performances and an impressive array of small college specialists negated their depth in the running events, and the high level of competition transformed each race into a grueling, all-out battle. Even the favorites had difficulty. UConn, despite a big partisan crowd at New London's Roland Field House, had to come from behind on the last event to earn a 42-1/2-36 victory over Northeastern. Boston College, in third place, was only nine points behind.

Despite the lack of scoring the Minutemen held their own in most events, putting finalists in seven, and barely missing in two others. Sophomore Mark Hughes came within an eyelash of clearing 6'5" in the high jump; it would have garnered him third place. They got strong performances in the hurdles from Tony Pendleton, Jim Hennessey, and Curt Stegerwald, but tough competition magnified minor mistakes. Stegerwald, a freshman and runner-up in the Yankee Conference, made a strong bid in the finals of the hurdles.

Steve Levine ran the fastest indoor 600' of his career in the trail heat, where eight runners came within 1-1/2 seconds of the New England record.

Lack of competition hurt Randy Thomas and Tom Maguire in unseeded heat of the two mile. Thomas, a sophomore, and Maguire, the freshman record holder, pushed each other to a big 1-2 finish, but Central Connecticut's Bob Lees roared away in the seeded heat to a New England record of 8:48.2, pulling the rest of the big field behind him.

AROUND THE TRACK

Next Saturday's ICAA meet at Princeton marks the end of the indoor season. Northeastern and Boston College will provide the competition when the spring season opens at home on April 7.

Randy Thomas on the co[illegible]tions at Roland Field House; "I [illegible]ople attribute the fast times to the tartan track surface, but the big difference to me was the air. It was fresher here than at any other indoor track I've run."

Keith Francis, a Boston College freshman, was the most exciting runner of the meet. His pacing was superb, and his composure remarkable. Even when UConn's Jim Verdon, a senior, overtook him in the finals, he seemed unaffected, and calmly pulled away on the last lap. He shattered the New England 1000' record in both the trials and the finals. Francis has run the second fastest thousand in the nation this winter, and only Harvard's Bob Clayton has beaten him.

There Will Be Baseball

By ED SCHUYLER JR.
Associated Press Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP)-Baseball negotiators reached a three-year agreement Sunday which immediately opened major league spring training camps.

Marvin Miller, executive director of the Major League Baseball Players Association, and John Gaherin, chief negotiator for the club owners, said in a joint statement they had "...reached complete agreement for a three-year term subject to ratification by the club and players."

Ratification appeared to be a formality.

Charles "Chub" Feeney, president of the National League, said players may "report to camp as soon as they can" and that he and his American League counterpart, Joe Cronin, would notify the 24 clubs immediately that they may open their camps.

The accord covers the basic agreement, which governs active player-owner relations, and the pension-benefit plan, Miller said after a 1-1/2 hour meeting in Gaherin's office.

Dick Moss, counsel for the players association, said he and Miller would meet Wednesday with the executive board, comprised of the 24 player representatives.

The executive board's duty is to recommend whether to accept or reject the pact. Miller said he then would meet as soon as possible with the other players for a ratification vote.

The announced agreement came just four days before the official scheduled opening of spring training.

Sunday's negotiating session was the eighth since Miller announced after a Feb. 16 meeting with the player representatives that they wanted negotiations to continue and spring training to start.

"I'm very happy we've reached agreement," said Miller after the tough and highly publicized negotiations apparently keyed on such issues as the reserve clause, arbitration of individual contracts, the right to reject a trade and minimum salary.

The controversial reserve clause, which binds a player to a club until he is traded, released or retires, likely will be set up for study. The players publicly had asked for a one-year study. But the owners, not wanting any more negotiations until the three-year basic agreement expires, had proposed a three-year study.

The players would like a player to become free to deal for himself after seven years in the majors. But a source close to the owners said the owners would never give in to this. He said the owners had proposed that a minimum salary of $30,000 be set for five years' service and a $40,000 minimum be set for eight years, and then if a club does not meet the minimum, the player would be free to deal with another club.

Women Hoopsters Tourney Bound

On Friday, the UMass Women's Basketball team received word that they have been invited to participate in the North East Regional Basketball tournament at Northeastern University March 8-10. The winner and the runner-up of this tournament qualify for the Nationals, to be held at Queens College later in the month. UMass does not know as yet just who its opponent will be but does know it will be one of the schools from New York State.

UMass is led by co-captains Beth Fay and Marilyn Ritz. Beth is the only senior on the squad and Marilyn one of two juniors. UMass will depend upon the scoring of Beth and Jen Edminster, a freshman and the rebounding of Pat Glispen. Jo Smith and Marilyn are UMass' two scrappy guards who really put the pressure on on defense. Other members of the squad who will make the trip to Boston are: Vicki Pagel, Sharon Underhill, Chris Molnea, Jeannie Abrahamson, Charlene Crowley, Donna Crowdry, Mitch Miller, Ann Foley, Mary Dowling and Sue McNamara.

Karate

Yes, there is a Karate team on campus. Even though the sport is not recognized by the NCAA, there are several schools in the East that have teams, or clubs, of this type and will be sponsoring a Championship meet in April. Homer Schmeisser and Ronald Drewski are serving as co-captains and are looking for any and all Black Belts who would like to compete.

The competition will have full contact of the body but restricted contact of the head so as to prevent injury. At the present time there are six members on the team who are in training. If you would like to compete, and fulfill the requirement of being a registered Black Belt, then contact Ron at 6-8831.

NCAA or NIT?

(AP)-Long Beach State, Memphis State, Miami of Ohio and Weber State are in. By the end of the week the rest of the 25-team field for the NCAA post-season tournament for the national collegiate basketball championship is expected to be known.

Long Beach, Memphis State and Miami qualified over the weekend by winning the Pacific Coast Athletic Conference, the Missouri Valley Conference and the Mid-American Conference, respectively. Weber State had won a berth earlier by taking the Big Sky Conference title.

UCLA, the defending national champion with a record winning streak of 68, has clinched at least a tie in the Pacific-8 and is expected to win the conference for the seventh straight year against California and Stanford this weekend.

Nine at-large teams will be picked Thursday by the NCAA to compete with the 16 conference champions that qualify automatically. Marquette, Providence, Syracuse, Southwestern Louisiana, Oklahoma City, Houston, Jacksonville, South Carolina, Virginia Tech, Oral Roberts and St. John's of New York are regarded as leading candidates.

The other major post-season tourney, the NIT in New York, issues its invitations after the NCAA selections are made. Conference runners-up are eligible to compete in the NIT.

Long Beach, No. 3 nationally behind UCLA and North Carolina State in The Associated Press poll, gained its NCAA berth with a 92-65 rout of UC-Santa Barbara Saturday after being upset by Los Angeles State Friday night.

Memphis State took the MVC title with a 54-53 squeaker over New Mexico State as Wes Westfall and Larry Finch converted on one-and-one free throw situations in the last minute. Miami won the Mid-American by downing Kent State 75-66.

In other major games Saturday, Brown upset Princeton 68-62, Houston nipped Jacksonville 76-75, Western Kentucky surprised Austin Peay 94-92, Texas A&M upset Texas Tech 76-75, Marquette downed Fordham 63-57, Notre Dame humbled St. John's 75-71, Minnesota routed Michigan 98-80, Tennessee edged Alabama 72-71, Southwestern Louisiana beat Oral Roberts 104-89 and Oklahoma State upset Colorado 70-66.

Wrestlers Place All, Win NE's

By JOHN BOCK

A superb team effort that resulted in the whole Minuteman wrestling team placing sparked the University of Massachusetts to a victory in the First Championship of the New England University Wrestling Association. The Minutemen came into the Tourney as a little less than favorites and came out on top with two champions, four runners-up, and four thirds.

The race for the team title was close up until the consolation finals. The Rhode Island Rams proved to be the competition as they were ahead at various times in the tourney and indeed had more champions than UMass but couldn't do anything in the consolations. Brown University and Dartmouth College proved to be the spoilers as they moved to shut URI out of the consolation finals.

Boston University was in it until the semi-finals were over and then had to rely on three finalists to take third. Dartmouth had two in the finals, but only took one champ home.

As in all tourneys there were upsets, surprises, and disappointments. In the way of upsets for UMass there were two. The best was John Connolly's upsetting Dartmouth's top seeded Charlie Estin in the semi-final 177 pound bout. Estin pinned Connolly last year in the New Englands and was undefeated this year with twelve of his wins in the form of pins. John was behind 2-1 in the beginning of the second period but came back to pour it on and best Estin 11-8.

The worst upset of the tourney was the 6-4 loss incurred by Carl Dambman, the two-time heavyweight New England Champ who was seeking the 190 title. His loss in the semi-finals to John Stoll of BU was a painful reminder that three-time New England Champs are very rare, and Carl went to join the ranks of Shelly Goldberg, and Amherst's Gary Sklaver. One of the finest tributes to a wrestler was paid Carl at the conclusion of the bout as Stoll embraced him and the crowd remained silent, not even the BU fans cheered. Afterwards every coach in the Cage came up to congratulate Carl on his great career at UMass.

Another sorryful upset came as Steve "Tony" Rome had to fight Richard of URI, a severely torn, bleeding lip, another cut over his eye, and the referee in his semi-final bout at 142. Rome should have had a takedown in the last seconds of the regular bout but the ref looked the other way and threw it into overtime where loss of blood and pain, among other things, saw Richard win it 4-1.

The other two wrestlers that lost in the semi's were 134 pounder Mike McClaughlin (as he was manhandled, 18-2, by BU's Rick Freitas the eventual champ), and Chris Cadwallader (who lost to Jim Urquhart of URI.)

The stage for the finals was set in the consolation finals as UMass' blew the doors off all opposition to have all of its semi-final losers take thirds. McGlauchlin handled Chaffee of Brown at the same time Rome bested Dartmouth's John Burke. Cadwallader wrestled his best match of the year as he dominated Paul Donovan of BU in a revenge match. Donovan had pinned Cad in the YanCon twice and when the Minutemen needed the win Chris came through. Carl Dambman wrestled and won his final match for UMass as he bested Miller of Brown to make a clean sweep in the consolation round.

The best match of the tourney came in the finals of the 118 pound bout. It featured UMass' Dave Amato, who was at the threshhold of his last chance to win the 118 pound New England diadem, and URI's Rich Adham. Adham had lost to Amato every time he wrestled him the last three years and this thought seemed to galvanize him to action as he went out and built up a 4-1 lead on Amato. Dave scored a reversal and rolled Adham over for a two-point near fall that the mat judges called back. Another reversal by Adham made it 6-3. With ten seconds left in the match, Amato made his move as he reversed his man, put him on his back, and pinned him with two seconds left on the clock. Chalk up one reservation on a flight to Seattle, Washington.

The Conference title was UMass' fourth in the last five years (they finished third last season) and for Leaman it was the most rewarding of all. "This thing really pleases me," he said. "I was never a great booster of the Conference title. But after not getting it last season I found out how important it really was. "After six games we were down by two games and it's just a great credit to these kids to come back and take it all (10-2). We were picked either third of sixth pre-season. They said we couldn't do it without Julius Erving. It's really something else."

A trip of this nature "brings a team together" said Leaman. And with this togetherness came the repetoire of teamwork and tightness that brought victory on two courts where UMass was humiliated last season.

Over the two game stretch the Minutemen shot 36 for 39 from the foul line. They got 39 points, 28 rebounds and 14 assists from Al Skinner. Bill Endicott had 26 points, ten rebounds and seven assists. From John Murphy the contribution was 24 points, 15 rebounds and four blocked shots. Rick Pitino was Rick Pitino, captain Tom McLaughlin was himself and the list goes on.

They made the big play when it was needed. They showed uncanny poise in Maine's "Pit" which features 3000 strong chanting "Welcome to the Pit". They got themselves through a game at New Hampshire that they were looking past to Maine.

And then there was Tom Gillams, the 6'6 sophomore whose season has been confined mostly to the bench, but who as Maine found himself thrust into service when Tom Austin was sacked with foul trouble near the end of the first half. "He played only eight minutes", said Leaman. "But they were the most important eight minutes he played this season. On one rebound in a crowd he looked like Julius Erving."

At New Hampshire the Minutemen saw a 16 point lead (50-34) with 12:26 remaining dissolved to 66-61 with just under two minutes to play in a traditionally fashionable horror at Lundholm gym. "We looked right past this game," noted Leaman. "The guys were anxious to play at Maine's "Pit" because of its reputation. This caused our bad performance."

The reputation Leaman speaks of is Maine's two-year unbeaten streak at home to league opponents. Not since the Redmen of two years back defeated them had the Bears even been behind at the half. The court is ten feet less than 99 percent of all others in the nation in length. The stands are pitched at about 30 degrees to the floor. Its name speaks for itself.

Manager Bob Powers expressed it best when he said, "It's kind of strange to think that we could play against Oral Roberts and Penn and then step into this place and have to play the best game of the year to come out alive."

They did with Mssrs. Skinner (24 points, 12 rebs) and Endicott (16 points) leading a collective group of Minutemen to a 42-36 lead at the half and then hold off a late Black Bear surge (73-69 at one juncture) with a perfectly executive four-corner offense (freeze) to a silenced "Pit".

Leaman summed up the trip best when he said; "I told you before we left that if we needed it; we'd get it." Amen.

Rheault Holds Merrimack, 6-1

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

Superb goal-tending is vastly becoming the rule when Chuck Rheault is called upon to guard the net for the UMass hockey squad. "Chicky" was almost unbeatable Saturday night as he stopped 28 shots and the Minutemen were on their way to a 6-1 scalping of the Merrimack Warriors.

Yes, the win was important standing wise, but more important was the means by which it was accomplished. The Minutemen played inspired hockey, they were hungry. They were not to be defeated, by Merrimack (or not even by Vermont for that matter) on this Saturday eve.

After a tightly fought first period, the Minutemen dominated the action as they outhit, outskated, and totally outclassed the Warriors as the Minutemen climbed above Merrimack on the Division II ladder. (UMass is 11-4-2, Merrimack 11-5-1).

Billy Harris had another great night, scoring a goal, and backchecking well (Billy scored four goals against Boston State). Mike Ellis picked up two goals for the Minutemen in what was probably his best game of the season.

Don Riley must have been very frustrated by the end of the night. He has done everything of late except score. Finch robbed the big captain time and time again. Don did manage an assist on the evening.

The first period consisted of 20 minutes in hard times for both squads as both goalies gave the opposition nothing but fits of frustration.

At 2:34 of the second period Bob Quinlan broke the ice. He banged a slapshot home from just inside the Merrimack blue line. The Minutemen were short-handed (the first of two short handed goals for UMass).

The eventual game winner was scored by Billy Harris at 5:42. Billy came streaking down centerice; he cut to the right; he busted through the Warrior defense, he let the shot go; goal. It was a great individual effort by Billy who improves with every passing game.

Things roughened up a bit in the third period as both teams spent a good deal of time with four (or even three) guys skating in front of their goalies.

Mike Ellis scored the first of his two goals at 2:21 as he took the puck and came busting down the left side, beating Finch from about 30 feet out.

Keenan highlighted a good night's work tallying a short-handed goal at 6:49 as he broke down the left and beat the weary-eyed Finch. Keenan was hustling all night, especially while killing penalties.

At 6:58 the Warriors departed from the script and Chicky lost his shutout bid. Albie Portelance beat Rheault from about 25 feet out and the Warrior fans had something to rejoice about.

The fourth line got into the act at 19:17. Brookline's Johnny Muse set up Kevin Connors for the sixth and final UMass goal.

The Minutemen seem to be flying high right now. Rheault is playing as good as he ever has in the UMie net. The whole team is playing inspired hockey, winning hockey.

Tonight the pucksters travel to Lynn Arena to face Salem State.

Wednesday night the Minutemen will host Yale at the Springfield Civic Center in the final regularly scheduled game of the year. Game time is 8:00 p.m.

North Viets Halt POW Release

SAIGON (AP)—The chief spokesman for the North Vietnamese delegation said Tuesday there will be no further release of American prisoners of war until several other points in the Vietnam peace agreement are honored.

"The United States is responsible for the total application of the agreement," Hanoi spokesman Bui Tin declared.

He said authorities in Hanoi and officials of the Viet Cong's Provisional Revolutionary Government had ordered a freeze on the release of American prisoners in both North and South Vietnam.

He characterized the situation as "critical."

Just before Tin's announcement, American military sources at Clark Air Base in the Philippines said North Vietnam was expected to hand over in Saigon on Wednesday a list of POWs to be freed the following day.

Tin said three critical points must be resolved before the next group of American prisoners will be released:

—Strict application of the cease-fire.

—Simultaneous return of civilian and military prisoners.

—A guarantee of improved working conditions for the four-party Joint Military Commission.

Tin said the Hanoi government understands very well the feelings of the families of the American prisoners and all Americans who wait for them to come home.

"But we must also think of the families of Vietnamese prisoners and of the millions of Vietnamese who are hoping for peace that they expect to come through the strict application of the Paris peace agreement."

He charged that the U.S. delegation "has shown bad faith and has shown only interest in getting U.S. prisoners back."

There was no immediate comment from the U.S. delegation.

A subcommission on captured persons convened again Tuesday morning in efforts to resolve the differences.

The United States had said earlier it would press the Communist delegation for a list and timetable of the next group of American prisoners to be released.

Grad. Sen. Counters TA Contract Woes

By ROBERTA MARTONE

Emotions ran high in a discussion over the legality of the University's termination of a Teaching Assistant's (TA's) contract at last night's meeting of the Graduate Student Senate.

Frank Skinner, a TA in the Mechanical Engineering Department, said that he was forced to do an overload of work which was impossible to handle by the given deadline. Unable to meet the deadline, Skinner said that he felt he must resign. His adviser would not accept the resignation until after the work was done, at which time Skinner's adviser demanded his resignation.

Skinner is protesting the fact that he hasn't received payment for this work and that he is also out of a TA position. He said, "I don't want to sue anyone. I just wish I had a chance for a fair hearing. I don't want to see this happen to anyone else."

In an attempt to aid Skinner, and any other graduate TA that may face this problem, the Graduate Senate made several suggestions as to what could be done.

The first suggestion was the establishment of a grievance committee, along with a set of written guidelines upon which to base a better and new contract. Mike Curran, a member of the Graduate Senate said, "We need more than a simple contract. We need a powerful input."

It was also suggested that each TA speak to one's various department heads and find out what is just and unjust in their contract.

A final suggestion was made concerning the formation of an Orientation Committee for incoming graduate students, to prevent further continuation of these problems. In summation, Veda Ross, President of the Graduate Senate, asked, "How many of you know what is in your contract? What if the same thing was to happen to you?"

Further discussion of the Skinner case was tabled until the next meeting.

The next item on the agenda concerned an appeal by Gary Brown of the Amherst Council who asked for a donation to prevent the deportation of an Iranian student, Babak Zaharie. Brown said, "The reason for the deportation of this man has nothing to do with his violating any laws, but because the United States government finds him aggravating." He said they needed public support and pressure. Brown also said that this was important for all foreign students because they should be assured and aware of their rights.

Brown asked for a donation of $150.00 to aid this cause. The Graduate Senate approved a motion to grant Brown $200.00.

Under old business, the possible development of a Graduate Senate Student Affairs Committee was discussed. Its purpose would entail the development of an administration policy for graduate students. Ms. Ross said, "The committee should be all encompassing. We should keep this thing going as long as possible so that it will be to the best advantage of anyone involved in administration problems." The suggestion was tabled until the next meeting.

A motion concerning an increase in the graduate student fee of $2.00 per student was brought forward. It was said that the money would be needed for the rise in Xerox costs and for payment of salaries for certain graduate student officers. John Mueller, vice-president of the Graduate Senate, complained about the fee saying, "We're paying overhead for a building (Campus Center), where prices are high, and half the time we can't use the facilities we're paying for." The motion was tabled until the next meeting.

Other business discussed and tabled dealt with the possible formation of a Task Force committee to study the history of the Trustee meetings.

Collins Denounces Ed. Reshuffling Plan

By MARK VOGLER

State Representative James G. Collins, D-Amherst, told the annual meeting of the Amherst Chamber of Commerce Monday night that the proposed plan for reorganization of higher education would "radically alter the method of governing our state institutions of higher education" and would "risk the chances of increased political involvement in education, diminishing the quality of services and programs."

Collins spoke before 50 people at the Lord Jeffery Inn, addressing himself to Gov. Francis W. Sargent's reorganization program, particularly the area of higher education.

He disfavored the plan's division of the state into five regional boards to determine the direction of public education from kindergarten to post-graduate school with what he referred to as an overall "Super Board" for the state.

"If the proposed plan goes into effect, we will have effectively done away with Boards of Trustees and local governance for each institution of higher education," Collins charged.

"One of the major roles of the Trustees is to act as a political buffer between the institutions and pressure groups. I think the "Super Board" could too easily be manipulated politically; and politics as much as possible should be kept out of education."

The representative said that it would be physically impossible for a lay regional board to be familiar with the institutions; programs; concerns of faculty, students, and staff on two or more campuses in addition to being knowledgeable and active in directing primary and secondary education.

According to Collins, "The Boards, composed of private citizens appointed by the Governor, would be forced to devote little attention to the major and complex questions of education within their regions, thus further fostering dependence on Boston and the "Super Board".

He said the quality of education would suffer and the imput of the general citizenry would be diminished overall should the proposed plan succeed.

Collins said that there is much room for the improvement and coordination of educational services on the state and local level, but added "we should retain the good and workable things from the past and plan for the future."

"I look forward to the retention of trustees at our institutions of higher learning and to a continual commitment on the part of the Governor and the legislature to providing quality education to the citizens of our state," he said.

N.E. Blacks Meet At Amherst

By MDC STAFF

An All New England Black Students Conference held at Amherst College this past weekend has, according to its organizers, laid the foundations for greater communication and cooperation among Northeast Black students. The organizers billed it as a "great success".

The aim of the conference was to establish communication among black students in New England. The program included six workshops on black politics and culture.

Copies of a mimeographed statement by Henderson Browne, an Amherst undergrad and conference spokesman, which outlined the position of the organizers of the conference, were passed out at its beginning. The statement said, "We as black students have been struggling to wage war on institutionalized racism in the American society."

In the opening address of the conference, Asa Davis, Chairman of the Amherst College Black Studies Department, warned "personally I feel we're heading for some very rough seas and bad weather." Davis also stressed the importance of the relevance of academic studies to the black community.

In a major Saturday evening address, Mayor Gordon Hatcher of Gary, Indiana, attacked what he called "the sick and deeply flawed system of higher education in America."

Hatcher decried the "white domination over black academic reorganization of college curricula from a black perspective." He added that he thought there was a need "to get down to the serious business of blacks relating meaningfully to American institutions of higher education."

Hatcher criticized present American institutions of higher learning for allegedly ignoring the important contributions of black people to American culture.

"Why was it that I as a black youth was so unaware of the rich vein that ran through my heritage?" he asked. "American history looks very different when viewed by black students." He called current teaching "ideology developed by the white ruling class to justify religiously their racism."

Hatcher also attacked the "genocide" being carried out against blacks in America. He cited the lynching of blacks in the South during the twenties and the disproportionately high number of blacks sent to Vietnam as examples. He also said that a form of genocide was not letting a man get a job, citing thousands of black veterans who were unable to get a job after returning from Vietnam.

According to Hatcher "the present administration has abandoned the 'War on Poverty'. It wasn't much," he said, "but it was all we had. The President, with his policy of being neglect, has clearly turned his back on blacks."

Hatcher also called for blacks to work through grass roots political organizations, to educate and register blacks to vote, and to consider the formation of a third political party.

The conference, despite a registration of 110, was attended by more than 500 people.

High Court To Rule On CIA Financing

By VERNON A. GUIDRY, Jr.
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court Monday agreed to decide if a taxpayer can challenge as unconstitutional the secrecy that cloaks the financing of Central Intelligence Agency operations.

The case involves the "standing" of taxpayers to challenge the actions of government when they think the Constitution has been abused.

The justices agreed to hear an appeal by the government of a ruling of the U.S. Circuit Court at Philadelphia that gave William B. Richardson of Greensburg, Pa., standing to sue about the secrecy of CIA appropriation and expenditures.

If the Circuit Court ruling stands, argued U.S. Solicitor Gen. Erwin N. Griswold, then it "is almost certain to spawn a significant increase in suits by taxpayers challenging a wide variety of government programs..."

In a 1968 case, the high court tempered a prohibition against taxpayer suits by establishing a two-point test. If a taxpayer establishes a personal stake in the issue, and can link that to a specific violation of the Constitution, then he can sue.

The government claimed that Richardson's complaint was a general one, and that the constitutional mandate required only publication of appropriations.

Under the 1949 Central Intelligence Agency Act, Congress appropriates, publicly, to government agencies money which is then transferred secretly to CIA.

If Richardson doesn't have standing to enforce the provision, said the Circuit Court, "then it is difficult to see how this requirement which the framers of the Constitution considered vital to the proper functioning of our democratic republic, may be enforced at all."

Also, in a series of rulings Monday, the justices refused to reopen the abortion issue for pleas from court-appointed guardians of the unborn, and for additional medical data.

Ms. Peck Completes Peace Trek

WASHINGTON (AP)—Deborah Peck finished a 420-mile, 36-day "walk for peace" Monday to dramatize a campaign to rebuild a North Vietnamese hospital destroyed by U.S. planes during Christmas bombing.

"The Christmas bombing seemed to represent misuse of power...the whole insanity of the war," she said in an interview after arriving here.

She is 21 and a senior in child development studies at the University of Massachusetts, where she is to start student teaching when she returns.

"I did it as a citizen," she said. "People say nobody is guilty, and we're all only victims of the war. But it really is all of us who are guilty. I decided to stop talking and walk."

She left West Springfield, Mass., 36 days ago, averaging 12 to 15 miles a day. Most of the time she walked alone although some friends accompanied her for one short stretch.

She was carrying material on the destruction of the Bach Mai Hospital and in person-to-person conversations prompted dozens of donations to the Bach Mai Hospital Emergency Fund, based in Cambridge, Mass.

In Washington, she ended her walk at the law office of Ramsey Clark, former attorney general who is heading the Bach Mai fund drive. He was out of town and she gave her personal check for $200 to his receptionist.

'Rocky' Talk Opens P-10 Series

A focus on mountaineering in the northern Rockies will begin this semester's series of speakers in Project 10, the self-styled campus "experimental college."

Dr. Tom "Casey" Stengel of the UMass. chemistry department will discuss his climbing on Mt. Logan in the Yukon territory, including a projected expedition this summer to conduct research into the acclimatization of human physiology at high altitudes. Stengel will lead the climbing team of eight in a party that also includes four physicians and 10 "guinea pig" Canadian Army volunteers.

His discussion and accompanying film on a previous Logan expedition will be tonight at 8 p.m. in the Main Lounge of Cance House (Southwest). All interested people are invited and coffee will be served.

Speaking on Tuesday, March 13, is David Roberts, a Hampshire College professor and director of their Outdoor Education Center. Roberts, the author of two books on his climbing experiences in Alaska and Canada, The Mountain of My Fear and Deborah, will use a slide show to illustrate his expeditions in the Alaskan Revelation Range and Cathedral Spires.

Future speakers for the Project 10 events, all of which meet in Cance on Tuesday evenings, will be announced in the Collegian.

John Adams Tower Blacks Out Again

By MARY FRANCES COOPER

John Adams Tower was affected by 2 more power blackouts last night, one at 5 p.m. and one at 7 p.m. Mark Cavanagh, Resident Director of T-5, said that Physical Plant reacted quickly and each of the blackouts lasted for approximately 5 minutes. Cavanagh also said that the entire dorm was affected by the power loss, but an emergency power system was activated so that the elevators as well as the lights in the corridors and stairways continued to function.

John Adams was also affected by a blackout on Sundav night which lasted for 1/2 hour.

Cavanagh could not offer any cause for the blackouts, and at the time the Collegian went to press, the Physical Plant was not available for comment.

McCoy Reveals CCEBS Plans

By PAM PERRY

Rhody McCoy, director of the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students, (CCEBS), last night revealed new plans to direct the program towards the needs of serious students who can make "a' contribution to the program, themselves, and the community."

Speaking at a meeting of Ahora, the organization of Spanish-speaking students, McCoy discussed the ways in which he would reorganize the program.

New operational procedures being discussed by the CCEBS Board of Directors, he said, include new criteria for admission and continuance in the program. Among the points being debated are a minimum semester load of 12 credits, the raising of the grade point average necessary to remain in the program, and new plans for the distribution of loans and financial aid.

McCoy emphasized that the purpose of the CCEBS reorganization plan is to "restate and restructure its administration." He spoke out against the sporadic service provided by the program and plans to "spread out the responsibility" so that more students will benefit from the resources of the program.

McCoy explained that plans for the reorganization of CCEBS have been presented to the Board of Directors, but are subject to further modification. Three new directorships are being discussed for the program, one each in the areas of academic affairs, business affairs, and student service. Several positions under these directorships may be filled by students, as he would like to see "more students involved in decision making." McCoy stressed that no definite plans were made as yet, except for the inclusion of a Spanish coordinator in the student service department.

Speaking on the CCEBS program in general, Mr. McCoy expressed regret that students in the program have been viewed as only out for their own advancement and not concerned with CCEBS as a whole.

Questions about the new programs were taken at the end of the talk, but McCoy declined to answer on specific issues until plans have been resubmitted to the Board of Directors and decisions to implement them are made definite.

Curbs Sought On Bar 'Promotions'

By ED FOGARTY

Richard M. Howland, UMass Student Attorney, told the Amherst Board of Selectmen last night that an article in the "Amherst Record" regarding promotional celebrations in area bars had troubled him, and that these promotions were probably illegal.

The paper, according to Howland, had said that one local bar would be offering "all the beer a customer can drink" for a cover charge price to pay the cost of a band.

Howland said that he had contacted the Alcoholic Beverage Control Commission, and they had told him that such a promotion would be a violation.

He expressed concern that the promotion campaign is an exploitation of young people, adding that it might create difficulties for the young to develop responsible drinking habits.

"It is only my concern that the transition (from the old law to the new) should be temperate," said Howland.

The Board voted unanimously to send to local liquor establismhments a letter recommending that they use no inducements to attract the new young drinkers.

The Selectmen also voted unanimously to allow the Newman Center a Wine and Malt Common Victualer license. The Newman Center Cafeteria will now be allowed to sell beer and wine with their meals in the cafeteria.

The Selectmen, however, placed a restriction on the Newman Center in that they would not be allowed to advertise in any manner.

Merle H. Howes was opposed to granting the license. He argued that the Newman Center now has tax-free status, and that the present licensing regulations did not take into consideration tax-exempt institutions.

Howes recommended that a new license be instituted especially for tax-exempt institutions. The new license would raise the present fee from $300 to $1200. Howes argued that the increased fee would offset the tax-exempt status.

William Garvey was opposed to the new license. He said that the $1200 fee was way out of proportion and that the Selectmen had no right to change the terms of a license that they had instituted three or four weeks ago.

Howes motion did not carry.

The Board then heard from Harvey Friedman, member of the Personnel Board, who said that the town needed an organizational chart for all departments.

The organizational chart would include information on what the present employee does and what the job should entail.

Friedman said the town of Amherst would soon need a full-time special consultant to advise the Town Manager what a job is worth in salary and what requirements are to be met by the employee.

William Garvey, Selectman, pointed out that a consultant would probably mean increased salaries and an increased labor force. Friedman agreed.

Street Listings Almost Finished

Estelle Matusko, Amherst Town Clerk, has announced that the annual town street listing has been, for the most part, completed.

However, it has been virtually impossible to contact some residents due to their mobility. For this reason, and in the interest of cutting down on the number of "drop" notices which are mailed to voters who do not appear on the street list, the town is offering the street listing card which appears on the right side and which can be clipped out, completed, and be returned to the Town clerk at the Town Hall in Amherst by those who consider Amherst their legal residence. Especially encouraged are people who are already registered voters and have not been able to comply with the street listing requirement yet.

Filling our street listing card does not constitute a registration to vote. Registering to vote must be done in person at the Town Clerk's office at which time the registrant must bring proof of his Amherst residence.

Registrations can take place any weekday between 8 a.m. and 4:30 p.m.

Any questions pertaining to street listing should be directed to the Town Clerk–253-3885.

Communists Resist Postwar Proposals

By ARTHUR L. GAVSHON
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP)—East-West differences clouded the start of the Vietnam peace parley Monday. The Vietnamese Communists resisted key U.S. proposals for the postwar era.

But clashes of principle and procedure among the 13 participants seemed capable of compromise and the confident forecast of delegates was that the parties involved will sign a "hands-off Vietnam" promise Friday.

Secretary of State William P. Rogers told the opening session: "If each party around this table makes a total and unrestrained commitment to playing a responsible role in carrying out this agreement, then peace will be guaranteed."

He was referring to the cease-fire agreement signed in the same room just a month ago by the United States, North and South Vietnam and the Viet Cong.

The tone of conciliation that marked Rogers' speech brought few echos when Mrs. Bguyen Thi Binh, foreign minister of the Viet Cong's Provisional Revolutionary Government, delivered her address.

She spoke of her people winning "the most brutal war of aggression in history." She charged the Saigon government in torturing, ill-treating, murdering "hundreds of thousands of patriots." She accused the United States of pursuing a "policy against peace and national concord."

These exchanges came after the conference had swiftly adopted a set of rules for itself. They provided for U.S. and North Vietnamese experts to produce the first draft of a declaration which the conference as a whole will present as its final act.

Reconnaissance Planes Spot N. Viet Air Base

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP)-U.S. sources reported Monday that American reconnaissance planes have turned up evidence that North Vietnam is preparing its first air base in South Vietnam with a battery of Soviet-built missiles to protect it.

The Saigon government presented U.S. aerial photographs purporting to show SAM2 missile sites built after the Jan. 28 cease-fire around Khe Sanh in the northern quarter of South Vietnam. Saigon's representatives asked the International Commission of Control and Supervision for an immediate investigation.

They said Communist delegations to the four-party Joint Military Commission refused to send a team to investigate what they called a "blatant" cease-fire violation.

U.S. sources said North Vietnamese engineers are rebuilding a 4,000-foot air strip at Khe Sanh that was first constructed by American engineers in the late 1960s. The sources said it was not clear how North Vietnam would use the air base, in Quang Tri Province about 15 miles below the demilitarized zone and six miles from the Laotian border.

In a letter to the International Commission of Control and Supervision, Lt. Gen. Du Quock Dong, chief of the South Vietnamese military delegation, declared:

"We believe that the introduction of SAM2 missiles into South Vietnam after the cease-fire, as well as the overt establishment of missile sites at Khe Sanh, are actions which may well ignite the fuse of resurgent war in the near future."

Senior U.S. military sources said the U.S. photo-reconnaissance backed up Saigon's charge that the missiles were carried into South Vietnam after the cease-fire.

But the chief North Vietnamese spokesman in Saigon, Bui Tin, denied they were moved down after the cease-fire, saying the Viet Cong have had SAM batteries in Quang Tri Province for some time.

Tin also said the next release of U.S. prisoners will not take place Tuesday as American officials had anticipated. Word on who the prisoners will be and when they will be turned over will come soon from Hanoi, he declared.

Doctor Denies Wallace Kept Sedated

By REX THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP)-George C. Wallace's chief physician said Monday reports that the Alabama governor is kept under constant sedation and is "in a daze" half the time, are "totally false."

Dr. H.H. Hutchinson confirmed that the 53-year-old governor, paralyzed in both legs since he was wounded in an assassination attempt nine months ago, is in pain much of the time-in "varying intensity." But he said Wallace takes only a mild pain-killer, "like aspirin, that you can buy in a drugstore."

Wallace, meanwhile, left for Washington aboard his state-owned executive jet to attend the National Governors Conference. He had been back in Montgomery only five days after leaving a Birmingham hospital where he underwent surgery for the sixth time since the shooting.

The prostate gland operation was performed to improve the governor's bladder function, and Hutchinson said "he is a good bit improved" since that was done. "He has gained 8 to 10 pounds," the physician added.

Newsweek magazine said last week that Wallace is "tormented by pain and depression" and that his health "remains chancy." The magazine quoted an unidentified "Wallace man" as saying, "They keep George so sedated that half the time he's in a daze. Every 45 minutes they give him some kind of medication, just like clockwork."

Hutchinson called that "totally false."

He said the governor takes a "bladder antiseptic" four times a day, along with vitamins, and a sleeping pill at night, and is "able to sleep through the night" most of the time.

"His spirits are good," the physician continued, and, mentally, "he's as sharp as ever, and you know how sharp that is."

Hutchinson said Wallace does get "maybe a little bit low at times," but said that will happen to "anyone who looks down and sees himself paralyzed."

Many POWs Still Unaccounted For

By DON McLEOD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite the Vietnam peace agreement, there are some 1,300 Americans still unaccounted for in Southeast Asia--including some the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong once boasted of capturing.

The Pentagon says it has a list of 53 men it believes were captured alive. But no mention of the men has been made in the current prisoner exchange of more than 500 American POWs.

The reluctance of the North Vietnamese to acknowledge the fate of these men soon may lead to another wave of protest by families and sympathizers if the men aren't accounted for before the current prisoner exchange is closed.

Among the men believed by the Pentagon to have been captured is Navy Lt. Ronald Wayne Dodge, who was sho. down on a mission over North Vietnam on May 17, 1967. His wingman saw him eject from the crippled plane and established contact from the ground with his survival radio. "I'm moving up the hill," Dodge radioed, "being surrounded, and breaking up my radio."

The Sept.9, 1967 issue of Paris Match carried a photograph of Dodge being escorted by two militiamen. The Dutch freelance photographer who took the picture said it was made in Hanoi.

Movie film reach the west later showing Dodge being led by the same men and walking under his own power.

But Dodge has never been recognized by North Vietnam as a prisoner or having died in captivity. Requests for information have brought only the statement from Hanoi authorities that he was "never detained in North Vietnam."

Army Sgt. James Van Bendegom of Kenosha, Wis., was one of seven men reported missing on July 12, 1967 near Pleiku, North Vietnam. In December, 1967, a picture appeared in a North Vietnamese newspaper showing Van Bendegom and three of the other missing men in captivity.

All four were shown standing. They were apparently in good health and under guard. The other three are on the POW lists. Van Bendegom is not. Nor has he been reported dead in captivity.

Arabs Cry For Vengeance

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Thousands of Arab mourners screamed for vengeance Monday at the funeral for 47 Libyans killed when Israeli fighters shot at a Libyan passenger jet and forced it to crash in the occupied Sinai Desert.

"Kadafi! Kadafi!" they cried. "We want revenge."

Col. Muammar Kadafi, the Libyan leader, briefly attended the funeral in Benghazi but did not speak. Radio Tripoli broadcast the ceremonies.

More than 100,000 persons were reported in the funeral procession.

"This was the ugliest crime in history!" shouted a radio commentator over the din. "The nation will never forget its martyrs. Justice will be quickly done."

Israel's defense minister, Moshe Dayan, reported to the Israeli parliament on the crash and again laid major blame on the Libyan plane's French pilot and the Cairo control tower.

The Boeing 727 was on a flight Wednesday from Tripoli to Cairo via Benghazi, but strayed off course over the Israeli-occupied Sinai captured from Egypt in the 1967 war. All but seven of the 113 persons aboard were killed after Israeli Phantom jets opened fire in the proclaimed belief the airliner was on a hostile mission.

Dayan repeated his appeal to Egypt to set up a "hot line" communications system "even before peace comes," to prevent further air tragedies.

The offer was quickly rejected in Cairo after Dayan suggested it last Saturday. The Egyptians said all they wanted from Israel was respect for "international law and order."

"Of course," Dayan said Monday, "only peace and the establishment of formal neighborly relations are the real answers. But even in the absence of peace there should be nothing dearer than the safeguarding of human lives."

Dayan's appearance in the Knesset came several hours after the departure of Premier Golda Meir to the United States for talks with President Nixon and administration officials.

A minor controversy swirled about the dead French captain of the Libyan airliner, Jacques Bourges, 42. The Israelis charged Sunday night he was not qualified to fly Boeing 727 jets.

But the French ambassador to Israel, Francis Hure, and later Air France officials, angrily denied the charge and produced Bourges' pilot license to prove he was qualified.

In Beirut, the Arab Air Transport Federation called on world airlines to boycott Israeli airports and refuse to service Israeli planes in protest.

FDA May Ban Saccharin

By JOHN STOWELL
By Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Food and Drug Administration said Monday it is finding bladder tumors in rats fed saccharin, but is awaiting further studies before making any decision on whether to ban the artificial sweetener.

"We're not going to take any action until we get a recommendation from the National Academy of Sciences," said Virgil O. Wodicka, director of FDA's Bureau of Foods.

He said FDA scientists are not sure whether the rat bladder cellular changes indicate cancer and, if they do, whether saccharin caused it. But he acknowledged in response to questioning that the tumors are "suspicious."

The safety of saccharin has been under extensive review since 1969 when cyclamates were banned because they caused cancer in laboratory animals. It is the only artififical sweetener still on the market.

Saccharine is 300 to 500 times sweeter than sugar and 10 times sweeter than cyclamatex. It is used in a wide range of commericially prepared foods and beverages intended for persons suffering from diabetes and high blood pressure.

The Delaney Clause, a 1958 amendment to the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act, pohibits the use of any food additive that causes cancer in man or animal.

The FDA has not completed its two-year study of 96 rats, half male and half female, which were fed saccharin ranging from .01 to 7.5 per cent of their total daily diets.

Wodicka said the tumors found so far might be traced to impurities in the saccharin, or to "mechanical irritation because the levels were so high they crystalized out in the bladder."

In January, 1972, the FDA removed saccharins from its list of additives generally recongized as safe, and limited the average adult's daily intake to no more than one gram.

That action was based on University of Wisconsin feeding studies which produced large tumors, some of them malignant, in rats fed 5 per cent saccharin.

Nixon Retains Phase 3 Wage Guidelines

By GAYLORD SHAW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Nixon administration said Monday it will retain the 5.5 per cent guideline for wage increases during Phase 3. But at the same time it signaled some loosening of the pay standard.

Confusion and contradiction cloaked the major economic policy announcements.

The confusion developed when President Nixon's chief economic spokesman said that Phase 2's basic wage standard would remain in effect. At the same time, the administration embraced a broadly worded policy statement which skirted any mention of the 5.5 per cent standard.

The statement said "no single standard or settlement can be equally applicable at one time to all parties in an economy so large, decentralized and dynamic."

Nixon's decisionto make the rigid guidelines more flexible appeared to be a major concession to labor. Public and private statements of administration officials indicated the move was an attempt to win labor's backing for Nixon's revamped economic program. AFL-CIO President George Meany has opposed the 5.5 per cent standard as too low.

Meany said in Miami that he was not surprised by the announcement. He said it only was a restatement of Nixon's Jan. 11 position. Meany said he hoped "eventually to get away from the ceiling.

"If we're going to have a figure," he said, "it should be 7.5 or 8 per cent."

Nixon announced last month that he was ending Phase 2's mandatory wage-price controls for all but the food, health and construction industries.

He named a labor-management advisory committee to recommend a Phase 3 policy for wage increases, and that committee's statement was released by the White House Monday.

Of its nine points, ranking administration officials singled out this paragraph as "the basic guide" for Phase 3 wage increases.

"Considering the economy as a whole, responsible wage behavior requires continuing stabilization in the average rate of wage and benefit increase total compensation per man-hour in 1973 compared to 1972 so as to be consistent with the goal set by the President of getting the rate of inflation down to 2.5 per cent or less by the end of the year."

Expensive Meat

Students who patronize the Hatch, Bluewall, or Coffee Shop are probably aware by now that the prices of meat sandwiches have been raised by as much as ten cents. The price increase has been attributed to the rising costs of meat, and the move was made in anticipation of another price freeze imposed by President Nixon.

The price of a campus hamburger is high enough as it is, and to expect students to continue to patronize campus snack bars and cafeterias, in light of a price increase, seems entirely impractical and unrealistic.

We remain unconvinced that a price increase is absolutely necessary, considering the fact that a simple hamburger costs seventy cents in the Coffee Shop, and only twenty-three cents at local hamburger stands.

Richard Nelson, Chairman of the Campus Center Board of Governors, has indicated that the price increase may be only temporary. We certainly hope this will be true.

Against Abortion

By SUSAN LAIDIG

The Supreme Court decision taking away the state's laws restricting the practice of abortion has begun a debate which can show us a great deal about people and their motives. We have been told from the beginnings of our lives that society is the cause of our ills. Here we have a chance to form the future society, and we chose the more selfish of the two ways.

Many issues have been mixed up with the main one in order to confuse. Pro-abortionists would like to dismiss the entire question as religious, only a Roman Catholic concern. Yet the group which has formed on campus to combat abortion is non-denominational, the same as most groups providing pre-natal care. It has set up a table in the Campus Center to give out information on these groups and to give students the opportunity to protest the Court's ruling. This "well-funded" organization has one dollar taped to the table to pay for the deposit. All of its materials were donated.

Another argument is that any laws against abortion impose moralistic views of one small segment of the population on all the population. True, morals are imposed by any law--stealing, murder, rape are all illegal and accounted immoral. To say that society has no right to legislate morals is to say that society has no right to legislate.

Abortion is a means of combatting over-population, some say. Our reply is that over-population should not be attacked by killing people already conceived. It is one thing to prevent a life from coming into existence. It is another to take life from a being who is growing and maintaining itself. The fetus within the womb is not merely a part of the mother. Once the egg has been fertilized it creates its own tissues and even makes its placenta. It then grows according to its own set of chromosomes, which are unique and which will never come into existence again. The woman plays the passive role in this life cycle, merely providing the proper food, just as someone would to maintain the child's life after birth. If the fetus is taken from its natural mother and implanted in another woman, it can still live. It is a separate being.

This is why an anti-abortion coalition is not an anti-woman coalition. We are not against a woman's right over her own body, but we do not hold with a woman's rights over her child's body.

Some have chosen to have abortions so that the child will not be among the unwanted and uncared for of this world. There are agencies who are willing to give prenatal care (in private homes, fully paid for if the woman is unable to stand the cost) and give the child a good adopted family. Unfortunately, too few women know of these options.

Abortion has also been said to be safer for the mother. Yet those women who are strong enough emotionally to come through an abortion would also have had the emotional stability to bear the child. And no abortion is perfectly safe, because if a woman has too many she will become sterile. An abortion interrupts the natural life cycle of the mother.

Abortion is not an answer to anyone's problems.

Nixon And The Poor

President Nixon is bringing another war to a close. His decision to dismantle the Office of Economic Opportunity has, in effect, canceled the War on Poverty. Defending his budget cutbacks on a nationwide radio broadcast, he vowed to bring to an end "the ambitious, sometimes almost utopian commitments" made by the Federal Government in the 1960's. "We must discontinue those programs that have served their purpose" he said, while presumably replacing them with his magic revenue-sharing plan. He cited "bureaucratic meddling" as the cause of the program's failure to "help people to help themselves". In more simple language, it is quite obvious that he just doesn't want the responsibility.

There will be some people who will argue that the War on Poverty is just another example of "pass a law and make the problem go away". But contrary to making the problem go away, it makes the problem real. And that is the crime of liberal legislation, it makes problems too real for those who would rather not be bothered. The War on Poverty is not just another slogan, it is a commitment by the government to recognize and help rectify the shameful situation of people living in abject destitution in the richest nation on earth. It took this country over one hundred years to assume some responsibility for its down-trodden citizens, and now with the stroke of a pen, Richard Nixon says it was all a big mistake.

The OEO is certainly not without faults. The bureaucratic red tape is always present, as in every other government agency. Many of the dreams and plans of its founders are still unfulfilled, and the results in some areas are not as satisfying as we would have liked them to be. But to kill the whole program because of past frustrations is not taking into account the numerous, unmentioned successful ventures deep inside our urban "jungles". Under OEO, Massachusetts has 25 community action programs that are recognized as among the nation's best. Robert Coard, the director of the Action for Boston Community Development, along with Boston Mayor Kevin White, made the journey to Washington last week and joined the 10,000 people from across the nation who had come to express their support for the efforts of the poverty program. According to them, Boston has benefited immensely from the community action programs, and a cut back at this time would seriously jeopardize the efforts to better the lives of Boston's underprivileged. These men realize the problem because they are dealing directly with it. And Boston is just one example of the many similar problems in cities across the country. Contrary to what Mr. Nixon thinks, poverty is a way of life for a lot of people, and it cannot be packed into a box and hidden from view.

I once heard the story of a mythical king who allowed his servants to tell him only the good things about his kingdom, and would see or hear no evil. You've got a pretty good idea how the story goes, and it is all too familiar. Richard Nixon is, perhaps, one of the most reclusive presidents in modern times. Not to act is one thing, but to erase the actions of others is downright irresponsible. Furthermore, if Congress allows the already appropriated funds for OEO to be usurped by a president who is evidently numb to the needs of the country, then it too should carry the burden of this injustice. We never said that the War on Poverty was won, only that it was finally being waged. And now, tragically, we are being told to surrender. And despite Richard Nixon, life goes on for the poor.

Robotoid Arthritis

I. ALL RISE, ROBOTS . . .

It's time for our daily dose of Doctor Pavlov's serum to keep us healthy and clean of thought for the rest of our functioning days . . . Retreat to the Soma bank and we'll be ready to begin . . . beep/beep . . . are we ready to begin? Good. Put on your headphones, pick your poison, and let all your troubles flow out through your computerized circuits. Here's a new identity tape to replace the old one that burned you out. (Quiet soothing voice comes over the system) . . . 'And that's the way it is, and they lived happily ever after."

Of course you're probably wondering by now what that was all about. So am I—and I'm haunted every day by living nightmares that walk around in the semblance of a human body, always wondering what the next new style in robots will be. Of course, no technological circuits are perfect, so we do have machinery failures. Some cases (though not all), these failures are put under the socially despicable term "vandalism".

Robotic (automatic) labelling processes are avoidances of reality, and therefore are easy on the circuits. I mean, after all, you don't want to take chances. Mass-produced labels fall readily from our lips, and the Pavlovian (not Skinnereian) salivations allow us to be led by the switches. The fact that a book like Skinner's is selling so well is a sad comment on the times, and the fact that we're so willing to retreat is an even sadder statement (or proof—in the mathematical sense).

II. Consumerism (you are what you eat) or, The Humanoid Boogie

ROTC for credit is, when you get right down to it, an affront to common sense (which ain't all that common nowadays). Yup, we're gonna turn out professional soldiers for the government so they can protect us from ourselves and our better instincts. Tucked neatly into our little economic circuits; there is no need to hassle (hate that word) our brain waves with how many poor people will be going into a volunteer army. It's very Amerikan to be non-reflective, dull, flat surfaces with little mind and will. What the hell are you trying to prove? Nothing, dear friends; the proof (mathematical) is right in front of our eyes (or maybe it's just to our sides—excuse me while I adjust my blinders . . .), and it's just a hell of a lot easier to ignore than to be aware. Those who don't fit our purposes just don't belong. They interfere with our programs. The collective "we", good taste, etc. All belong. The person who is so impolite as to mention that morality has anything to do with our lives is just a pain in the old posterior. Good God, this thing actually thinks and feeds back . . . and if it realizes, it's a definite drag. Pretty soon (or always) the government won't need to hire assassins. They've already got them. Who are the brain police? I wish you realization.

Sexist Lexicography

By MICHAEL UGOLINI

Recently the headline—writers for the Collegian received criticism voiced in a letter to the editor. The writer said that the headline-writers either weren't committed to equality of the sexes or weren't paying attention when they wrote a headline using the word "Coed", to refer to a female college student. The writer went on to say that the word implied that coeds are secondary to the real students, or more specifically, males.

I would like to point out the fact that the meanings of words occur in your mind and that words that seem the same have different meanings to different people. What words mean then, is dependent on what the receiver of those words takes them to mean. Words do not have meaning; people do. How a receiver interprets a word will depend on anything from what his values are to what his motives are. The person claimed that the use of the word "Coed" was sexist. The person who took it that way obviously put a high value on the achievement of "equality between the sexes". I agree that equality is a sound goal, but thinking that the deletion of certain "sexist" words is going to achieve it, is a paradox for reasons that I now will attempt show.

Take, for instance, the recent recognition by lexicographers of the word "Ms.", which doesn't differentiate between an unmarried woman and a married one. This change is supposedly a way of achieving equality. This change, I hope, prompted many males to ask that poverbial question: Who gives a shit? I sincerely doubt that the mere knowledge of a woman's marital status is detrimental to the achievement of equality.

Also in the media, I've been hearing the word "spokesperson" in place of what used to be "spokesmen". I presume that someone felt that the latter term is sexist since it implies that all "spokespeople" are men. To drive a point home, I would like now to follow the media's example and apply it to other words. Instead of having policemen we would have policepersons; instead of congressmen, congresspeople; and instead of selectman, selectpeople. I don't want to beat it to death, but I hope that the absurdity of this is evident.

I think its time for us to realize that deletion of or changes to words that to some people are "sexist" will not change the inequality between the sexes. If anything, the changing of the words simply reinforces the feelings of chauvanistic males, that women are increasingly becoming a pain in the ass, instead of seeing them as intelligent individuals expressing their dissatisfaction with a male dominated world.

Landlords Should Do The Repairs

To The Editor:

The Landlord-Tenant Relations Committee of the Town of Amherst has recently been working with a subject that may be of concern to some landlords and tenants within the town. We have discovered that some leases call for all repairs within a rental unit to be the responsibility of the tenant in that they must contract for the repair, repair it to the satisfaction of the landlord and personally pay for all costs involved, without any adjustments to the rent or security deposit. The committee feels that without further understandings on paper between the landlord and tenant, that this is both an unfair and unwise arrangement for the landlord and tenant.

The committee feels that the tenant must assume the financial cost of repairing damages due to neglect, abuse or accidents of their own doing but the landlord should do the repairs so that he is sure that they are done and done according to all existing building and sanitary codes. Only by the landlord assuming this responsibility can he be assured that his property is maintained in the condition it should be.

Finally, the committee feels that the tenant should not assume any responsibility for repairs due to faulty construction, normal wear and tear or fixing applicances and equipment that have passed their useful life and are in need of repair due to simply becoming old. Tenants should not be burdened with repairing any item whose failure to function or serve its purpose is not a direct result of misuse by the tenant presently occupying the unit. Wearout or failure due to age is a responsibility and risk of the landlord and should properly be assumed by him or her.

The committee would like to urge all landlords and tenants to review their leases to see that this problem does not exist and prior to entering into any new lease, see that responsibilities in this area are clearly defined on paper. Many large rental agencies in town are using a common lease that may appear to place all repairs as the tenants duty but this is not the intent inspite of the wording and this is being corrected and will be clear in future editions. Tenants should contact their landlords to see what the intent is as soon as possible so that a tenant is not faced with the expense of replacing old refrigerators, ranges, heaters, roofs and other major items.

The committee stands ready to assist in any problems that may evolve relative to this matter.

Steve W. Fletcher, Chairman
Landlord-Tenant Relations Comm.

Cut The Shit

To The Editor:

This letter is to all the residents of John Adams and to all of their guests of this past weekend, invited or otherwise:

Dear Friends,

To all of you who participated, actively or passively, in the destruction that took place in John Adams Tower this past weekend, I have but one thing to say to you : GO FUCK YOURSELVES! I don't know about you, but I really don't enjoy living in a shithole. For some reason it bothers me when there are no lights on in any of the elevators (because they've all been knocked out), and, if you're still willing to ride on them, you're greeted by broken glass, broken chairs, and the glorious stench of somebody's Schlitz. Perhaps you folks just don't realize that this wretched building is more than just 22 stories of brick, steel and glass. It is (unfortunately to some) the home of approximately 600 people.

Well, enough of my preaching. I shall only ask you politely to please cut the shit so that some of us might possibly live in whatever minimal comfort is afforded us here in ol' JA. Thanks for hearing me out.

'Under 21' Blues

To The Editor:

On behalf of those sitting on the "under 21" side of the Blue Wall Friday evening. I would like to thank the management for their stupidity in placing the wooden barricade in such a precarious manner that it was impossible to see anything except the back of Sweet Pie's piano. I would also like to thank them for charging us the same admission price to watch the back of the piano, as those allowed to see the show.

Perhaps this absurd situation will be remedied when the sacred date of March 1st comes marching into hallowed halls of the Blue Wall.

Change The Laws

To The Editor:

Last week there was a hearing in Gardner Auditorium at the State House on gun control bills. There were over 700 active and vocal people in attendance. These peoples' obvious interest in having the bills defeated impressed the committee and the bills lost.

I'm not writing to argue for or against gun control. The point I want to make is that masses of people showing an interest can influence the outcome of legislation. We need this kind of participation on March 7 when bills decriminalizing marijuana come before committee.

We will have car pools going to Boston to attend the hearing. If you are interested in going or could volunteer to drive contact me at 106 Hills No., tel. 546-9265. With a large turnout at Gardner Auditorium on March 7, we can show our legislators that we are watching them and how they act on these bills. If you can't go to the hearing the next best thing you could do is write a letter to your legislators and make your views known. Make your State Senator and Representative accountable to you!

If we don't work to change the laws governing marijuana usage, they won't get changed. It is up to us. Don't let March 7 pass by without having done something to help this legislation pass.

Marijuana–It's time to change the laws.

War And Rape

To The Editor:

I am optimistic to see that the ROTC credit issue has been intelligently reconsidered by the Faculty Senate. The objection that ROTC programs are not subject to University review mechanisms is valid and deserves thorough study. Presently, to deny academic credit seems to be the only way to gain leverage against the military, but its effectiveness is doubtful while squeezing the ROTC students in the process.

It was disheartening then to read in the Feb. 23 Collegian Larry Ladd's analogy of ROTC to "Rape Science", drawn obviously with a cheaper rhetorical appeal in mind ("War IS Rape"). The truth is, rape is not an acceptable endeavor in this society, military service is, and most of the members of the Faculty Senate know this regardless of their personal values. As long as ROTC is tax-supported and presumably beneficial to the society, there is no justification for the University (which is also tax-supported and presumably beneficial to the society) to make unnecessary trouble for it. This is not to say that the University should not try to come to terms with the military, but that Mr. Ladd's self-righteous moral indignation is one trip we could do without this spring.

Editorial Points

It's not that the Alumni Stadium and the new library tower are sinking–it's just that the rest of the campus is rising. At the rate of 11.2 inches a year.

Definition of "chutzpah": raising the price of an 80¢ hamburger. What is it that MacDonald's does that the Campus Center doesn't do?

Why do they turn on the lights in the new library every night? Maybe they don't want to impede any low-flying airplanes.

One of the themes of the novel Frankenstein was that you shouldn't be reluctant about destroying a monster you created. Maybe they should apply the same philosophy to Southwest. Or the new library. Or New York City.

Where's The Piano Tuner?

To The Editor:

I am a frustrated music lover. A good part of my free time is spent each day wandering from one building on the campus to the next, fruitlessly searching for a piano which is either in tune or at the very least in reasonable working condition. Alas! After 6 months, my quest has ended with an unhappy conclusion: there are no such instruments to be found. Certainly, I suppose one could break into Bowker Auditorium in the middle of the night and play the Steinway therein to one's heart's content, but is it really worth the trouble? It would be easier, I think, to keep the pianos we've been given to play in good condition.

There's nothing more degrading to a musician than to sit down to a piano and find nothing but the foulest of sounds emitting from the sounding board, that is, if the keys aren't stuck or frozen in place by some mysterious ailment only pianos seem to suffer. If such an ailment exists–and I know of no pianos on the campus, with the exception of the aforementioned Bowker treasure, that can be excluded from this condition–it would be best to call the doctor, better known to many as the piano tuner. Where is this elusive man? Does he exist on the UMass campus? Find him, and put him to work!

Standing Room Only

To The Editor:

I'm sure we all realize how difficult it is to raise funds for any cause around here, and the RSO organizations are as poor as everyone else, but why is it that whenever someone sponsors a movie on campus, they always have to oversell it? I know the name of the game is the almighty buck and that this is the consideration that should come before all else, but no matter where a person attempts to see a popular film on campus, whether in the Student Union Ballroom, Campus Center Auditorium, or as was the case last Saturday, Mahar Auditorium, the people in charge oversell it. I'm sure they are aware of the legal capacity of the structure, but I suppose the monetary gains overshadow whatever risks might be present.

It wouldn't bother me so much, but for the fact that there are always some enterprising "bright" individuals who either find extra chairs and block the aisles with them, or are content to obstruct them by merely sitting down wherever there is an empty space on the floor. Granted, these children will persist in doing this as long as they have paid their precious money, and are demonstrating their intelligence by such moves, but you'd think the promoters would show a little concern for something other than the pure financial benefits gleaned from their venture. They should show a little responsibility for their undertaking.

If there ever is a fire or other such problem in which people are injured through circumstances stemming from overcrowding, careless smoking, and aisle blockage, this page will be full of letters of condemnation. I'd just like to be the first to put in my "I told you so!!"

The Right To Live

To The Editor:

Once a person has been conceived, there are no absolute changes in the fact of its existence as an individual until it dies. Those who try to decide at what point in its life a person becomes human are just playing with words.

We can't decide it's all right to kill certain people because they are a burden to other people. If we give up the basis of any chance of people living in peace together.

For these reasons I believe abortions are wrong under any circumstances. And the Student Senate shouldn't give students' money to the campus chapter of WONAAC.

Team To Study Preschooler's TV Habits

By MARK VOGLER

A UMass Psychology professor has been awarded a $56,800 grant by the National Science Foundation to do research on determinants of pre-school children's attention to television.

Daniel R. Anderson, 28, of Fairfield Ave., Haydenville, said Friday night the grant is effective March 1 until August, 1975 and will enable he and graduate student Steven Levin, 28, of Belchertown to get a head start on their planned research for the next five years.

Anderson said the project will involve the study of television behavior of young children ranging from six months to five years. The two researchers will attempt to find out what children of this age span watch on television and what they enjoy viewing.

"We shall conduct a careful analysis on what kinds of things children watch out of a large variety of programs," Anderson "and we will also break down different kinds of television programs into attributes and components, and then determine what are the most efficient components in getting a child to watch TV."

According to Anderson, the research is aimed at acomplishing two goals. The major objective of the project is to aid producers in designing more appropriate programs for children. The researchers also would like to provide a basis for educating parents on children's TV habits.

"Right now, there's hardly any research available," Anderson said. "Young children spend a great deal of time watching TV-probably more time than they spend with their fathers. And nobody really knows what the good and bad effects are."

Anderson said the only previous research done in the area of children's television viewing was conducted by Children's TV Workshop with the research resulting in the creation of Sesame Street.

For Anderson's research, parents of pre-school children in Springfield will be solicited for their participation in the project, he said. The mother and child will come to the research facility-one located at Tobin Hall of the university and the other to be later established in Springfield.

The child will be video-taped watching the television set. From the tape, it will be determined when the child is watching and what is attracting his attention. The information would then be compiled in a computer, he explained.

"We know children like to watch cartoons, but we don't know what it is that they like about them," Anderson said. "We know they like to watch animals; but why? Is it because they move?

"We hope that the answers to these questions and others will help television in making constructive programs in the future.

Anderson earned his PhD in Psychology at Brown University and his bachelor's degree from the University of Wisconsin.

Gamma Gamma Sigma Collecting For CARE

Members of Gamma Sigma Sigma, the National Service Sorority, will be collecting for CARE this week, in benefit of those victims of Nicaraguan earthquake.

A table will be set up in the Campus Center from 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. up to this Friday, and there will also be canvassing in the dorms the entire week.

Managua, the capital city of Nicaragua, was virtually destroyed by the earthquake during the Christmas weekend of 1972. The quake left several thousand dead and an estimated 325,000 survivors, most of whom have left the city.

The CARE staffs located in the Latin American countries initiated action after the disaster struck. The needs of the survivors were assessed and arrangements were for shipments of food and other necessary supplies into the demolished area. Emergency camps were set up for providing food and medical care for the refugees.

Scorpio can be sensuous and these persons often have strong appetites—for food and love. Scorpio is secretive and, in 1973, will break from past: from patterns and emerge in a role featuring unique self expression. Scorpio can build from past ruins. Charlotte Lettis lapped the field twice on her way to winning the New England two mile title in the record time of 11:07. (Photo by Tom Derderian)

Lettis Wins Two Mile

Charlotte Lettis, UMass Junior, won the women's New England 2 mile title Saturday in the record time of 11:07 with a victory margin of well over two laps on Belmont's 10 to the mile indoor track.

Charlotte, who won the Region #1 (Northeast area) 2 mile in 11:21 at Burlington, Vermont 2 weeks ago, ran her personal best while running all alone leading from the start. Her time at the mile mark, 5:31, would have placed her 2nd in the mile run which she did not enter earlier in the meet.

Charlotte's teammate, on the local Sugarloaf Mt. A.C., Marianne Wilcox also a UMass student, placed third in the half mile event with a 2:35 clocking. Marianne only began training last fall.

Other members of the club ran in 4 x 2 lap relay and placed third but didn't count toward team scoring because two members were Junior high school age.

The Sugarloaf Mt. Club is actively looking for new members. To help women get started with track cross-country and long distance running are staging open practice sessions in Curry Hicks cage Wednesdays at 5:00. Charlotte and Marianne invite all University Women.

UCLA, NC State Top Poll

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

UCLA and North Carolina State, with similar 23-0 records, continued to set the 1-2 pace in The Associated Press' weekly major college basketball poll Monday as Memphis State provided the only major change in the Top Ten.

Memphis State clinched the Missouri Valley Conference title with victories over North Texas State, 93-88, and New Mexico State, 54-53, and moved from the No. 14 to the No. 10 spot in the ratings.

Knocked out of the Top Ten was Indiana despite the Hoosier's victories over conference rivals, Michigan State and Wisconsin. Indiana dropped from 10th to 12th.

UCLA, favored to win its seventh straight national collegiate title in the NCAA tournament next month, extended its winning streak to 68 games by beating Oregon 72-61 and Oregon State 73-67.

The Bruins collected 36 of 38 first-place votes from a panel of sports writers and broadcasters and maintained a strong grip on the No. 1 ranking with a total of 746 points.

North Carolina State was an almost unanimous choice for the runner-up spot, polling the two first place votes not given UCLA and taking 33 second-place votes and a vote for third. This gave the Wolfpack 686 points.

N.C. State, which continued its unbeaten streak by crushing Duke 74-50 and the North Carolina-Charlotte 100-64, is not on a collision course with UCLA because the team is under suspension for recruiting practices and is ineligible for the post-season tournaments.

There were a few ripples among the Top Ten teams, although the identity remained virtually unchanged.

Minnesota jumped from fourth to third, leap-frogging over Long Beach State, which lost to Los Angeles State 107-104. Providence, with three victories, moved from seventh to sixth, supplanting North Carolina, which lost to Miami of Ohio 102-92. Houston moved ahead of Maryland to eighth although both won two games.

One of the biggest drops was that of St. John's of New York, falling from 11th to 17th after losses to St. Joseph's of Pennsylvania and Notre Dame. Syracuse, No. 14, and South Carolina, No. 19, became new additions to the first 20. Alabama and Virginia Tech dropped out.

Ireland NE Champ At Heavy

pionship. They provided the evening's only overtime bout as they tied 5 all in regular time. Blom was doing all the shooting for takedowns but somehow managed to get takendown and he couldn't hold on to Gammon, either. He did reverse Gammon and escape a couple of times to even his side of the match. In the overtime, which was three one minute periods, Gammon had a takedown and escape to two escapes for Blom. The one that won it was in about the last twenty-five seconds of the bout.

At 158 was one of the surprises of the Tourney as Brown University captured it's only title with Canadian National AAU Champ Jim Miller besting Minuteman Steve Benson by virtue of four very nice takedowns. Miller proved to be strong on his feet but a less than excellent mat wrestler as Benson controlled him the entire second period but couldn't turn him over. The bout ended 8-7 Miller's favor.

The next bout at 167 saw the first of two defaults on the evening as Dartmouth's Darrald Gibson defaulted to Rhode Island's top seed Jim Urquhart. Gibson wasn't giving Urquhart much of a match due to an injury to the shoulder sustained an earlier match.

John Connolly from the U of M and defending 177 pound champ Stu Horowitz of the U of RI were the participants in the highest scoring match of the finals. It ended 19-10 and saw Horowitz successfully defend his title. Connolly had a lot of escapes and a takedown of his own, but Horowitz couldn't do anything wrong on his feet as he wiped Connolly with six or seven of his own.

The 190 pound final saw Jim Conterato of Dartmouth score six points and then stall the rest of the match as he and BU's John Stoll pushed each other for the most boring match of the evening. After the initial takedown and nearfall, two points for two escapes were all Conterato pulled out and he and Stoll could have been dancing the waltz if there had been music.

UMass' only other Champion was George Ireland who won his title by default from Brian Donnelly of Boston U. Donnelly was ahead 2-1 going into the second period and was on the bottom. Ireland really put the pressure on and Donnelly reinjured some torn ligaments in his knee and couldn't continue, George was really outstanding in his weight class as he had pinned all of his opponents up to the finals. He had a particularly quick one in :58 seconds, with a duck and trip, over Apothaker of Brown. George carries a 14-3 record with him to Seattle when he and Dave participate in the NCAA College Nationals on March 8, 9, and 10.

In freshman action in the New Englands UMass Frosh edged BU 63-53 for the team title and coincidentally the only two winners for the Frosh were also at 118 and Heavyweight. Steve Ruggeri at 118 and Charlie Klein at Heavy won the best of three in a round robin competition at their weights. Paul Rodriguez finished second at 126, Mike Ryan third at 142, and Bill Rich second at 190. Team physician Dr. George Snook defended his title as wrestling Man of the Year in New England as he received the award for outstanding service to wrestling.

Gambling Bill Opposed

By HOWARD WHITE
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP)—Spokesmen for professional sports—from racetracks to baseball and football—will accept a legislative committee's challenge Tuesday to explain why they oppose state-run sport betting.

The challenge has been thrown out by the Committee on Government Regulations, which has recommended that the state move into legalized gambling by operating both off-track betting and wagering intended to compete with the illegal "football card" sports wagering.

The House chairman of the committee; Rep. Robert B. Ambler, D-Weymouth, made the challenge clear last month when he invited the sports figures to testify.

Ambler's office said Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn has agreed to testify in person if current player negotiations don't interfere. Professional football will send National Football League Security Director Jack Danahy to speak for it.

And the world of gambling will be represented by officials of New York's off-track betting corporation as well as by "Jimmy The Greek" Snyder.

The bill filed by the committee following a study authorized last year would create a Public Wagering Commission which would supplant the present state lottery commission.

The new body could continue to run the lottery—which now nets some $30 million a year—but would also have a wagering division in charge of both off-track betting and sports wagering.

The committee estimates that as much as $90 million in new revenue could be raised by the expanded gambling activity— but cautions that its estimates could be way off base.

Based on reports of the volume of "football card" activity in Massachusetts, the committee estimated that as much as $60 million could be raised through year-round betting on all kinds of professional sporting events.

And based on estimates of the volume of illegal off-track betting now conducted, it guesses that between $22.5 million and $37.5 million could be raised through legal OTB.

If you think the Seminary is a place of study and meditation, you're right. But there is so much more.

As a Paulist you become involved from the start.

We were founded with the belief that each man has a place. Each man has a job. Sometimes, many jobs. And each contributes his own unique talents and is given the freedom and the support he needs to achieve his goals.

The Paulist is a man on the move. His mission is to people, particularly the people of North America. The issues and problems we face today—injustice, poverty, peace, war—must be the concern of the Church.

Wherever the Paulist student serves the Christian Community—in a parish or an inner city school, a youth center or a campus, or in communications, he is concerned. Involved. Right now.

When you commit yourself to the Paulists, it isn't a someday thing. It's today.

Icemen Edge Salem State, 5-4

By LARRY SINEWICZ

LYNN—Despite the loss of star goalie, Chick Rheault, the Massachusetts Minutemen escaped Lynn Arena last night with a 5-4 victory over stubborn Salem State.

It looked for awhile in the first period that Salem State might stage an upset against the Minutemen. Fahey and Boudreau drew blood early in the first period as the Vikings moved to a 2-0 lead. "Chico" Shea made it 2-1 on a shorthanded goal to give life to the floundering Minutemen.

Period II was spent shooting around Salem State goalie Vin Caporiccio, with UMass doing everything but scoring until Lonnie Avery took Don Lowe's pass from the left point and drilled it for a two-all tie.

At 2:43 into the third period, Bob Shilalie scored on a pass from Jim Lynch and Scott Stuart. This put UMass ahead for the first time in the game and things were finally looking up for the Minutemen. Only 37 seconds later, Jim Coleman went out for slashing and things were getting a little tight around goalie John Kiah. But the pucksters fought off the attack until they returned to full strength.

At 7:59, Don Lowe scored on assists from Don Riley and Steve Nims. UMass now seemed like the team that demolished their last two foes.

But the Vikings weren't through yet, as Matthews scored a very suspect goal that never seemed to reach the net. But the goal judge thought differently and it was allowed. The crowd of 1500 started to come alive, screaming for Salem State to score again.

At 12:17, UMass took to fighting and the Vikings made more than adequate foes. Coleman went to the box for five minutes and Matthews, for the Vikings, for two. The Salem State fans got into the fight and attacked Coleman in the penalty box. The UMass team rushed to his assistance, but Coleman and the Lynn police force were more than up for the assignment.

The Minutemen held their ground during the penalty and it looked as though they were going to kill the rest of the game with the passing that they had lacked earlier.

But Viking Griffen took things into his own hands and tied the game on an unassisted goal.

UMass was not to be denied, however, as Coleman took on the task of putting the pucksters ahead for good at 12:27. He was assisted by Riley and Lowe. Although the crowd cheered for further Viking goals, UMass held on and took a hard-fought 5-4 decision.

Chick Rheault, recently injured in a motorcycle accident, will not be making any saves like the one of Peter Erikson shown above. Erikson, too, was retired early due to an injury suffered in competition. Chick's bike hit an ice slick late Saturday night and it is reported that he dislocated his shoulder. He is resting in the infirmary. (Photo by Al Chapman)

Cage Fight for N.I.T.

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

Northeastern at 18-6, the surprise of Beantown, beset with similar hopes of competing in the National Invitational Tournament (NIT) as UMass, tangles with the Minutemen tonight in the Cage.

The Huskies, under rookie coach Jim Calhoun, were upset by defense-minded Fairleigh Dickinson (third in the nation in defense), 50-46 last Saturday. Before this, a seven game win streak had resulted in the Boston Globe publishing a story which gave NU a chance at a bid if they could win their last three games.

At the time Calhoun said this about deserving an NIT bid. "Yes, by all means." He continued, "Even more so if we win our last three games or maybe two of three."

Coach Jack Leaman said that the loss hurt NU's chances and that this "places them in the role of spoilers. A loss would hurt our chances."

Northeastern boasts a good sized front line running about 6'6, combined with two of the better guards in New England. 6'3 Mark Jellison is averaging close to 20 points a game and is considered by some to be a pro prospect.

John Clark is the other guard and he is given the credit for being the key to NU's success. Calhoun said this about his playmaker, "Take Clark who is a freshman from Pittsburgh. He gets his points and picks up about 11 assists a game."

The Huskies, besides beating Bates and St. Anselms, have also surprised Boston University, Harvard and New Hampshire. Against Assumption, they stayed with them until the final moments.

Northeastern over the year has stressed a defense-minded return-to-fundamentals squad, and this is once again true, with the Huskies ranked 11th in the country with its changing, basically man-to-man defense.

UMass played Northeastern last year and took a scrappy battle from the Huskies (62-61). At the time the NU reputation was that of pass, pass and pass again, and scores usually hovered around the half century mark.

The Minutemen over the past weekend clinched the Yankee Conference crown with wins over New Hampshire and Maine. This is the only major conference whose champion does not get an automatic bid to a national tournament. Coach Leaman said that winning the conference should qualify them for a bid, but that the selection Committee will probably wait to see the outcome of UMass' next two games (NU and Fordham).

Tournament fever at UMass began five years ago when a team captained by two (Peter Gayeska and Joe DiSarcina) who are just names to most students now, compiled a 17-7 record to leave Coach Leaman sitting and awaiting for a call which was not forthcoming.

The next year veteran Ray Ellerbrook, combined with an amazing soph called Julius E, to win 12 of their last 13 and the call came in while Leaman was away scouting for next year. A reputation for playing the eventual champ was born. Marquette managed to slip by with a six point victory and then, North Carolina the following year marked DR J's last collegiate appearance, with a trouncing not soon to be forgotten.

This year the wait by phone by Coach Leaman is back after a one year lapse. It all hinges on the last two games. Two wins would make things much easier, otherwise the chances will be diminished.

"We should be ready to play. It's a hell of a lot easier for a team to get read to play, if there is a chance of playing in a national tournament," said a happy coach back from his trip up north to win the Yankee Conference crown outright.

Pats Sign Cummings

Dick Cummings, former fullback of the 1972 Yankee Conference champion Minutemen football squad has signed a contract as a free agent with the New England Patriots football team of the American Football Conference according to Pat Horne, Public Relations Director of the Patriots.

The signing of Cummings represents the second member of the 1972 squad to have been contacted by the pro ranks. Paul Metallo is expected to sign with the Kansas City Chiefs, also of the AFC, when he reports to a meeting with Hank Stram in early March. Steve Schubert and Clarence Brooks are also waiting out possibilities.

Back From the North Country

From the Crossroads to the Motor Lodge–There were a few strange faces at Pat's (a beer 'n pizza joint in Orono, Me.) Saturday night. Some were round Irish and obviously excited. Some were black and contented and others bore resemblance to the fraternity rowdies at SAE who escaped arrest in one of the more spirited and courageous displays of sporting spirit ever witnessed at this school...But all the faces at Pat's had that paid for grin on the countenance...Titles are to be celebrated, but earned first...And we did both north of humanity this weekend past...

The most historic road trip in the history of UMass basketball is over...Thank God. When Paul Goerant introduces the Yankee Conference Champion Minutemen tonight at the Cage against NIT obstacle Northeastern, pause a bit...And then erupt. Although this will be four out of five for Jack Leaman, he'll treasure this one the most. What his kids had to endure at Maine could have been equated with the epitaph of a Hitchcock experience...Suddenly the resounding tumultuous roar that deafened Saturday night at the Black Bear Arena abruptly ended. And the title belong to Massachusetts...

Durham on Friday was a "let's get it out of the way" prelude to Saturday night at the "Pit"...Why would Sports Illustrated send a writer to Orono in December to feature the home court advantage? There's a homespun aroma that pervades the "Pit". But it didn't work against the Minutemen who played well enough to sidestep the ethic and beat the pompous Bears for the first time within the Conference ranks in a couple of years...

Orono is too lonely. Sectioned off with moose and caribou of the wild North, very few concerts come their way. Life is slow and less confining from Portland on up. The students have less environmental pressures and good, hard drugs to cope with...So they get into sports and, with no hockey team, the hoopsters, who can't win on the road, reign supreme in the wintertime...

They said the J.V.'s are household names on campus. They constantly play before sellouts. You have to get there that early for a seat unless the Mules of Colby bobsled into town for a duel. Against the Minutemen the doors were locked at 5:30, 2,000 were turned away, and by 4 o'clock four girls were there with their knitting for the night. They say that for four years now, they've been doing this sort of thing.

But there was some room for the Cowbell and the Faithful Fifty who went through hell to get there...And they shocked the throng that assembled early in the night to distribute their act. But the Maine fans have a discipline all their own. And although they're nice and straight, they can scare the hell out of you...You talk about creating pressure, come to Orono next season.

At the Pit they sing the National Anthem instead of listening to a Cage original, whether on your ass or not. At least four or five times, students stand and sing their school song during the game. They wave pennants, destroy officials, and just plain have a good time. But when Tom McLaughlin and his mates stood at the entrance and listened to the piercing shriek of "Welcome to the Pit" from the clamoring sellout horde, you knew you were here. And the carnival got underway...

But Billy Endicott had that tough, challenging look on his face when introduced to the Pit...Billy had that rugged playground look on his face, Al Skinner (Dr. A) had the game in his vein, Tommy "Toast" Gillams saved his best to the end, "Burkey" (Jim Burke) got serious come game time, and once again Tommy Mac used his left hand for key hoops to secure it...And back to Amherst we strolled with some headaches and a title when experts gave us a third and, at worst, a sixth place finish in the Conference...But with the Beanpot intact, the goal is the NIT and Northeastern at the Cage provides another clue to the riddle...

The guy at Pat's said he doesn't make much money anyway, but he enjoyed the company. The local northern police forces are relieved at this hour, but they placed a call to the N.Y.P.D. They're giving Metropolitan's Finest fair warning...

Barr: Team Effort

By JOHN BOCK

Coach Homer Barr called it "one of the finest team efforts we have ever had from a team." And it was. UMass had six men in the finals of the NEUWA Tournament and the rest of the team took thirds and wrapped up the title for the Minutemen.

Dave Amato iced a victory at 118 with a last second pin over Rich Adham of URI. For this outstanding performance and the wins over his other opponents Amato was named as the "Outstanding Wrestler of the tourney along with BU's Rick Freitas, the 134 pound champ.

In the finals at 126 were UMass' Larry Reynolds and URI's top seeded swifty Scott Pucino. This was to be the third meeting of the two this season with the victory in the first two going to Pucino. The match was probably the fastest moving of the tourney as both men were on each other like cats. But it was Pucino with his exceptional balance and riding ability that took the match and the crown with a 7-0 blanking of Reynolds.

The 134 pound bout saw Boston University's Rick Freitas destroy Rhode Island's Joe Savino 11-6. Freitas kept on shooting and shooting at Savino and pressing him so hard he gave up trying to set up his own moves and concentrated on keeping Freitas' from working, but to no avail. This was Savino's second loss in the finals of the New Englands and strangely enough he lost again to a Massachusetts State Champ from Lowell. (Last year it was UMass' Russ Chateauneuf that beat Savino in the finals. Chateauneuf and Freitas wrestled and won state titles together at Lowell).

At 142 Terrier routed a Ram as BU's Tom Kryzak decisioned Rhody's John Richard 4-1. Kryzak pretty much controlled the bout and Richard as he had a takedown, escape, and riding time to win the bout.

Cliff Blom of UMass and Greg Gammon of URI were the contestants for the 150 pound cham-

Residence Head Rent May Jump

By SHARON HUGHES

The Student Rents and Fees Committee voted last night 9-3 to recommend a $50 per month rent increase for Heads of Residence and a $20 per month rent increase for Resident Directors. Heads of Residence, who now receive a yearly salary, approximately $5,800, would pay $960 rent per year. Resident Directors would pay $450 rent per year. They now receive approximately $3500 yearly salary.

Other proposals to increase revenue are: no free dormitory rooms or reduced room rates; efforts to search for alternative sources of revenue; and selling free dormitory rooms for offices and/or classrooms.

There are 54 Resident Directors and Head of Residence employed by the University. For the last 7 years, their rent has remained at $30 per month although their salary has increased with cost-of-living expense raises. The majority of the committee agreed that the rent increase was "reasonable". Senator Joe Smith objected, "they do their job well and are available 24 hours a day." He suggested they both receive a pay increase.

The Committee reviewed the 29 recommendations proposed last Thursday to raise additional revenues and cut costs for the dormitory system. They voted 7-6 to recommend an outside consultant be hired at an estimated cost of $60,000-$90,000 to investigate the Housing Administration. Chuck Hampton, financial manager of Residence Hall, stated the consultant's purpose: "To find out if we can cut the cost in the management of the dormitory system without taking it out of the student's pocket. " Mike Gregory, committee chairperson, opposed the plan saying that the Housing Administration "hasn't been given enough time to solve its own problems" and the consultant's fee "is too much money."

Additionally, the Committee voted to recommend standard labor costs for Physical Plant personnel and relegate power to the Environmental Concerns Committee to receive complaints and suggestions from both students and janitors. E.C.C. would "monitor and advise the Physical Plant."

Unanimously passed was a motion to limit all area budget increases by 10%. The move will save $60,000 in the fiscal 1974 requested budget. Attached to the motion was the provision that the Rents and Fees Committee will be willing to consider a larger budget for Sylvan Area; if it can be substantiated. Sylvan requested a $25,000 minimal budget (a 30% increase).

Little debate followed the suggestion that the State should increase its payment to the University. Passed were the proposals that the "State be responsible for maintenance of residence area vehicles. The State be responsible for security department expenditures and the State pay the expenses of the Office of Environmental Concerns."

In a further attempt to save money, they voted to allow "no expenditures for educational programs or supplies from rent monies: "the combining of Resident Hall's Trust Funds (RHTF)and UMass Building Authority (UMBA) funds and that RHTF receive interest on its Furniture Reserve Accounts. The Committee dropped a proposal to put a premium on single Dormitory rooms by a 7-4 vote.

In further business, the committee passed a bill "To urge the Athletic Council to institute a program lasting a maximum of 5 years, at the end of which all present University inter-collegiate sports other than those on a club or intra-mural level, shall cease to all be funded through the Student Athletic Fee and the Student Athletic Fee should be reduced accordingly."

U.S. Demands Release Of POWs

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP)—The United States demanded Tuesday night that North Vietnam and the Viet Cong honor the Vietnam peace agreement and stop stalling in the release of American prisoners of war.

A spokesman for the U.S. delegation to the four-party Joint Military Commission said there is a standing offer to provide the North Vietnamese with an American airplane to go to Hanoi to pick up a list of American prisoners due to be released in the second full group.

As an alternative, he added, the United States is prepared to accept the second batch or prisoners without prior presentation of a list or to receive the list when the POWs are returned.

The United States had anticipated that roughly 140 more U.S. prisoners would be released about Tuesday. But the North Vietnamese said the second regular turnover will be postponed until resolution of their complaints over alleged violations of the peace agreement by the United States and South Vietnam.

American officials in Saigon and Paris said privately they expected the delay to be temporary. U.S. officials in Saigon said they viewed the North Vietnamese move as a propaganda ploy aimed at portraying Hanoi as an advocate of peace before an international conference in Paris while depicting Saigon and the United States as the chief violators of the cease-fire.

The White House spokesman said in Washington that President Nixon has asked Secretary of State William P. Rogers to demand an explanation of the delay from North Vietnamese officials "as a matter of the highest priority."

Rogers and the North Vietnamese foreign minister are in Paris for the international conference called to seal the Vietnam peace agreement. Conference sources said they and the other 10 governments represented at the parley agreed Tuesday on a system for reconvening to deal with any peace violations.

The Hanoi regime's chief spokesman in Saigon, Bui Tin, told newsmen the decision to hold up the next scheduled prisoner release was taken "reluctantly."

"But we want to see some decisive steps taken by the other side toward of the peace," he added. "We have turned from a military to a peaceful fight. We want to turn over a new lead in our relations with the Americans."

North Vietnam and the Viet Cong released 143 U.S. military and civilian prisoners in North and South Vietnam and Laos.

The peace agreement signed in Paris Jan. 27 says only that American prisoners will be released by March 28, at a rate matching the rate of U.S. troop withdrawals. But Kissinger indicated he expected the POWs to be released in four roughly equal groups at two-week intervals.

It was that expectation, coupled with U.S. troop withdrawals now at the halfway point, that led Americans to anticipate release of the second batch of prisoners around Tuesday.

Differences on the POWs became public when Tin told Saigon newsmen there will be no further release of American prisoners until several points in the peace agreement are honored by the United States and South Vietnam.

Tin indicated Hanoi particularly wanted release of civilian prisoners held by the Saigon regime and an end to harassment of the Viet Cong and North Vietnamese delegations to the Joint Military Commission.

The U.S. mission in Saigon and Nixon's press secretary in Washington rejected Tin's linking the return of American POWs to issues other than the withdrawal of U.S. troops.

"The agreement and protocols link the return of POWs only to the withdrawal of U.S. and free world forces," a four-page U.S. statement in Saigon said.

"The U.S. delegation calls on the Democratic Republic of Vietnam and the Provisional Revolutionary Government delegations to implement the obligations they have accepted in the Paris agreement and the protocols and to take immediate action to fulfill their commitment to release POWs in accordance with the withdrawal rate of U.S. and free world forces."

A Radio Hanoi broadcast detailing the North Vietnamese complaints, presumably underpinning their refusal to go ahead with the prisoner release, also charged the United States with delaying the removal of U.S. mines from North Vietnamese harbors.

But a Pentagon spokesman said in Washington the Navy is ready to begin minesweeping in Haiphong. He said the North Vietnamese themselves asked for the delay to give them time to notify fishermen.

McCarthy Says Aid Is Most Important

By MARK VOGLER

Boston—Patrick E. McCarthy, Massachusetts chancellor of the Board of Higher Education said Tuesday that there exists a "financial calamity" with regard to student aid in the state and that tuition is not the "real burden" of the costs of higher education.

McCarthy spoke in reaction to the general media coverage of the proposed tuition hike by the Board Friday in which he said that the press "errored" in their emphasis.

"I think that most of the papers and the wire services missed the point by putting the tuition hike ahead of the issue of financial aid when it should have been the other way around," he said.

The chancellor explained that "many papers not only focused in on the wrong aspect of the entire issue, but in some cases, inserted their own figures for the proposed hike."

He pointed to the case of the Associated Press where it was reported that an increase in tuition would mean that students would have to pay from 40 to 60 percent of the actual tuition costs.

McCarthy confirmed the figures of 30 to 40 percent of actual tuition costs to be an accurate projection by the Board should the proposal

March 1: Name Your Poison

By MARY KEANE

Once upon a time when thirst was first in a person's mind, the local watering hole remained a dry gulch to his parched, but underage palate. However, this will all change this Wednesday at midnight. Lawmakers in Boston have agreed to open the doors of Amherst area bars and liquor stores to eighteen-year-olds.

Among the young, the word seems to be hail; hallelujah and give me six more beers. Rumors concerning preparations for D-day are plentiful among area bartenders.

Beer will be flowing at three Campus Center locations. The Blue Wall will operate as usual and the Thursday night coffeehouse will move to the Top of the Campus, while the Blue Wall will feature a band. The Hatch will present a band and a new bar. All these relocations and innovations are temporary, and final decisions about campus drinking spots will not be made until the volume of new business can be determined.

Bartenders at the Blue Wall expect to be railroaded by an onslaught of thirst. Bouncers expect some trouble, but aren't worried about handling the crowd.

Sales of TOC (Top of the Campus) cards have been brisk, with an estimated twelve hundred new I.D.'s applied for by 3 p.m. Monday.

Off-campus preparations are less elaborate. At the Rusty Scupper, manager Fred Tippett expressed various concerns about the new age. He sees it as beneficial to diners who formerly could not order wine with a meal, but is concerned about inexperienced drinkers who might be unaware of their limitations. This is a legal problem for proprietors as a bar might be implicated in libel for accidents occurring after an intoxicated drinker leaves. Tippett will insist on two I.D.'s at first and will caution his bartenders about limits. Personally, he is in favor of the age change and feels most 18-year-olds will readily adjust to drinking in public.

The English Pub on East Pleasant St. anticipates a significant increase in business. Paul Brown, a bartender at the Pub, can't see how the Pub will accommodate any more people than it already does on a Friday night. Disturbances are not expected, as Brown explained: "It's not age but behavior that defines a person."

Mike's usually crowded bar expects to continue its hectic pace. Geoff Fowler, bartender, feels that on Mike's regular big nights--Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday--no more people could possibly crowd in than already do. However, the other nights of the week might see more glass-raising than usual, he said.

Quicksilver is definitely too small to survive a barrage of new drinkers, Aggie, the bartender, feels things will be "a pain in the ass" for awhile but then will level off.

The Drake on Amity St. distinguishes itself as the "place that made Amherst famous." With the Village Inn upstairs, and the Rathskellar downstairs, the Drake stands a good chance of picking up a lot more business. One of the Upstair's bartenders, Ray Holmes, welcomes the new age, feeling that people old enough to vote, wage war, and marry, are responsible enough to take somewine along.

The Rusty Nail presented mixed reactions to the new law. Barman Jeff Feeley expects some disruption due to ignorance of barroom behavior. Amy Blake, barmaid at the Nail, worries that new drinkers won't tip as much as their older counterparts.

The Valley Lounge in Sunderland is anticipating new arrivals by offering live music for dancing. Owner Don DiRusso expects to see a fair share of UMies at his place.

Barsellotti's caters to local workers and isn't expecting much change. Owner Mantovani explained that he runs a sports-oriented bar and expects that 'only a few' kids may stop in out of curiosity.

At least 10,000 new drinkers will soon be able to celebrate their "unbirthdays." Area drinking spots will be waiting to celebrate along with them.

A cool brew at the Top of the Campus, like this one, will be available for thousands of more UMass students when the drinking age goes down to 18 at midnight tonight. Area bartenders and tavern owners are looking forward to the change.

Students To Decide SGA Election Procedure

By BARBARA VOORHEES
SGA President

To retain or change the present procedure of electing the president of the Student Government Association will be the question of a referendum to be presented to the student body on Wednesday, March 7.

In a change in student governmental structure last spring, the president of the Student Senate became the president of the SGA, an office which deals with all student government affairs at the University rather than with Student Senate affairs only.

Formerly, the Student Senate president was elected by members of the Senate.

Student Senator Barry Cohen submitted a bill at the February 14 Senate meeting proposing that the SGA president be elected by an electoral college. Half of this electoral college would be made up of student senators; the other half, members of area governments.

In another bill, Student Senator Bill Abbott proposed that the SGA president be elected by popular vote of the entire student body.

The Senate as a whole took the position that the students themselves should decide how the president is elected.

The referendum, which will be prepared and presented by Student Senator Tom Merluzzi and Steve Barbanel, members of the Governmental Affairs Committee, will be voted on in all dorms. The Duke Room in the Student Union will be used for commuter voting.

Students will vote on whether the SGA president will be elected by the Student Senate, by an electoral college or by the student body.

become effective.

"Financial aid needs to vastly enlarge in order to address itself to the real problem," he said. "I think it's important to understand that tuition is only a portion of the total costs which student aid in the state must be directed at."

According to McCarthy, there are to elements absolutely necessary in order for sufficient financial aid to be provided in the state.

"The needy students in the state must be guaranteed access to the aid and you have to provide choice for the public and private central position as representing the public interest—the students in this case." It was voted 8 to 2 in favor of a resolution that a tuition hike be in order "providing that the Legislature can allocate the adequate funds for financial aid."

He said the Board sees itself as "looking in two directions at once."

"Our first priority is to ask the Legislature and the Governor to examine the nature and scale of the financial problem.

If and only when the financial aid has been designed to adequately appropriate the educational costs, the Board looks in the other direction, "Now that the financial aid problems have been solved to provide both access and choice to the students and the Commonwealth, you should realistically raise your level of tuition."

McCarthy said that the Legislature not only has the means to appropriate money to alleviate the financial aid problem in Massachusetts for institutions of higher learning, but "they must, since the financial aid-tuition relationship is of a colossal proportion."

According to McCarthy, there is at least a $30-million deficit for financial aid in Massachusetts. He indicated that the situation stands a chance of becoming more of a "crisis" with Nixon's budget cuts which are expected to chop off 10 to 15-million dollars in federally funded financial aid.

Tobin Hall Fire Investigated

The fire which caused an estimated $120,000 damage to rooms and a computer in Tobin Hall at the end of January is "under investigation" by the state fire marshall's office, a spokesman said Tuesday.

The spokesman said that the investigation was referred to the state office on February 15, after Amherst Fire Chief John T. Doherty could find no official cause for the blaze.

The state office said that a report would "probably be issued in late March.

The Arthur D. Little, Inc., and School of Business Administration survey of students, faculty, and other University members is well underway. Those who have received questionnaires and those who are being contacted for interviews are urged to cooperate.

New Funding Standards Passed

By BRIAN COYNE

The Student Senate Budget Committee last night recommended a new set of funding criteria for student groups and approved the budget proposals from SWAP, Coalition for Environmental Control (CEQ) and WTOY.

The funding criteria recommended would restrict funding to groups meeting the following requirements: "Mass media unique in scope to the student body as whole without subscription cost; a unique service vital to interest of the undergraduate populace; a unique group whose prime purpose is to increase the educational scope of undergraduate population, while providing vital service to community."

A group would not be eligible for funding if it is primarily athletic, political, social, cultural, religious or associated with an academic department.

The document will be presented to the Student Senate tonight for final approval, according to committee chairperson Paul Doran. He added that the criteria would only apply for one year.

WTOY came before the committee with an original budget request totalling over $54,000. The committee slashed it to $11,900. Doran said in defense of the committee's cuts, "I don't think we should be funding a television studio." He went on to say that he did not believe there was enough student interest to warrant such an increase in the budget.

Representatives from WTOY said that there is indeed a large demand from students for their equipment and felt it justified expansion.

Included among their requests for new equipment were studio cameras, editing decks, portable cameras and a mini-studio. The studio request was refused and the other equipment was approved in smaller quantities. Salaries for club officers and a technician were asked for, but refused.

The $11,900 budget grant represented a cut of approximately $5,000.

Final approval of the budget must come from the senate.

CEQ took a $300 decrease from last year's budget this year. Their budget for '73-74 will be $5330. With that money they consider purchasing glass recycling equipment and educational films.

The group protested that their allotment for speakers was not sufficient for the type of program they want to run. Doran said that the speaker allocation category is one that has been greatly abused in the past and would like to see it decreased wherever possible.

SWAP's budget was approved at $8585. Most of their budget goes toward their annual conference. Next year, the number of students attending the conference will be increased from 90 to 100 students.

Student Run Dorms Or Heads Of Residence?

By CAROL KENNEDY

Dorms at the University of Massachusetts were first given House Parents because they were considered homes away from home. The Head of Resident came about because he was to provide the security of one's parents at school.

Janet Kaufman is a member of the Student Senate who has become interested in an alternative to the Head of Resident. She feels that now as each dorm has grown in size and become increasingly more impersonal the function of Head of Resident has in many cases dwindled to a mechanical one of handing out keys or simply "being there."

She adds that if students feel that their House Parents are not serving the purpose for which they were intended, they might feel it would be better if someone with whom they could more identify were given this position.

According to the Area Director's Office in Southwest, the procedure for changing to a student-run dorm is as follows. There would first have to be a general concensus in the house. Either at a dorm meeting or in floor to floor discussions the pros and cons would be discussed. If the majority decided it was a desirable change, committees would be formed to 1) provide a justification for the change and 2) form a workable proposal as to how the government should be run.

The next step is negotiation with the administration through the Area Director's Office. There are certain University rulings which must be incorporated into the proposal but if given approval the dorm is free to go ahead. Usually the change is made when a Head of Residence decides to leave for personal reasons but when the opportunity does arise funds are available which would make this a paying job. Positions are appointed on an election process held within the dorm.

Miss Kaufman said that some dorms which are presently student-run are: Coolidge-Upper, John Adams-Upper, T-5 (John Adams Middle and Lower), Pierpont, Cance, and Moore House. She cited reasons why dorms might prefer this change. For instance, T-5 was formed because its residents felt alienated and the need for more student responsibility within the dormitory. They have run into some small difficulties but feel that "the new spirit" and "active participation" overtaking the dorm has compensated for the system's short-comings.

Although Miss Kaufman does not feel this proposal is feasible for every dorm, she does feel that those who are dissatisfied with the traditional dorm should be aware of the alternative—the Student-run dorm.

British Port Strike A "Smugglers Dream"

By DONALD FORBES
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP)—Employes at air and sea ports joined other civil servants in a 24-hour strike Tuesday, turning Britain temporarily into the world's biggest customs-free haven and a smuggler's dream.

Then as the 280,000 customs officers and civil servants ended theyir daylong antigovernment action, train drivers began a 24-hour walkout that brought the nation's railroads to a standstill.

The strike at ports of entry caused chaos in transportation, suspended baggage inspection and made it possible for a contraband field day. Scores of flights were grounded and thousands of travelers were stranded.

At midnight, two hours after that nationwide shutdown ended, 29,000 railmen began their strike, paralyzing passenger and freight services.

Half of London's subway trains also were expected to be halted. But ferries run by the state-owned railroad system were expected to operate to Europe and Ireland.

Most Of OEO Funded For '73

WASHINGTON (AP)—The acting director of the Office of Economic Opportunity said today most antipoverty programs, except for community action, can expect to continue receiving federal funds for the rest of the year.

Howard Phillips, testifying before a House subcommittee, said "a failure of communication" had led to a mistaken belief that the administration was eliminating antipoverty programs wholesale.

Only the locally based community action programs, which receive one-third of their support from the OEO, will have their federal funds cut off as of June 30, he said.

"As of March 1, when the current 30-day freeze ends" Phillips said, "we are going back to the normal funding process. In some cases this will be 12 months, in some cases less, but the general funding pattern will be 12 months."

Central Council Discusses Paper

By SHELLEY BAKST

The second meeting of the Central Area Council since the election of new officers was held on Monday night. The results of the election were as follows: Andy Pyenson-President, Tim O'Brien-Vice President and Secretary, and Missy Ahern-Treasurer.

Several topics were discussed at Monday night's meeting including: more publicity of Council to area residents, upcoming events, the formation of a student council in conjunction with Campus Security, the newly proposed constitution, subcommittee of area dorm president, formation of a separate fund for area newspaper, and formation of committee to review validity of freshman orientation.

The Council Represenative from Brooks House said that the area residents are not well informed about the activities of the Council.

All Central Area Residents are welcomed to meetings of the Council which are held Monday at 7 p.m. in the Baker Basement. Area residents, regardless of whether or not they are voting members, may voice their opinions and may request money for projects such as coffee houses, concerts, movies and dances which are opened to the area. Any area resident may also participate in any of the subcommittees of the Council such as the Program Committee, Welfare Committee, Constitution Committee, and Budget Committee. Those interested may contact Tim O'Brien in 434 Baker House, 6-6165.

The following events are being sponsored by the Central Area Council: (1) Brook's Coffee House Friday, March 2nd, at 8 p.m. (2) Dance in Franklin Dining Commons with Chapel on March 3rd at 9 p.m. (3) Robert Ruff, Jazz Poet, on April 6th.

Next week the Council will vote on the nwly revised Constitution and will then present it to the area dorms for approval.

Intra-dorm communications within the Area are presently being sought by the Council. A subcommittee of the area's dorm president's is presently being formed in the hope of uniting the area.

A proposal to set up a separate account for the area newspaper in order that they may work independently of the Council way passed at the meeting.

Questions were raised as to whether the paper was serving the area and whether most of the residents desire the publication. It was explained that since the money has already been allocated for this semester, it will be used. However, before funding for next year is decided, the validity of the paper will be reviewed and opinions of area residents will be considered more carefully than in the past.

Student Control Proposed For Freshmen Orientation

By MARK CITRON

A proposal to give students control over the Summer Counseling program for freshmen highlighted discussion at last night's meeting of the Student Senate Academic Affairs Committee meeting. The proposal would give students control over the program which is currently administered by the University but, according to Nick Apostola, Academic Affairs Committee Chairperson, is totally financed by student funds.

The purpose of the proposal is to reach the newcomer on a personal level and educate him on university structure and alternatives. Chris Roach, Chairperson of the Committee on Summer Counseling felt the major faults of the present program are "lack of small group identity" and that "students are not properly informed about alternatives." Nick Apostola called the present program "official propaganda" and that "bad information" was given out during summer counseling.

The Student Senate will act tonight on the report. Vice-Chancellor Gage will make the final decision on the proposal, and the members of Academic Affairs Committee felt that most problems will be encountered in the university clearing the program.

Sarah Hamilton, director of New Student Programs, was termed by Nick Apostola as "incompetent . . . paranoid" and "petrified" by the new proposals. Ms. Hamilton felt the study "good", but said that some points are "not realistic". Ms. Hamilton also said there is "less conflict than agreement", but added that the administration's purposes were "narrower" than the new proposals. Chris Roach expressed the fear that the university administration would kill the proposal on cost vactors, but said that at present there is "no conception on how much it (the program) will cost".

Apostola stated that the program would "cost no more" than present programs.

The proposal recommends the review of the student counselling program and the development of a semester course of counsellor "internship training". Members of the committee hoped that besides credit, students selected to participate in the summer counseling program would receive exclusion of semester costs or equivalent remuneration.

Members of the Academic Affairs Committee participated (without counselor's knowledge) in last summer's freshman counseling with administration approval. Their findings, along with a questionnaire distributed to participants in the program, helped form many of the recommendations. These include —a pre-counseling mailing of much of the literature, including a comic-book format of the General Information Guide

—a more open attitude (in counseling) towards official and unofficial campus activities

—more "reasonable . . . rules and regulations" of the summer sessions

—establishment of a student operated committee for the selection of summer counselors.

POWs:

Washington Takes Firm Stand

By FRANK CORMIER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-The White House, taking a stiff posture against delaying the second-round release of American prisoners of war, told Hanoi Tuesday it wants some 120 more U.S. POWs set free immediately.

Press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler accused Hanoi of violating a prisoner agreement with Washington. He said President Nixon had instructed Secretary of State William P. Rogers, attending a multination on Vietnam in Paris, to take up the matter with "the other side" on a most urgent basis.

The second batch of American POWs had been expected to be released at least a day ago but the trasnfer was delayed by North Vietnam.

Arguing that Hanoi has no choice but to set them free if it is to live up to its signed agreement, Ziegler said:

"It is now time for the other side immediately to release the next group of United States prisoners of war...'

Asked how many prisoners should be returned in the second round, Ziegler cited the figure 120 but stressed he was using unofficial statistics.

In Paris, Rogers interrupted all Vietnam conference activities and sought an appointment with North Vietnam foreign minister Nguyen Duy Trinh, to seek clarification for the delay in release of POWs.

Ziegler, in accusing Hanoi of a show of bad faith, said:

"...The release of American prisoners is an unconditional obligation of the cease-fire agreement. The agreement clearly states that these prisoners of war are to be released at a rate no slower than the rate of troop withdrawals of U.S. and allied forces. We have now withdrawn over half of our forces."

Asked if the United States might slow down the withdrawal pace, Ziegler suggested Nixon will continue to "scrupulously observe" American obligations. However, other White House sources said it was possible the American pullout from South Vietnam might be slowed or halted if the prisoners are not quickly released.

Ziegler emphasized another point, too:

"...The United States would not accept, during the negotiations, and will not accept now, the linking of release of American prisoners to any other aspect of the agreement other than the rate of withdrawal.

Viet Talks Shaky

By ARTHUR L. GAVSHON
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP)-Disputes over a U.N. role and North Vietnam's halt in the release of American war prisoners imperiled the international Vietnam peace conference Tuesday. Secretary of State William P. Rogers suspended all his conference activities.

The disputes broke out after a morning in which the United States and Hanoi reported they had reached agreement on one important aspect of the 13-party meeting here to seal the Vietnam peace agreements signed a month ago.

At the same time the work of conference drafting experts also came to a halt because of a refusal of Communist delegates to sit down with representatives of the United Nations.

These developments came as North Vietnam and the United States traded bitter charges over breaches of the uneasy cease-fire deal signed in Paris on Jan. 27.

Rogers sought an urgent meeting with Foreign Minister Nguyen Duy Trinh of North Vietnam in order to have the intentions of the Hanoi government clarified over the prisoner release program.

Rogers was under President Nixon's orders to shelve all other conference business until the issue is resolved with Trinh.

In Saigon earlier the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong authorities on the Joint Military Commission announced their governments' decision to quit freeing the prisoners.

At once this injected an atmosphere of concern, if not of crisis, into the conference proceedings here.

Robert J. McCloskey, U.S. spokesman, told newsmen the Washington-Hanoi peace agreements had stated specifically that the release of prisoners must proceed unconditionally.

Rejecting Hanoi's charges that Americans are breaching the cease-fire, McCloskey returned the fire with an accusation of his own:

"We have continuing evidence of gross violations by the Communist side, including the infiltration of several thousand North Vietnamese troops since Jan. 28 and the introduction of military equipment including 85mm artillery, trucks and other heavy equipment."

It seemed clear the timetable of the conference now stands endangered

McCloskey was asked if the prisoner issue could break up the talks.

"We did not come to Paris to see the conference fail," he replied. "We hope we can settle the question of the prisoners in talks with the North Vietnamese here."

Until the prisoner storm burst, the conferees here had been making good progress.

On the second day of the talks North Vietnamese and U.S. spokesmen reported their delegations had reached a wide measure of accord in terms of the planned declaration.

Two compromises emerg

Two compromises emerged. One provides for new international talks if the Vietnam peace is threatened. The other provides for the development of a link between the International Commission of Control and Supervision and the conference itself.

Atty. To Claim No Ellsberg Crime

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press WRITER

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A defense attorney, opening the defense case in the Pentagon papers trial, told jurors Tuesday that Daniel Ellsberg and Anthony Russo will not seek to prove that they had the right motives for committing crimes, but rather will stress that no crimes were committed.

Attorney Leonard Weinglass, delivering his opening statement in behalf of Russo, said: "The government in bringing this prosecution is attempting to bend and distort the laws."

He said the defendants will prove that espionage, conspiracy and theft statutes currently in law books do not cover the act which Ellsberg and Russo are alleged to have committed.

Weinglass concluded his opening statement by revealing to jurors that Russo would take the stand in his own defense and that witnesses would include members of Congress who sought to gain access to the Pentagon Papers in 1969.

The defense then called as its first witness retired Rear Adm. Gene LaRocque, now director of the privately funded Center for Defense Information in Washington, D.C.

"The defense will present evidence," Weinglass told jurors, "not to prove that a crime has been committed which you should excuse because you agree with the motives. Our case rather will be that no crime occurred."

Weinglass told jurors the defense case will prove that the Pentagon Papers had no relation to national defense when they were copied in 1969 or any time thereafter.

Court Hits Discrimination

By VERNON A. GUIDRY JR.
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Hitting at segregation in private recreation facilities, the Supreme Court Tuesday denied a whites-only policy to a suburban swim club that gave preferred status to nearby residents.

The unanimous decision expanded a 1969 ruling that a black family that buys or rents a home in a subdivision must be allowed to use recreational facilities that come with the property.

Membership in the Wheaton-Haven Recreation Association-subject of Tuesday's ruling-was not automatically conferred upon neighborhood residents but, the court noted, residents within a three-quarter mile radius were given preference in membership and this conveyed a valuable property right to writes that was denied blacks.

The association's swimming pool is located in well-to-do Montgomery County, Md., a suburb of Washington. Dr. Henry C. Press, a radiologist at Howard University Medical School here, and his wife were denied membership because of their race even though they lived within the preference area.

Also, in 1968, a white couple with membership in the association, Mr. and Mrs. Murray Tillman, was prevented from bringing a house guest, Mrs. Grace Rosner, to the pool.

They joined in a suit against the association seeking a total of $30,000 in damages. The status of their attack on the guest policy of the association remains less clear than that of the membership.

Just as the association has no exemption from the 1886 Civil Rights Law barring discrimination in property rights, Justice Harry Blackman said there was no exemption under the 1964 Civil Rights Act barring discrimination in public accommodation.

Governors Hit Nixon's Budget Cuts

By DON McLEOD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Showing more harmony than they have enjoyed in years, Democratic governors and senators Tuesday accused President Nixon of destroying his own revenue-sharing program and state and local budgets.

Georgia Gov. Jimmy Carter disclosed his state is considering a Supreme Court challenge to Nixon's impoundment of federal funds intended for state and local projects.

Sen. Walter F. Mondale, D-Minn., testifying before the Senate Intergovernmental Relations subcommittee, suggested that Congress respond with a counter-impoundment of the money Nixon does want to spend.

"If they won't obey the law for the farm programs," Mondale said, "then I think we ought to impound the money for the Defense Department."

The President has impounded more than $8 billion appropriated by Congress for assistance to the states for social programs. He is holding up--by refusing to use contract authority--another $6 billion.

Democrats were virtually unanimous in their objection to the loss of federal grant money to the quickness with which it is being cut off in testimony before the sucommittee.

"What you've built up over forty years, you're expecting us to pick up in four months," said Kentucky Gov. Wendell Ford.

The governors complained that the withdrawal of federal money is going to make it difficult to meet their own state budgets and will force rises in state taxes.

Ford said the President's argument that his budget seeks to avoid a tax increase is "perhaps the most deceptive of the states objectives of a proposed budget."

Ford said Nixon "is shifting the federal deficit to states while increasing the costs of states to subsidize the rest of his budget."

Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, subcommittee chairman and a long-time supporter of revenue-sharing, said Nixon "has lost some credibility in his commitment to revenue-sharing by the actions he has taken."

"I'm going to have to sell special revenue-sharing now," Muskie said.

The liveliest exchanges of the session came between Muskie and Virginia Gov. Linwood Holton, a Republican and a principal voice for the President's revenue-sharing proposals.

"The Congress should examine its own responsibilities and, if it did, the present approach by the administration would be unnecessary," Holton said. "The President's patience has run out."

The administration has characterized the struggle with Congress as an effort to effect economies despite continued spending by the lawmakers. Democrats in Congress have accused Nixon of making the cuts in needed domestic programs.

"Because he didn't have his way, is he going to put and say, 'I'm going to end it unilaterally?'"

"No, he's pounding his fist and saying, "Something's got to be done, boys,'" Holton replied.

"Congress can pound its fist, too," Muskie said with a heavy thump on the desk. "That's no damn way, governor."

Defending federall financed social programs, Muskie said, "This notion that all these programs have failed is just not supported by the testimony we've heard here.

"Why can't we engage in a process which salvages that which is good at the same time we eliminate that which is bad? Muskie asked.

Philadelphia School Strike Settled

By LEE LINDER
Associated Press Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Mayor Frank Rizzo announced Tuesday settlement in the eight-week-old strike by public school teachers with tentative agreement on a new four-year contract hammered out by President Nixon's top labor troubleshooter.

Rizzo said the $68.6 million package could be paid without any tax increase. Terms were not immediately disclosed.

The announcement apparently scuttled labor plans for a general strike Wednesday to support the embattled teachers by shutting down business and transportation in the city.

The strike was marked by the jailing of two union leaders, the arrest of 790 pickets, the resignation of the school board president, and a $10,000-a-day fine on the Philadelphia Federation of Teachers which has mounted to $380,000.

The action has cost most of Philadelphia's 250,000 public school children 48 days of education, or more than a fourth of the 187 days they are supposed to spend in their classrooms in the September-to-June year.

It was the nation's second longest school strike. The longest was in 1970 in Newark, N.J., where teachers were out 11 weeks.

W.J. Usery, Jr., the assistant labor secretary recently nominated by Nixon to head the U.S. Mediation and Conciliation Service, came to Philadelphia last weekend--and immediately launched marathon bargaining talks.

One session went 31 hours before ending Sunday night. Usery brought both sides together again Monday afternoon and 23 hours later, with time out only for meals, the settlement was reached.

Chief issues were wages, fringe benefits including hospitalization, working conditions, a longer high school teaching day, class size and a school board effort to eliminate around 300 teaching positions through attrition.

Bargaining for a new contract to replace the pact that expired last September began 19 months ago.

The city has 13,000 teachers, with 11,000 of them PFT members. Teachers with bachelors' degrees start at $8,900, earning $14,380 after 11 years. A few, with advanced degrees, make up to $17,000.

U.N. To Investigate Libyan Airline Crash

By GENE KRAMER
Associated Press Writer

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP)—The U.N. aviation agency agreed Tuesday to look into Israel's shooting down of a Libyan airliner last week, and Arab delegates proposed a resolution condemning Israel action in the tragedy.

Egypt's call for a debate won quick agreement at the opening session of a four-day assembly of the International Civil Aviation Organization.

One hundred and six persons perished when the ietliner was downed by Israeli warplanes Feb. 21 in the occupied Sinai Desert.

Arab delegates circulated a draft resolution in which the worldwide air traffic agency would condemn Israel for the shooting and at the same time order an immediate fact-finding investigation.

Israel agreed to a "calm and sober" investigation. But controversy was as debated Wednesday.

The United States and several other Western countries were trying to temper the wording on condemnation to avoid further aggravating the Middle East conflict. But countries critical of Israel have a commanding majority in the assembly.

Officials said 110 of the agency's 125 member nations were participating in the assembly.

Investigation rather than condemnation was stressed in a decision on the crash by another organization, the International Federation of Airline Pilots Associations. The London-based group asked the U.N. agency to make an impartial investigation aimed at recommending ways to avert future disasters.

In Jerusalem, Foreign Minister Abba Eban of Israel said the pilot group had adopted "a constructive resolution . . . with no hostile implications for Israel."

Eban told Israel's parliament that foreign comment and editorials, initially hostile toward Israel, were turning toward proposals to prevent similar incidents. He said Israel still hopes Arab governments will agree on establishing a "hot line" with Israel, a proposal Egypt has rejected.

Egypt: Fight Or Surrender

CAIRO (AP) — President Anwar Sadat said Tuesday Egypt has no alternatives but to carry arms against Israel or surrender.

"I tell you frankly, I am not the proper man for surrender," Sadat said. "My decision and the people's decision is to fight and bear all necessary sacrifices."

He spoke to journalists and radio and television officials at a closed meeting. An account of the president's remarks was carried by the official Middle East news agency.

Former POW Reviews War, Imprisonment

By JEANNINE YEOMANS
Associated Press Writer

TRAVIS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — A former prisoner of war acknowledged Tuesday that he made statements over Hanoi radio urging Congress to end the war.

"You know as well as I do we allow free speech in this country," said Air Force Capt. Lynn E. Gunther, 27, of Eugene, Ore. "At no time did any of these statements degrade the United States in any way or the way of life in our country."

He added: "I have my own personal views on the war. They're mine and I don't care to discuss them at this time."

Sitting at a news conference next to two B52 pilots captured in the raids and now released, Gunther also said he was "scared" about last December's B52 raids and that he made friends with some North Vietnamese guards.

The U.S. raids hit close to where he was held near Hanoi.

Gunther, who was shot down over North Vietnam on Dec. 26, 1971, said he does not know if he will continue in the military.

Of his relationship with Communist guards, he said: "We made friends with some of the guards. If you live around an individual for an extended period of time you are going to generate some type of friendship. We were on a friendly basis with them. They met our needs, so a friendship developed."

Gunther said POWs in the North were allowed to bathe every day and shave twice a week. He said he felt they received "the best medical treatment available" while imprisoned.

"Poolshark" Hustles Title In Billiards Championship

Paul Brouillette of Grand Rapids, Michigan, better known as "Little Bentley" recently became the 1973 University of Massachusetts Pocket Billiard Champion by narrowly defeating pool hustler "Big Jim" Auger of Chicago in one of the fiercest battles of his career. Auger opened up the contest with a lead of over twenty points which he was able to sustain until the very last minutes of the contest. With a score of 85 to 64, it looked as though Jim was on his way to his first championship, needing only a single rack to win. At that point, Bentley came from behind to take the lead with a run of twenty-five, the highest run in three years at UMass. Both players displayed great finesse and caution as they battled through 14 straight safeties. But the surprising comeback proved too strong for Auger to check.

Both shooters travelled to New Britain, Conn., last week to the Eastern Championships. Auger won his first match and then lost his next two by a couple of heart breakers. Bentley, whose luck was better, made it to the semi-finals by winning his first three matches. He then faced last year's Eastern Champion Randy Leodore and lost after a strong comeback. On Saturday he lost his final match by a score of 75-71, and ended up in fifth place. This marks the end of Brouillette's career at UMass having won the title an unprecedented three consecutive years. Big Jim, however, will be back next fall, so keep your eyes open for the big fellow on the right.

News Sources " Dwindling"

By MARGARET GENTRY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The editor of the Los Angeles Times said Tuesday news sources "already are dwindling" because of court attempts to compel newsmen to disclose confidential material in cases such as the one which forced his Washington bureau manager behind bars.

William F. Thomas testified in support of legislation granting newsmen absolute immunity from being compelled to testify in judicial proceedings.

Thomas told the Senate constitutional rights subcommittee headed by Sen. Sam J. Ervin, D-N.C., "there is no question in our minds that our sources already are dwindling, and that the courts are the rason."

He said the subpoena against the Times in the Watergate case was only one of many the newspaper has been forced to fight during the past few years.

In the Watergate case, defense attorneys without objection by the prosecution subpoenaed notes, interoffice memos and the tape recording of a 5-1/2 hour interview of a key prosecution witness, Alfred Baldwin.

Washington bureau manager John Lawrence and the newsmen who interviewed Baldwin, Jack Nelson and Ronald Ostrow, were threatened with jail if they refused to turn over the information. Lawrence did go to jail for part of one day while the legal battle continued.

The subpoena action was dropped after Baldwin authorized the Times to turn over the tapes.

Thomas said that "at least four times in the pwst few weeks, potential sources in Los Angeles have specifically cited the danger of subpoena in refusing to provide information we both knew they possessed. It has happened at least twice to our reporters here in Washington."

Thomas asserted that "the media itself is becoming gun shy," often choosing not to publish stories to avoid the costly fight to protect a confidential source.

The president of NBC News, Richard C. Wald, also endorsed absolute immunity.

Earlier Tuesday, a reporter for the Memphis, Tenn., Commercial-Appeal, Joe Weiler, said his own experience in fighting a subpoena attempt by a state Senate committee produced a "chilling effect" on news gathering and led newsmen to feel intimidated by government.

Another witness, Sen. Charles H. Percy, R-Ill., endorsed a bill to give newsmen "absolute, rather than qualified, protection from subpoenas."

He said the measure also should "define 'newsman' in the broadest possible sense," and "apply to the states as well as the federal government."

CIA Investigates Own Budget

By SPENCER DAVIS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A fresh look at the cost-effectiveness of the Central Intelligence Agency has been underway in the weeks since James R. Schlesinger took over as its chief.

One of the questions being asked, sources say, is whether it is necessary to spend all that money on clandestine operations now that the government says it has adopted a policy of becoming less involved in the internal affairs of other countries. No one will say just how much money is being spent.

Schlesinger, 43, former Atomic Energy Commission chairman, became head of the CIA Feb. 5, succeeding Richard Helms, now U.S. ambassador to Iran.

The cease-fire in Laos may offer the opportunity for a sharp reduction in CIA costs. Under terms of the agreement, all foreign forces are to be withdrawn within 90 days, and this includes the CIA-financed Thai volunteers, who have been fighting on behalf of the Laotian government.

According to sources, the White House offered Helms an opportunity more than a year ago to coordinate costs and policies in a reorganization of the U.S. intelligence community. Besides the CIA, this includes the Defense Intelligence Agency (DIA), the National Security Agency (NSA) and the State Department's Bureau of Intelligence and Research.

There was said to be disappointment at the White House when the study was not forthcoming.

Officials said President Nixon has placed no restrictions on Schlesinger's efforts at CIA. They denied reports that a purge of the CIA is involved. Obviously there are going to be some changes, it is conceded, but this falls far short of a top-to-toe shakeup now.

According to one published report Thomas Karamessines, director of CIA's clandestine services, and general counsel Laurence Houston, and two high aides close to Helms were singled out by Schlesinger for early retirement.

Colombian In Boston For Life-Saving Help

FLYING TO BOSTON FOR AN OPERATION—Claudio Gonzalo Villalba, 8, of Bogata Columbia, right, talks to Metro police officer A. F. Colletti, about his trip to Boston for corrective surgery. Six months ago the boy swallowed sulphuric acid that was in a pop bottle. (AP Wirephoto)

BOSTON (AP)—A six-year-old Colombian boy arrived in Boston Monday seeking the medical help which could save his life.

Claudio Villalba came from Bogota via Miami to see if doctors at Massachusetts General Hospital could reconstruct his throat, which was seared away by a near-fatal dose of sulfuric acid.

Claudio, his tearful mother, Mrs. Ligia Villalba and her sister, Mrs. Betsy Rodriguez, were greeted at Logan International Airport by Mrs. Francis Sargent, wife of the Massachusetts governor, and members of the Partners For the Americas Program.

"Columbia is the sister state of Massachusetts in the Partners Program," Jesse Sargent said, "and of course we are concerned about the youngster."

Claudio was taken to Massachusetts General, where he was to be examined by Dr. W. Hardy Hendren, chief of pediatric surgery at the hospital. Dr. Hendren said he would examine the boy to see if he would perform the surgery or recommend another doctor.

George Anagnos, a friend of the Villalba family, said Claudio was injured when an exchange student studying chemistry left a bottle of acid on a shelf and the boy drank it thinking it was a bottle of soda pop.

Anagnos, 25, a computer consultant from West New York, N.J., said he has remained in contact with the family since he spent a year in their home as an exchange student in 1968.

Doctors in Bogota put a tube in Claudio's throat after the accident, Anagnos said, and contacted Massachusetts General when they determined they could do nothing else for the boy.

Once Mrs. Villalba was told that Massachusetts Hospital was her son's best hope, Anagnos said, "there wasn't anything that was going to stop her from getting him here."

The boy's father, Raphael Villalba, makes about $6,000 a year as an insurance company employe, Anagnos said, and while this is enough to maintain his family comfortably, it will hardly pay for the anticipated hospital bills.

"There will be no charge for the operation," Anagnos said, "but hospital costs of $150 a day will have to be paid, as well as hotel and living expenses for the mother and her sister. This could go into many thousands of dollars."

Blue Cross Contractless

EDITORS NOTE: Nearly three million Massachusetts residents depend on Blue Cross for health insurance. For the past five months, Blue Cross and the state's hospitals have been without a contract agreement, and hospital costs continue to soar. In this, the first of a four-part series of articles, Associated Press newsman Nils Bruzelius examines what is at conflict between the state, Blue Cross and the hospitals.

By NILS J. BRUZELIUS
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP)—Blue Cross and Massachusetts' hospitals, after a year of trying, have been unable to come up with a contract acceptable to them and, most importantly, to the state.

Months of negotiations have produced two formal contracts—neither of which was acceptable to the state Rate Setting commission—and several abortive attempts to implement an interim agreement.

What is the problem?

Ultimately, the problem is the balooning cost of medical care. The disagreement is over what to do about it.

In the past the Blue Cross-hospital contracts were largely concerned with determining how much the non-profit health insurer had to pay for treatment of its subscribers, and how payments would be handled. That wasn't too difficult an issue, until medical care costs began to soar.

The hospitals, through the Massachusetts Hospital Association, contend that the increases in costs are due to inflation, technological advances and a vast increase in the number of people seeking care.

State officials question the efficiency of hospital management and whether traditional health care policies set by the profession are appropriate.

Blue Cross, once entirely the "creature" of the hospitals by which it was created, is under pressure from its subscribers, and from the state, to become a vehicle for public review of hospital finances and policies.

From the hospital point of view, this is a bit like Dr. Frankenstein's monster turning on its creator.

The disagreement has gone unresolved despite the pressure all three sides feel to reach accord on the contract.

The dispute was within a hair's breadth of being settled two weeks ago, but the Rate Setting Commission balked at the last minute over a single clause. Two members, enough to prevent a majority vote for approval, said they feared the offending clause would undermine important arrangements in other provisions of the contract.

Those arrangements, the commission believes, would make it possible to use the contract as a lever to control the spiral of hospital costs.

The Hospital Association, which negotiates Blue Cross contracts for most of the state's hospitals, claims costs cannot be controlled this way. Furthermore, said MHA

Surety Bank Official Charged With Fraud

BOSTON (AP)—Former Surety Bank and Trust Co. president Daniel D. Moore and three other men were charged Tuesday in a federal indictment with conspiring to defraud Surety and seven other banks, including three in Switzerland.

Charged with Moore, 40, of Lynnfield, are Martin Stone, 56, of Wakefield, George E. Cartier, 54, of Nashua, N.H., and David Brown, 65, of New York City.

Moore is a former Deputy Comptroller of the U.S. Treasury Department, Chief National Bank Examiner and president of People's National Bank in Manassas, Va. Stone has been a broker and financial agent in New England. Cartier is a financier. Brown operates World Resources in New York.

A companion indictment was issued against Moore's brother-in-law, Spiro Varfis, 21, of Lynnfield, charging him with lying to the grand jury.

U.S. Attorney James N. Gabriel said the 48-page indictment against Moore and the others completes the grand jury investigation into the collapse of the Surety bank and Trust Co. of Wakefield.

The bank was closed May 18, 1972, after a shortage of $7 million was discovered. Moore, who had been president of Surety for six years, resigned April 27, 1972. He was indicted in August on 49 counts of misapplication, embezzlement and unauthorized issuance of letters of credit on Surety Bank funds totalling $8.1 million.

Citizens Keeping An Eye On Lobbyists

BOSTON (AP)-Bills to impose strict regulations on legislative lobbyists must not be allowed to die locked in committee as they did last year, supporters said at a committee hearing Monday.

Representatives of the "citizens' lobby" Common Cause and a score of legilators testified for six measures to control legislative lobbyists and others who week to influence state government administrators.

No testimony was heard against the lobbyist controls, but several members of the joint Committee on State Administration, which conducted the hearing, expressed resistance to another Common Cause bill to require all state officials to disclose outside income.

During the hearing 50 members of Common Cause, who had attened a briefing by the group's leaders just before the session, packed the committee room, filling all available seats and much of the floor space.

K. Dun Gifford, chairman of the 12,000 member Massachusetts branch of Common Cause said, "This committee last year reported out a bill to control lobbyist more strictly. The lobbyists killed it."

He said strict regulation of lobbyists and income disclosure is necessary to arrest the decline of public confidence in government, and he attacked "specious arguments" against disclosure bills.

"Many legislators take offense because they believe that behind our efforts lies an assumption that all legislators are crooks," he said. "This is utter nonsense. Many charge that income source disclosure would make public officials second class citizens. This charge is true only for those who have something to hide."

Sen. David H. Locke, R-Wellesley, called lobbyist controls "a motherhood issue. We all give it lip service."

Recalling the fate of last year's bill, he said, "We all support it as long as we're sure it isn't going to pass."

The Common Cause bill would require lobbyists to report four times a year on all receipts and expenditures of more than $10. It would forbid lobbyists to contribute to candidates or office holders and would require the attorney general to prosecute violations.

The existing law only requires the employers of lobbyists to report how much they paid, and to whom, for lobbying activities.

Proposals to require discloseure of the source, but not the amount, of all outside income by public officials was criticized by one committee member, Rep. John J. Long, D-Fall River, as "a clear invasion of the right to privacy."

He objected to features that required reporting of outside income of all members of the official's household, saying, "Don't you think one of the greatest family secrets is their wealth?"

Rep. Iris Holland, R-Springfield, said the disclosure requirements would be "not fair. It seems we are suffering undue penalties against legislators if we require them to disclose."

School Budget Tradition Upheld

BOSTON (AP)-The Massachusetts Senate refused Tuesday to upset an age-old tradition, the sanctity of school budgets presented to cities and towns.

By law, and upheld by the Supreme Court on several occasions, the school committees' budgets cannot be cut, and if they are, the school department can go ahead and spend the money anyway.

What the Senate did was to reject, by a roll call vote of 30 to 5 a bill which proposed allowing city councils or town meetings, by four-fifths votes, to reduce school budgets.

The cuts would be restricted to the area by which one year's budget increased over the previous one.

Sen. David M. Locke, R-Wellesley, backed the bill, which he filed and which was approved by the committee on Local Affairs. It then went to Ways and Means, and to the committee on Education which turned it down.

Locke said his bill would "give real home rule to the cities and towns."

Sen. Walter J. Boverini, D-Lynn, chairman of the committee on education, opposed the bill which he said "is trying to say that some town meeting member or citv councillor has more expertise than the school committee."

"The school committee spends weeks and months on the budget and I don't think in one evening a town meeting or city council can know its details," he added.

Sen. Mary L. Fonseca, D-Fall River, who has served on a school committee, and is the former chairman of the committee on education, said that school costs have risen because of the programs which the legislature has mandated.

"We have absorbed the cost of public welfare and look at the cost of that," she said. "But you don't hear them screaming about that."

Locke said that 80 per cent of the a school budget now is mandates, with the committee having control over only 20 cents of the taxpayers' dollar.

Supporting the bill was Sen. John F. Aylmer, R-Barnstable, who said that school costs have risen so much that towns "are in a regressive mood when it comes to building new schools."

"I think it is because people see the budgets go through without debate, and they are punishing the school committees by not building new schools.

He added that he hopes the senators opposing the control bill now will vote with him when the deficiency budget comes along "and vote to send the $160 million reimbursements we owe to the cities and towns.

Sen. Arthur J. Lewis Jr., D-Boston, also in support of the bill, said it was "simply saying to the school committees that 'we want you to be as fiscally responsible as any other elected body.' "

$200,000 "Made Available" To Nixon's Campaign

By CHRIS CONNELL
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP)-A $200,000 cash contribution was secretly made to President Nixon's campaign last April, three days after a new law requiring public disclosure went into effect, according to papers filed in U.S. District Court on Tuesday.

The money came from a Nassau, Bahamas, bank allegedly controlled by Robert L. Vesco, a New Jersey financier whom the Securities and Exchange Commission accused last November of playing a leading role in the alleged looting of $224 million from Investors Overseas Services Ltd.

Harry L. Sears, a lawyer who ran the Nixon campaign in New Jersey, told the SEC on Feb. 20 that he and the president of Vesco's International Control Corp. delivered the cash in person to Maurice Stans, the finance chairman of the Committee to Re-Elect the President, on April 10, 1972, in Washington. The law went into effect on April 7.

A spokesman for the Nixon campaign committee said in Washington the $200,000 and a subsequent $50,000 contribution by Vesco had been returned last month to the financier.

The spokesman said the $200,000 was actually "made available to the committee in New York on April 6" but because of a "late change in plans...it was not actually delivered until a few days later."

The Finance Committee to Re-Elect the President released a Jan. 31-dated letter to Vesco in which it said it was in the best interests of both parties to return the money. It cited the civil suit pending against Vesco and his business interests.

But the spokesman said, "Under the circumstances the money was constructively in the hands of the campaign committee" on April 6, the day before the new law went into effect.

Pope Shuffles Church Chiefs

VATICAN CITY (AP)-Pope Paul VI removed three Italian cardinals from key Vatican posts Monday in what appeared to mark the start of a major reshuffle of the Roman Catholic Church's central administration.

He also named new secretaries to three congregations in accordance with his policy that ranking Vatican officials should retire at 75 or rotate every five years. These changes were part of a rule Pope Paul recreed in 1967 and went into effect in March 1968.

The top official to leave his post was Carlo Cardinal Confalonieri, 79, who resigned as prefect of the Congregation of the Bishops-one of the most powerful Vatican ministries. He was in charge of controlling bishops' activities around the world.

Paolo Cardinal Marella, 78, retired as president of the Secretariat for Non-Christians, and Luigi Cardinal Traglia, also 78, resigned as chancellor of the Roman Catholic Church and deputy dean of the College of Cardinals-two honorary titles left without real power in the 1968 decree.

Cardinal Confalonieri was replaced by another Italian, Archbishop Sebastiano Baggio, 60, a close friend of Pope Paul and papal envoy to Brazil until 1969 when he became a cardinal and archbishop of Cagliari in Sardinia. Cardinal Confalonieri headed the Congregation of the Bishops for 12 years.

Replacements for the other two Cardinals were not immediately announced.

Cardinal Confalonieri retained his post as head of the Pontifical Commission for Latin America. But he is bound to leave this position, too, by July when he turns 80-the age Pope Paul has set for mandatory retirement from all active roles as cardinals, including that of electing a new pontiff.

Contract Hassles Plague Blue Cross

President William T. Robinson, the hospitals are already subject to too many controls, and they are working at cross-purposes.

"Over-regulation is throttling us," he said in an interview.

Nevertheless, all three sides want a contract, and as of this week informal talks continued among them to try to reach a compromise.

The hospitals need a contract because the financial arrangements with Blue Cross provide considerable convenience and cash in an industry where those commodities are scarce. Despite the lapse of the old contract Sept. 30, Blue Cross has continued the financial arrangements—but only at the prices in effect under the old agreement.

Blue Cross needs a contract because its reason for being is to provide health insurance and a financial convenience for hospitals. Without a contract it could not long continue to do either.

The state wants a contract because under existing law, one of its few controls over hospital expenses is the indirect one of the Blue Cross contract. The commission has been trying to use its right to review and approve the contract to extract concessions that would strengthen its control over hospitals' financial affairs.

But the pressures for agreement on a contract run head on into the disagreement over what it should do.

In the meantime, what of the Blue Cross subscriber? How much has he been affected by the five-month lapse of the Blue Cross-hospital contract?

Surprisingly, not very much, at least in the short run.

Virtually no complaints have reached the state Consumer's Council or other consumer protection agencies, and there are reasons for this.

Last summer the state legislature, fearing a contract lapse, passed a law intended to guarantee that Blue Cross would continue to pay for treatment of its subscribers, whether or not the hospital where they received care had a current contract with the non-profit insurer.

The statute permitted Blue Cross to continue to pay benefits directly to hospitals, as it would normally do, if the subscriber agreed to it in writing. The kicker, as far as the hospitals were concerned, was that the law also provided that those payments would be made at the rates in effect when the old contract expired.

A number of hospitals increased their rates on Oct. 1 of last year, at the start of their new fiscal year. But because of the convenience and the ready availability of cash from Blue Cross, many chose to accept direct benefit payments at the old rate.

A few, however, decided they would rather bill the patient for the full amount and let the subscriber seek reimbursement from Blue Cross for as much as it would pay.

Originally about 14 hospitals, most of them in western Massachusetts, took this tack. Several were promptly sued by the attorney general, but a state Supreme Court justice ruled the law did not require them to accept direct payment from Blue Cross.

Counterfeiters Marry, 'Honeymoon Delayed'

By BYRON DAVIS
Associated Press Writer

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP)-It was a simple wedding, a double-ring ceremony.

The groom kissed the bride and, after a brief reception of sorts, both went back to their cells in the Hamilton County Jail.

The groom was Clair L. Sallows, 49, of Chattanooga; the bride, Barbara Bouton, 27, of the Chattanooga area.

The two were arrested in the lakesite resort area at Chickamauga Lake Jan. 4 during a raid by Secret Service agents who confiscated an estimated $7 million in bogus $20 bills.

Secret Service personnel said it was the largest seizure of counterfeit currency in the history of the Treasury Department.

Sallows and his bride were among five persons who pleaded guilty to counterfeit charges and received prison sentences Feb. 21. Sallows was sentenced to a five-year term on one count and three eight-year terms on three other counts. His bride, the mother of four children by a previous marriage, received four terms of four years each.

Witnesses to the ceremony were Secret Service agent Miller Davis-who worked on the case-federal Marshal Granville Sertel and Jack Russell, chief deputy sheriff.

Sertel said the bride and groom will be leaving soon for confinement in separate federal prisons.

"I carried the papers across the street to the courthouse to get the marriage certified," Sertel said. "When I came back to the jail the groom was passing out a box of candy in the sheriff's office."

"The honeymoon," Sertel said, "will be delayed."

Bill Gives Employees Option In Abortions

WASHINGTON (AP)-Hospital workers including nurses should have the option not to help perform abortions, Rep. Margaret M. Heckler, R-Mass., said Tuesday.

She said the Supreme Court ruling which struck down abortion laws should not at the same time force hospital workers to act in violation of their consciences.

A bill she introduced would make federal aid to hospitals contingent upon their giving employes the right to decline to take part in abortions.

In a telephone interview, she said hospital or medical clinic workers should be permitted to sign a statement of conscientious objection to abortions. They would include anyone "involved in the procedure of abortion or the disposition of any aborted fetus..."

Mrs. Heckler said she has received a number of complaints from Catholic nurses in Massachusetts and elsewhere about being forced to aid in abortions. Doctors are not generally affected, she said, because medical societies allow them to decline to perform abortions on moral grounds.

"Conscientious objection to the taking of unborn life deserves as much considertion and respect as does conscientious objection to warfare," she said.

Mass. Lottery Commission To Compete With 'Bookies'

BOSTON (AP)-The Massachusetts Lottery Commission Tuesday unveiled its long range plans to introduce a family of "number selection games" intended to compete head-on with games operated by illegal bookmakers.

The new family of games would include the "Lotto Game," patterned after West Germany's official state lottery, a "Lota-Perfect" game patterned after Quebec's, and a "Numbers Game" directly competing with the numbers racket.

"The numbers business is the largest and most lucrative lottery operation that we can conceive of at this time," Thomas B. O'Heir, deputy director for management services for the state lottery commission, told the Government Regulations committee at a hearing on bills to legalize state-run gambling.

The numbers selection games, said O'Heir, "are aimed at what we consider to be a large market of people who wish to choose the lottery numbers they purchase."

Under the Lotto game, bettors would mark betting slips, choosing digits from six of 49 possible number combinations. Betting slips would be collected weekly, and six winning digits would be drawn from a drum. Prizes would be based on matching numbers.

The Loto Perfecta game would be based on the outcome of a horse race, though the bets would be a true lottery, not simply a race bet, said O'Heir.

The "Numbers Game" would use a betting slip on which the bettor would select a three digit or four digit number.

"They payoff structure for such a numbers game would be directly competitive with that currently offered by illegal bookmakers," said O'Heir. "Payoffs would be at fixed odds which would at least equal those offered illegally."

Dr. William L. Perrault, lottery executive director, said the lottery plans to introduce the three number selection games in 1974.

Navy Conviction Reversed

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (AP)-The Navy said Tuesday it was overturning the riot and assault conviction of a black Kitty Hawk crewman in whose case a civil suit was filed alleging perjury by a Navy witness.

Capt. Charles Merryman, commander of Fleet Air Command, dismissed the conviction of Seaman Cleveland Mallory, 19, of Pittsburgh, Pa., in what a spokesman called a routine review.

The action, Merryman said, was based solely on records of the two-day, nonjury special court-martial trial in which Mallory was convicted of assault and riot aboard the aircraft carrier at sea last Oct. 12-13. Merryman said he did not have copies of the suit filed in U.S. District Court last Friday by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

In its suit, the NAACP cited excerpts of a transcript of taped conversations in which a white Navy witness allegedly admitted he lied in the Mallory trial.

Airman Appren. Michael A. Laurie talked later with an undercover investigator hired by the NAACP and denied several times that he had seen Mallory assault anybody, the suit alleged. Laurie was the only sailor to testify that he saw such assaults.

In addition, the NAACP accused the Navy's chief prosecutor of racial prejudice in the continuing trials.

Mallory was given a bad conduct discharge and reduced in rank to seaman recruit but now will be returned to the rank of seaman, a Navy spokesman said. His personnel records will be purged of any information dealing with the trial.

A total of 28 sailors, all black but one, were charged in what the Navy called a race riot at sea. Twelve have pleaded guilty or been convicted. Nine others await trial.

Soviets 'Detain' Emigrating Jews

BOSTON (AP)—The widow of a Soviet Poet who was executed in a Stalinist purge says, "If you want to live as a Jew in Soviet Russia, forget it. It's not possible."

Last November, after more than two years and eight refusals, an exit visa was granted to Mrs. Ester Markish, 60, and her son David, 34, both writers, on the condition that they leave the Soviet Union with 48 hours.

Mrs. Markish spoke at a Boston news conference Monday. She is visiting several American cities to promote a campaign against the Soviet policy of collecting "exit fees" from Jews who want to emigrate.

Photography, poetry, fiction, nonfiction, and art of the university community is included in this issue.

Photography, art, and color layout is emphasized, featuring in the color section a foldout photostat of a painting by William Patterson--an assistant professor in printmaking at the university. There are also slides and art work by David Trufant, Monty Abbott, Bill Martin, and other undergraduate and graduate students.

The opening fiction is a piece entitled "Return To Bikini" by Fred Miller Robinson of the English Department. The story is based on a recent controversy concerning some islands in the Pacifc from which the natives were evacuated in the 40's so the United States could perform bomb tests, then over 20 years later the natives were returned to their island and there have been reports of very strange happenings lately as a result of the radioactive effects on plant and animal life (things like birds flying into trees and turtles walking backwards onto the beach and dying there.)

There's a short story entitled "Pole" by Erik Johanessen, a senior, English Major, and Fiction Editor of Spectrum, Erik has referred to the piece as Pole's first encounter with himself. C.K. Smith has a story entitled, "A Working Girl"--Miss Smith has been published in a variety of magazines and is currently an undergraduate of the university. Also included are stories by Elizabeth George ("Little Foxes"), Sally Clayton ("Road Out") and Hortense Cupo ("The Lotus Tree")

Take a good look at the poetry and black and white photography layout. The poems are by undergraduates and MFA students. The first poem, "Of MY Father", is by Helena Minton, a member of the MFA program; there are also poems by William Mailler, Marsha Peterson, Christopher Howell, and undergraduates: Joe Theroux, Steve Gizitsky, Katie Sawyer, Joel Fowler, Melinda Kahn, Barbara Love, Ed Meek, Nadine Klien and former MFA student, Elizabeth Gross. Joe Theroux is the Poetry Editor of Spectrum and he will be reading his poems in April for the Graduate Poetry Alliance.

The non-fiction includes two articles: "Does The Bible Degrade Women?" by James Freeman, a member of the English Department and "An Open Letter To The Department of Mental Health", a "heartwarming" essay by Frank E. Keyes Jr. of the Rhetoric Department.

There is photography by Ron Melnick, Wendy Pollock, Al Chapman, Ira Serkes, Steve Aiken, and others.

The Editor-inChief of this issue is Ed Meek III, the Art Editor is Jane Herzenberg, Photography Editor is Monty Abbott, Managing Editor--Robin Ellington, Fiction Editor--Erik Johanessen, Poetry Editor--Joseph Theroux, and the Business Manager is Deborah Day, Richard Abaid and Brian Harrington are assistants.

Spectrum is printed on Waren's Cameo Brilliant Dull, the typeface is 10 and 11 point Times-Roman and the Cover stock is Beau Brilliant. The magazine is published by Woodland Publishing Company and the color separations are done by Unigraphic.

If interested in contributing material for the Spring issue drop by the office on the second floor Student Union or send manuscripts (with self-addressed stamped envelope) to Ed Meek RSO 102, Campus Center, University of Mass., Amherst, Mass. 01002. The deadline for the next issue is March 23rd--the day before vacation. Spectrum needs articles, fiction, poetry, art and photography (esp. black and white).

If interested in working on the staff of Spectrum come by the office. Editorial positions are open for next year. Working on the magazine provides experience in layout, publishing, printing and a working knowledge of what is good and bad in art forms today. The staff alone is responsible for the contents and handling of the magazine.

On Getting Drunk

Tonight, at midnight, all people in the State of Massachusetts who are 18 years old or older will have the right to legally purchase and drink alcoholic beverages. This enfranchises the previously disenfranchised group of 18-to 21-year-olds.

For most communities in the state, this means that a small percentage of people will have a right which they didn't have before. In Amherst, the figures are much different, with a significant portion of the town's population among the newly enfranchised.

While celebration on the occasion of gaining a right which should always have been ours will probably be the order of the day, we would strongly suggest that people use discretion in exercising their new right, especially in the simultaneous use of alcoholic beverages and motor vehicles. We need only cite the example of Michigan, a state with recent experience with a lowered drinking age, to dramatize our point. After the drinking age was lowered in that state, traffic deaths in the 18-to 21-year-old age group rose a horrifying 61%.

The message is simple: drinking and driving is an explosive combination. We beg everyone in the community to please STAY OUT FROM BEHIND THE WHEEL OF A CAR IF YOU ARE DRINKING. The lives you save will be your own and those of your potential victims. Let's not make the streets of Amherst, and the highways of Michigan, blood brothers. If you're drinking, don't drive.

Amnesty: NO!

Now that the conflict in Vietnam is presumably over, a lot of the liberals have been asking that amnesty be granted to draft dodgers and army deserters.

Should we? Let's examine the facts:

1) A lot of men who were ordered to go to Vietnam and chose not to desert the armed forces gave their lives so that we might win. They didn't understand that the Vietnam war was just a plan to divide the people of this country. They just knew that they were supposed to fight to win. They didn't understand that the policy of this war, set by the administration, was a no-win policy.

2) All Mr. Nixon's peace did was surrender Southeast Asia to the communists. Mr. Nixon's idea of world peace is world communism, a one-world totalitarian state. Thus, the men who died in Vietnam may have died in vain.

"To grant amnesty would be to treat these people as heroes..."

3) Those who chose to leave the army and desert our country did so voluntarily. They chose an act of treason over an act of loyalty to the United States. Certainly their loyalties aren't with the United States.

A lot of men wasted a part of their life in Vietnam. A lot of men gave their lives in vain. To grant amnesty to those who violated the draft law, however unethical it may be, and to grant amnesty to those who deserted our armed forces, after they were ordered to go to Vietnam, however unethical that war may have been, would be to treat these people as heroes instead of the traitors they are. To grant amnesty to these people is to ignore those who died in Vietnam. It would be ignoring those POW's who waited so long to come home. It would be ignoring the families of those POWs, MIAs and the dead soldiers who suffered terribly and painfully throughout the whole mess. It would also be ignoring those men who went there, fought and then returned to the U.S. and suffered through painful experiences as a result.

Richard Nixon's peace proposal will turn out to surrender Southeast Asia to the communists. Thus, he has betrayed each and every American soldier who set foot in Vietnam. To grant amnesty to those traitors who deserted the army and evaded the draft would simply further betray these men. If those deserters were loyal to the United States, they wouldn't have left. Thus, their loyalties must lie elsewhere.

No, amnesty to draft dodgers and army deserters should not be given. To do so would be to betray those men who, as ordered, went to Vietnam.

Amnesty: YES!

First of all, I'd like to say that this article is about amnesty, but really has nothing to do with it. Random House Dictionary defines amnesty as: "a general pardon for offenses against a government,(2) an act of forgiveness for past offenses esp. to a class of persons as a whole, (3) to grant amnesty to, pardon."

The subject of amnesty for one crime or another has come up time and again in our nation's history and has usually been the accepted solution after each wartime period. In fact, after the Civil War, a general amnesty was granted to those soldiers previously involved in a war against their country.

However, what we have now is not a question of amnesty and forgiveness, but one of recognition and reunification. Those who resisted the draft are not cowardly or unpatriotic, but rather, they felt that war is wrong and that this war in particular would eventually bring about the demise of the country that they love. These men should be recognized as the real heroes of the Vietnam War because they worked to bring about an end while others worked to perpetuate.

"These men should be recognized as the real heroes of the war..."

Those souls who believe that the Vietnam War was just cannot be criticized for fighting, but those that felt strongly against the war and chose to fight are no heroes. If we are to sufficiently deal with the problem, then we must not treat draft evaders as criminals. Instead, we must treat them as returning prisoners-of-war whose only crime was refusing to kill. After all, whether it is done for a government or an individual, killing is killing.

This plan does not end here. The hardest and most important aspect is reuniting the country so that draft resisters and veterans can work side by side, without malice, to improve their country. This country belongs to all of its inhabitants, and if we put one sector of society above or below the others (as we have done so often in the past), then we are providing for prejudice and inequality.

In short, we should work to forget the tumultuous years of war and come together to maintain peace. We must not allow for new prejudices and fears, but rather, we should go much farther than amnesty and adopt a policy of recognition and reunification.

Will Our Monsters Destroy Us?

By STEVE McMAHON

In 1817, Mary Shelley published a story about an obsessed scientist who, employing spare parts from the cadavers of unwilling donors, created a human being. It was probably little realized then, and perhaps seldom today, what a remarkably prophetic vision this story represents. It is a horror story without parallel, not so much for its chilling plot, but because of the underlying questions it raises concerning man and his relationship to technology.

Today, in a more real and frightening sense than ever before, man stands on the threshhold of substantially altering both himself and the planet he inhabits. In virtually every field of endeavor, truly incredible advances are being made. From the earth sciences to space travel, achievements deemed impossible, even unimaginable two decades ago, are now a reality. Indeed, one area in particular, that of the relatively new science of genetic engineering, now stands on the very brink of revolutionizing the traditional concepts of man, God and creation.

This new science is now experimenting with techniques which may radically alter the entire reproductive process; techniques such as the one which would allow the implantation of a fertilized ovum in the womb of a "host" mother or in an artificial womb inside a laboratory. Test-tube fertilization, long a hotly debated issue, is now a reality. As early as 1950, Dr. Landrum Shettles of Columbia University created in vitro; outside the womb fertilization and managed to maintain the embryo's life for six days.

Perhaps the best evidence of true in vitro fertilization has been provided by Drs. Robert G. Edeards and P.S. Steptoe at Cambridge University in England. These doctors are now attempting to implant a fertilized egg in the uterus of the donor. Once this transfer is accomplished the road is open for "proxy mothers". The fertilized ovum could be removed from one woman and implanted in the uterus of another. If this process can be completed successfully, the child will bear the genes of its true parents while the proxy mother would serve merely as a temporary host. This process might be employed by women who wish to overcome infertility or by those for whom normal childbirth is impossible or dangerous.

Yet another intriguing project is now being explored by the genetic engineer; the possibility of an artificial womb. A pressurized steel chamber filled with the proper fluids might well be a sufficient medium in which a fetus might gestate. Some minor successes with lamb fetuses have already been made. The big advantage in ex utero gestation is that everything can be controlled by a new type of doctor, the fetologist. If the proper solution, pressure and waste disposal system (a very serious problem for the genetic engineer) are maintained, the chances are a good deal better than in natural childbirth that the child will be healthy and normal.

Still more startling is the possibility of creating clones; exact duplicates of a single parent. In this process, sex cells will be rendered completely unnecessary. Rather, a single body cell, scraped perhaps from the elbow of a donor, might be chemically induced to divide, multiply and eventually grow into an exact copy of the donor from whom the cell was taken. While clones have already been created from carrots and frogs, it is not certain whether this process can be used on human cell tissue.

While many of these experiments have the definite flavor of a science fiction novel, such is not the case. These studies are actually being made and it is only a matter of time, many feel, before these "fantasies" are realized. The question then, is whether to continue on in this extremely delicate area without first considering the multitude of questions inherent in such research.

Through technology, in all of its diverse forms, man has progressed materially at a fantastic speed over the last thirty years, and the pace must surely double over the next thirty as more and more knowledge is accrued. But one must always look back to be reminded of the cost of progress in human terms. Already, one perceives the annihilation of the small town and the advance of megalopolis; the loss of the family and the advance of urban anonymity. These are problems with which technology did not attempt to deal until after the fact.

The dilemma faced by the genetic engineer is comparable to every other form of technology in that they must all deal with the question of what is to be the ultimate effect of that technology upon man. Are the aforementioned controls on human heredity "a massive means of human degradation", or a brilliant tool for the elevation of man? These questions must be asked before it is too late to do anything about it. Man can no longer afford to wait until an atomic bomb is thrown in his lap or the skyscrapers permanently block the sun. Frankenstein's monster destroyed his creator. It is foolish to assume that our monsters will not kill us, either physically or spiritually. The price for ignorance may well be our lives.

Technology is not inherently evil. It can be either good or bad, depending on what we do with it. Technology represents the means to feed and house the total population of the earth, or to reduce men to mere automatons who eat, sleep, breed and die like any other domesticated animal. Before the city swallows us whole and the Frankensteins thrust us into a situation with which we may be ill-equipped to deal, it is essential that we set specific goals for our technology and strive to realize them. Planning, like the kind that made the U.S. space program one of the most successful projects ever undertaken by this country has always been, and will continue to be the keynote of true progress. The alternative is to sit idly by while our freedoms and humanity are irreparably eroded.

What Really Happened At The Meeting

To The Editor:

The Graduate Student Senate appreciates the coverage of our meetings by the Collegian, but the story that appeared on yesterday's front page contains numerous points which need correction and clarification. (I chaired the meeting, and didn't recognize the motions and so on that were reported, so I'm sure there must be many confused graduate students on campus this afternoon.)

1) Frank Skinner has an excellent grievance, and has managed to have his case heard in retrospect through sheer perseverance. The issue at hand with the senate however, is to establish a means of preventing similar injustices. It is with this charge in mind that we have taken on the task of redefining the contracts issued by the University as well as the processes for appeal and grievance.

2) We are directly opposed to forming unessential committees. The suggestion for Orientation was to attempt to improve those programs previously established, and to provide for wider inclusion of the Graduate body in an information sharing process.

3) The University has in effect a policy concerning "administrative withdrawal" which is directly related to financial and paperwork matters. The Student Affairs Committee of the Graduate Council, in conjunction with the Graduate Senate is in the process of developing procedures for insuring due process for those students faced with such withdrawal.

4) The motion to increase the Graduate Student tax was for an increase of $2.00 per student for fiscal year 1973-74 only. The money is not to be used for xeroxing and Graduate Officer salaries as reported, but rather to cover expenditures already committed in order to leave the operating budget at the present level. The tax will return in fiscal year 1974-75 to the present level of $4.00 per year per student. The fee referred to in the quote by Mr. Mueller was the Campus Center Student tax.

5) We did not discuss the formation of a task force to study the history of Trustee meetings. (That history is what happens at UMass on a day to day basis, and we are well aware of that already.) What we did discuss was the fact that the Task Force, which was established last semester to survey Graduate conditions on campus, is about to begin the second phase of study, and will tackle the areas of financial aid and the general "quality of life".

I sincerely hope that these clarifications can be made as soon as possible, for if I were not at the meeting last night, my immediate response to the article at hand would be WHAT??????!!". Actually, that was the response anyway.

Word Weaponry

To The Editor:

Does the co-pilot hold the same rank and responsibility as the pilot?

This is just one of the points disputed by one Michael Uglioni in an editorial entitled "Sexist Lexicography" on February 27. The answer to the question is "of course not". The only time the prefix "co-" indicates equal rank is when it is used to signify a relationship, and not a person. So, "coeducational" is not a sexist term because it talks about a process,not people. Technically, "coed" is not sexist either, because it should refer to anybody, vagina or no, who attends a coeducational institution.

Now this brings us to the most interesting problem raised by Mr. Ugolini: is the meaning within the speaker or the receiver? Rather than get into a metaphysical discussion, I think this problem should be approached scientifically. I suggest, Mr. Ugolini, that you go to New Africa House, and start sprinkling your smalltalk with terms like "darky" or "boy". If you survive that, proceed to Boyden and do the same, using the term "dumb jocks". Then go on over to Everywoman's center and use the words "chick", "broad", and "coed". By this point you should have come to some conclusions about the use of language as weaponry. Disarm!

No Easy Solution

To The Editor:

We would like to express our agreement with your Editorial entitled "Expensive Meat". The recent increase in food prices in the Campus Center has put a vital commodity - food - out of the price range of students. The price increase was a fast and easy way to offset the rising costs of wholesale food products in order to stay near our budgeted goals. It is not an answer to the question of why food prices in the Campus Center have to be so high, uncompetitively high.

The answer to this and to many similar questions lies in problems in the basic operational philosophy of the Campus Center and its correction will not be easy or quick. This is not much help to a UMie who cannot afford a hamburger but all we can say is that we are working on it.

Only Rumors

To The Editor:

This Saturday, March 3, Sunderland will be holding its town elections. One of the three selectmen's seats is being contested by incumbent Robert Laurenitis, a farmer in the community, and by Mr. Walter Storozuk who works for Warner Bros. Inc.

I have heard two rumors about Bob Laurenitis recently which have really pissed me off. One concerns his wanting to close the local bars if re-elected, and the other his alleged dislike for students. The first rumor is simply a lie and deserves no further comment. The second rumor is just old-fashioned mud slinging. As a student who knows Bob through my interest in local town affairs, I know better. Both rumors came from known friends of Mr. Storozuk and maybe what they are saying shows where his head is at.

Rumors aside, there are two things that I do know that make me support Bob Laurenitis for re-election, besides his basic honesty and independence from local rip-off artists. At a local bar, if I agreed to vote for Mr. Storozuk, I could have received two free beers. I guess students' votes are going pretty cheap this year. Also, at last year's town meeting, Mr. Storozuk delivered an oration urging unconditional support for all of Nixon's policies.

To Clarify Night Busing

To The Editor:

Tonight, the Student Senate Transit Service will expand by providing additional evening service on its existing routes. I would like to clarify this expansion and also answer some questions regarding other phases of our operation. The times and maps for all service are in today's Collegian, pages 11 and 14. I suggest that people pull out and save these schedules.

Evening service will extend from approximately 6:30 to 11:00 PM on all class days. There will be one bus covering the Sunderland and South Deerfield Routes which have many common stops and likewise one bus on the Belchertown Road and Belchertown Center Routes. Please note that after 6:30 PM, Main St. will be used instead of College St. on the Belchertown Road Route.

The on-campus routes will be covered with one bus on the North-Amherst Stadium Route and one bus covering both Orchard Hill and Southwest areas. We hope that this service will be received as well as our daytime service and we will gladly accept any comments regarding it.

With concern for the comfort and safety of all of our passengers, we cannot allow dogs or any other pets on the buses. Also for safety reasons, we ask that parents with children under high school age tell them not to attempt to ride the buses unaccompanied.

Inquiries on these policies or any other portion of the Transit Service can be made at Room 167 of the Campus Center. After Wednesday, schedules will be available at the Campus Center Information Desk.

Against 'Against Abortion'

To The Editor:

I would like to raise a few objections to Susan Laidig's article "Against Abortion." I think most women are aware of the option of putting a child up for adoption. The problem is not ignorance. It is emotional. Giving birth to a child is a highly personal experience. Too many women, giving a child up for adoption is a heartbreaking experience. I know of several women who have done so, and it has deeply effected them.

I would like to know what basis Ms. Laidig had to say that "...these women who are strong enough emotionally to come through an abortion would also have had the emotional stability to bear the child." Judging from those women who have had unwanted children and those who have had abortions, this does not seem to be the case. Maybe Ms. Laidig is speaking from personal experience. If this is the case, I would just like to say that there are others with similar personal experiences who do not feel the same way.

As far as the statement "And no abortion is perfectly safe, because if a woman has too many she will become sterile," goes, this is perfectly ludicrous! Granted, several abortions could result in sterilization However, abortion is not meant to be a form of contraception. Abortion must occur after conception. I don't know of anyone who would consider abortion as a form of birth control. Furthermore, an abortion, when performed legally and by a competent doctor, is safe. It is a very simple operation.

In conclusion, I agree that abortion is not the answer to everyone's pregnancy problem, but it is the answer for some women.

Left Out Of The Picture

To The Editor:

We think that all the concern about providing buses for students traveling from surrounding apartment areas to UMass is hypocritical. People have stirred up quite a stink about making it safe and easy for women to travel to and from campus so they provided night buses. Well isn't that just great-what about those several hundred students who live in Brittany Manor and Riverglade-we have been totally left out of the picture. None of the buses even come near us-which leaves many students with no choice but to hitch to classes. The Student Senate's justification for this act of neglect is that they would be illegally interfering with public bus routes. This argument is a crock of shit because there are other alternate routes to our area which would not interfere with the public bus route at all-and we would be more than willing to map them out for the Transit Service if necessary.

We urge all students living at Brittany Manor and Riverglade to take some kind of action and express their feelings about this rip-off to the Student Senate Transit Service.

Lynne Petrone, et al

(Editor's Note: While the bus routes were being devised, Brittany Manor and Riverglade were not yet planned. Also, there is a conflict with commercial bus lines which run on Rt. 116 and Rt. 9.)

Investigate Belchertown Tragedy

To Governor Sargent:

In my November 22, 1972 letter, I attempted to stimulate you into an immediate course of action regarding multiple deaths and one serious accident which occurred at Belchertown State School. Commissioner Milton Greenblatt, to whom a copy was sent, was forced into action. His inept lieutenants performed shamefully. The reports of Dr. Bloomberg, Mr. Magri, and the Belchertown State School Trustees are now part of the public record. Stellar investigators, all: they blamed the parents for the tragedies. Not one of the investigators bothered to interview the parents. Hopefully they will be barred-for-life as investigators.

Commissioner of Public Safety Kehoe quickly exhonerated his state police.

Bowing to multi-pressures, you ordered Secretary Goldmark (on January 26, 1973--approximately nine weeks from your receipt of my letter) to conduct a new Belchertown probe. Obviously the quality of the previous, five investigations was low. Fiasco! By now three months have elapsed and the seventh investigation continues.

Through the lengthy introduction, I wish to impress upon you the need to act quickly, yet knowingly, in the case involving a retarded citizen of Massachusetts.

A former Belchertown State School resident, Mr. Russell Daniels is alleged to have murdered an eighty-three year old Springfield woman. Mr. Daniels was discharged from Belchertown in December 1970 and sent (without prior consultation with the Daniels family) "into the community--into a half-way house. After a mini-stay at the half-way house, Mr. Daniels was released into society.

Russell Daniels signed a confession statement for the police--a statement which during the murder trial he could not adequately read not comprehend in the presence of a judge, attorneys, and jury members. Governor, would you say that Mr. Daniels was "prepared for the community"? Would you say that the police fully understand mental retardation? Would you say that Commissioner Greenblatt effectively prepared the community--including the police? Many cogent questions could be generated.

I ask that you immediately appoint a citizens commission to thoroughly investigate the events leading to Mr. Daniels' tragedy. I further plead that you hold fully accountable anyone in the Department of Mental Health bureaucracy, including Commissioner Greenblatt, who failed to provide education, training, habilitation, counselling, supervision, medical and legal services, etc. for Russell Daniels--a retarded citizen of Massachusetts.

Rights For Lefties

To The Editor:

We're tired of being discriminated against. There are somewhere around 16 million of us on this earth, and we can be found in every race, religion, and nation. And we're fed up.

I'm talking about my left-handed brothers and sisters. Even as I open the door to leave my room, I am forced to reach over diagonally, which is highly inconvenient; and, according to somebody, this could cause serious muscular strain. Thus, discrimination, thanks to you right-handed oinkers, again raises its ugly head.

How would you like welts on your hand from using right-handed scissors to cut that nude photo of Henry Kissinger out for your roommate's girlfriend? Probably not too much, right-er, left?

And how would you like to be called such blatantly derogatory names as "southpaw," and "lefty"? The latter implies some sort of subversive political affiliation. And how about that, anyway?

In medieval days, we were thought to be agents of the Devil; and where does Christ sit? On the right hand of God! (Who sits on His left hand? Charlton Heston?)

Now you and I know that all this is either a Communist or Nixon Administration plot—depending on who you listen to—but we shall continue our fight for freedom, with blood, sweat, tears, beers— whatever it takes. Left-handed brothers and sisters of the world, unite! Down with right-handed oppression! Left on!!!

The Complex Art Of Building Snowmen

To The Editor:

I wish to publically thank Galen Tinder for showing that there is a complex science involved in the creation of snowmen. In his February 26th article he praises this art form by associating it with the School of Education.

The building of snowmen is a sociological as well as a physics problem. My aim is to help people understand what Mr. Tinder already knows.

In the realm of physics we must consider the mechanical as well as the thernodynamical problems involved in building a snowman. The figure must be designed so that the sun strikes a minimum of surface area. To complicate matters the evaporation of the snow due to air passing around the structure must be calculated in with the sun's direct activity to determine its half life.

This is a highly complex task when one thinks about the temperature gradients produced over the non-uniform structure. Besides these problems the static nature of the problem must be considered. The center of mass must be calculated and strengthened so that the structure will stay in stable equilibrium, while thermodynamic activity occurs. I could go on discussing such things as the proper ice molecule structure to use for maximum half life and strength but space does not allow.

As to sociological problems, the new structure in the community soon becomes widely noticed-as one such structure did last winter on campus. The elders debate the aesthetics while the children plot its premature destruction. Among the children a social structure developes-groups form and leaders are picked to implement the destruction. Hostility developes between the creators and these gangs now to be called the destroyers. Soon chaos comes over this sub-community and war breaks out. However, the war soon ends, due to thermodynamic processes taking place on the children's clothes covered with snow. Colds break out and the problem of snowman building has transformed itself into a problem for the infirmary.

Campus Hero

To The Editor:

One question for you, editor. Why don't you add a pertinent comic strip to our paper? For instance, the only pertinent comic strip in the world, your favorite and mine, Doonesbury. I don't think it is too much to ask from "New England's Largest College Daily" to put this larger than life campus hero into your limited entertainment section. It is time for UMass to unite! Give me DOONESBURY or give me death!

Speedreading

To The Editor:

It is my understanding that Speedreading is a time saving method of covering more material with better comprehension and retention.

Presently on campus there is available only the Evenlyn Wood Dynamic reading course which has a price tag of $195. At each of the 12 mini-lessons offered by the Evenlyn Wood instructors, 50 or more students showed up. However less than 10% of those people were willing or able to pay the high fee.

The University, as verified by the registrars and scheduling offices, does not offer speedreading.

Approximately 600 students expressed their interest in Speedreading by attending one of the sneak-preview mini-lessons.

Why doesn't the University introduce such a course to its curriculum. The student interest is obvious, otherwise the Evelyn Wood course wouldn't be back for its third semester.

About T.A. Contracts

To The Editor:

In approximately eight weeks, an annual scramble will begin among the graduate student body. It's not a pretty process, and the result of the enormous grabbag is that some graduate students will have Teaching Associateships, some will have Service Assistantships and some will have Research Assistantships. Is there a difference? Yes indeed! Because of a number of complaints by graduate students, the Graduate Student Senate has done some preliminary investigations and the following facts have been uncovered which we feel should be passed on to those most affected.

TEACHING ASSOCIATESHIPS are awarded on the basis of teaching experience to the senior members of a graduate program or to an outstanding graduate and are funded from the "01" category. This means that the position can only be used for teaching. The contract is a one year contract which is not necessarily renewable.

TEACHING ASSISTANTSHIPS are also awarded for direct teaching-related activities, or teaching, and may include lab supervision or grading. The funding source for T.A.'s is "03", one of the most vulnerable categories in the budgeting system. Because of the critical nature of the budget, the assistantships often split into halves or quarters for reasons ranging from "spreading the wealth", to those involving the number of hours of work expected. These assistantships may be awarded annually or by semester, and the contracts are not necessarily renewable. All other duties which are not teaching related are supposedly delegated as SERVICE ASSISTANTSHIPS, but since there is little money allocated directly for that purpose, the S.A.'s and the T.A.'s are often lumped together, resulting in a great deal of confusion among the graduate body.

RESEARCH ASSISTANTS are the most vulnerable and generally the lowest paid of the lot. The funding for these positions is through the grants awarded to various faculty members and all control of work conditions, salary, and so on, lies with the Principle Investigator of the grant. The University does not fund this category; it only administers payment for expenditures from the grant trust fund.

CONTRACTS: Contracts are useless unless the people signing understand them, so look at yours carefully. There is virtually no protection for the employee who needs it, and little more for the administration which often relies on sheer power for arbitration. The only protection afforded the employee is that if he/she is terminated midcontract, he/she is entitled to due process regarding that termination. At the present time there is no established appeal procedure for such cases. Most disputes are settled within the department and the T.A. in case either leaves quietly or tries an occasional appeal through the Ombudsman, the Dean of the Graduate School, or the Provost (if one is persistent enough.) There is no process of "proof of good progress" or "Good academic standing", and there is a very unstable means of establishing "satisfactory performance of assigned duties". Another pitfall of the contract itself is the "starred area" listing the hours of work and the duties expected within the contract. In most cases this agreement is obtained only verbally and if disagreement or conflict arises there is no basis for resolution. It is the intent of the Graduate Senate to call for reforms within this hiring structure and to attempt to establish guidelines for appeal as well as employment protection under general conditions. Since these actions affect a large number of Graduate Students, don't let us make your decisions! Contact your Senator or the Senate office (Room 110 CC: 545-0970) and share both good and bad experiences and make yourself heard. Help us and yourself. Eliminate de facto decision making and fait accompli governance.

The UMass Wind Ensemble will be performing Sunday, March 4 in Bowker Auditorium, at 8:30 P.M. The program will include the Charles Catel "Overture in C" and "Mozart's Serenade No. 12".

Wind Ensemble To Perform Sunday

An evening of music for wind instruments will be presented by the UMass Wind Ensemble Sunday, March 4, at 8:30 p.m., in Bowker Auditorium. The concert is open to the public without charge.

The ensemble is conducted by John Jenkins, who recently completed two years of study at the University of Michigan, and newly appointed assistant conductor, Joseph Duchi.

Mr. Duchi, instructor of low brass at UMass, received his degrees at the University of Michigan, and has played first trombone in the 5th Army Band, Fort Sheridan, Chicago. He has played in the Chicago Civil Orchestra and is a member of the Springfield Symphony Orchestra.

The concert will open with the Charles Catel "Overture in C". Also on the program is "Mozart's Serenade No. 12" in C minor. This piece differs from most serenades in that it is canonic in construction. It was commissioned during the same period in which Mozart was composing the "Haffner" Symphony.

Dorothy Ornest, soprano, is featured in the Warren Benson "Shadow Wood", a contemporary piece which uses as text, five poems by Tennessee Williams, from the collection "In the Winter of Cities".

Concluding the program will be Bernard Rogers' "Three Japanese Dances", written in three movements, the second of which will feature Miss Ornest.

Brooke: '76 Bid Is Possible

WASHINGTON (AP)—Sen. Edward W. Brooke, R-Mass., said it is possible, but not too likely that two Massachusetts senators will be running for President in 1976.

"I'm sure my senior colleague, Ted Kennedy, can probably get the Demicratic nomination if he wants it," Brooke said. "I don't think that I could get the Republican nomination merely by wanting it. I have said, however, that I don't rule out myself as a possibility."

Brooke said he thought Vice President Spiro Agnew would be a candidate, as well as "several of my colleagues here in the Senate. And there may be some governors and others who just don't come to mind at the present time."

He said; "I really think it is too soon to say what the Republican party will do in 1976. We're certainly not going to give it to the Democrats by default."

The Massachusetts Republican said he remained on good terms with President Nixon, although he often disagrees with him.

"I disagree without being disagreeable," he said, "because that's my style. And the President understands that I speak my own mind.

Brooke added, "I expect to be even more outspoken in national Republican politics in the next four years than I have been in the past."

Brooke made his comments on a Washington television station program Sunday.

Five Deaths Blamed On Suicide Pact

BOSTON (AP)—At least five deaths in Marblehead since 1969 were the result of a suicide pact among young drug users, the Boston Herald American reported in a copyrighted story Tuesday.

The paper said seven persons were included in the pact. Police Capt. John W. Wheeler said five young men either shot or hanged themselves in the past three years, according to the report. The death of a sixth person associated with the group has been ruled accidental.

Wheeler said, "I don't think there is a suicide pact. There's no evidence of such. There were suicides, but anything about a pact is entirely unknown to me."

Wheeler declined to identify the youths referred to in the Herald American story because of relatives.

He said a "follow the crowd" phenomenon among the young group could have had something to do with the deaths.

An unidentified relative of one of the victims believes that suicides are "becoming a fad" in the North Shore yachting town, the paper reported.

"There's a suicide pact in town. The people here don't realize the problem. They say it will never happen here," the paper quoted the relative.

The police know there are going to be at least two more suicides. I know there is a suicide pact, because the latest victim told my brother only two weeks ago what was prearranged," the paper reported the relative said.

The paper said Dr. J. Robert Shaughnessy, Essex County medical examiner, refused comment on the deaths because the "reports are not public information."

The paper said it learned that three of the youths hanged themselves, two others shot themselves and a sixth suffocated while sniffing a spray in a plastic bag.

OEO Employees File Suit

WASHINGTON (AP)—Suits were filed in U.S. District Court Monday seeking to stop the Nixon administration from dismantling the Office of Economic Opportunity and to obtain release of $113.5 million in impounded antipoverty funds.

The three suits were filed by groups of OEO employes, their labor unions, several nonprofit OEO community action agencies and individual persons.

They charge the administration with "blatantly exceeding the powers given by the U.S. Constitution."

Howard J. Phillips, acting director of OEO and Roy L. Ash, director of the Office of Management and Budget, are named as defendants.

The suits were filed as a result of the administration's intention to end federal funding of OEO's community action and legal services programs, and to shift other programs to other agencies by July 1.

They raise a basic issue that has been agitated for months—the alleged usurpation and denial by the executive branch of government of programs enacted by Congress and presumably mandated by the legislative branch to be carried out.

One suit filed by Thomas P. Powers, an attorney representing 12 groups of individuals, said that at no time has the President or any member of the executive branch submitted to Congress the plan to abolish the OEO as it said would be required by law.

The suit seeks to enjoin permanently the Nixon administration from taking any further steps toward abolishing OEO and from refusing to instate all appropriated funds. It also seeks to reinstate employes fired in the cutback and stop further firing.

It also asks that a plan for full expenditure of appropriated funds be submitted by May 1 and that all community action agencies receive their normal annual fundings.

Group Auto Insurance OK'd

BOSTON (AP)—Insurance Commissioner John G. Ryan announced today he has approved for the first time in Massachusetts history a plan for group sale of auto insurance at reduced rates.

The plan, to be written by the Travelers Indemnity Co., provides for reductions of 4 per cent in rates for compulsory coverage, 11 per cent on other liability coverage and 16 per cent on collision coverage.

Group insurance will principally be sold to employes groups where the employer will deduct premiums from payrolls, but reductions will be available to any person insuring with the company, said Ryan.

Ryan also announced reduced auto insurance rates for four other companies, including "bumper discounts" of as much as 20 per cent for new model cars with improved bumpers. Ryan said he was "pleased we are beginning to see some competition in auto insurance rates."

'Short And Furry' Is In

By ANN HENCKEN
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP)-Short and furry-that's the jacket style which has been a boon to the business, a blessing to many customers' budgets and a smash hit with the young crowd.

"The fur industry is elated that so many young people are buying furs for the first time. They are more of them than I can ever remember," says Henry Block, president of QMB Furs, Inc., who like other furriers, reports a 20 to 25 per cent increase in business during the winter season.

The young have bought short furs this year, particularly fox chubbies and battle jackets in furs such as raccoon paw and rabbit. With a new sporty styling, the jackets go well over ever-popular pants and are often sold at affordable prices, in the $50 to $500 range.

"A lot of young women want a fur jacket that doesn't remind them of their mothers," says Constantino Christie, co-owner of Christie Bros.

At Alexanders Dpet. store in New York, leather-trimmed short rabbit jackets have been selling very well since Christmas at $49. So have $185 fox paw styles and mink baseball jackets at $299.

Many companies reported stocking winter lines with 30 to 35 per cent short furs, a big jump over the previous season.

"Today, the jacket's coming so strong, we believe that by spring and next fall, some 50 per cent of business will come from jackets," says Christie.

For spring, the range of styles will continue to increase. The American fur industry, an organization of fur retailers and manufacturers, from across the country, has had some 13 new jacket patterns made up and offered to the trade, including fur pea jackets, blazers, vests, short chubbies, smocks, western shirts and baseball jackets.

POWs Given 'Slanted' News

By MARY SCHEIER
Associated Press Writer

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP)- The wife of a former war prisoner says her husband's captors kept the POW's abreast of major news stories even if the presentation was a "little slanted."

Mrs. Eileen Cormier of Bay Shore, N.Y., said her husband, S.M. Sgt. Arthur Cormier, 38, "does not seem to be as surprised as I would have expected him to be by everything that happened" since he was shot down over North Vietnam in November, 1965.

Cormier, a 19-year career man with the Air Force, arrived at Westover Air Force Base near here on Feb. 17 and has been undergoing medical checkups, intelligence debriefings and counseling.

Mrs. Cormier said Tuesday that her husband told her the North Vietnamese told the prisoners the major events in the news. He also said "there was some limited information disseminated among the camps North Vietnamese. And new prisoners would come into the camps and they would all exchange information," said Mr. Cormier.

She said her husband enjoyed showing the family the spoon and cup he ate from in North Vietnam, his navy blue prison outfit and pictures he received from his family while he was a prisoner.

Cormier told his wife he was in several different prisons and subsisted on a diet of pumpkin soup and cabbage soup.

"He says he doesn't want to see any cabbage soup for a long time," his wife added.

Mrs. Cormier said her husband told her he tried to stay in the middle when other POW's had differences of opinion. He also said he hopes action by former POW's against other returnees who allegedly conspired with the Communists "would be kept to a minimum."

On the question of torture, Mrs. Cormier said, "He indicated there were some very bad moments. But I have shied away from talking about that."

Cormier said there were times when he had trouble keeping his hopes up "but he was able to surmount it. He is a religious man. His letters have have always been strong," she said.

WHY STAY IN PARIS?

Take in the Mona Lisa at the Louvre and the night life on the Left Bank. But, why stay in Paris? There's a France beyond Paris just waiting for you to come visit. Villages and towns steeped in art and history. Vineyards, castles, Alpine spas and beaches made famous by bikinis.

And the best way to get there is by train.

Where in France will the French trains take you? Almost anywhere.

Only four hours separate Paris from Strasbourg. But be careful. Once you've walked its medieval streets, lined by timbered houses, you may never want to return to the glass and concrete of the modern city.

Just two and one-half hours from Paris is Dijon. One of the renowned gastronomic capitals of the world. Buy an extra bottle of white wine there with the money you've saved eating cafeteria-style on the train.

French trains are known throughout the world for their comfort, speed and punctuality.

They're also known as a great place to get to know the people. It's easy to start a conversation in the relaxed atmosphere of a train. Even if you've barely passed second-year French, or German or Spanish. For trains are really the Continental way of travel.

You can eat on a French train. Read on a French train. Sleep on a French train. Dream on a French train. And you'll find French trains surprisingly economical, too. Particularly when you take advantage of the new 2nd Class Student-Railpass.

Whether you buy your tickets as you go, or a 1st Class Eurailpass or new 2nd Class Student-Railpass before you go, you'll save more by seeing your travel agent. Or nearest French National Railroad ticket office. For reservations: French National Railroads, 610 Fifth Avenue, New York 10020; 11 East Adams Street, Chicago 60603; 9465 Wilshire Blvd., Beverly Hills 90212; 323 Geary St., San Francisco 94102; 2121 Ponce de Leon Blvd., Coral Gables 33134. Also in Toronto and Montreal.

Please send me your literature describing places to see in France other than Paris.

Bangladesh star Ali Akbar Khan, playing the sarod, will appear in concert in Bowker auditorium Thursday evening at 8.

India's Ali Akbar Khan To Perform On Sarod

Ali Akbar Khan, often considered India's greatest sarod player, will be featured in concert in Bowker Auditorium Thursday evening, March 1, at 8.

Joining Ali Akbar Khan on this occasion will be Zakir Hussain, tabla and tanpura accompaniment. This program is part of the 1972/73 Fine Arts Council Third World Cultural Series presented in conjunction with the University's Third World Alliance.

Ali Akbar Khan's family traces its ancestral tradition tb Tansen, a court musician of Akbar, Moghul Emperor of the 16th Century. His father, the 110-year-old Dr. Allauddin Kahn, who became the chief disciple of Wazir Khan, a direct descendant of Tansen, is often acknowledged as the greatest figure in North Indian music in this century. Khan is one of the many celebrated musicians tutored by his father, and in his early thirties was given the title of Ustad, the Persian word meaning "master musician".

Ali Akbar Khan has been invited to perform at many of the world's leading music festivals including those in Edinburgh, Tokyo, Newport, Monterey. With his brother-in-law, the distinguished sitarist Ravi Shankar, Ali Akbar Khan performed in the Madison Square Garden concert for Bangla Desh.

Ali Akbar Khan's concert will feature a program of traditional evening ragas. Tickets are available to UMass undergraduates at $1 and to the general public at $1.50 and may be obtained by contacting the UMass Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall in Amherst, telephone 545-0202.

Gay Counseling Offered

A counseling service for the gay community at UMass has been initiated by the Community Resources Center in Hampden Activities Center. The purpose of this counseling service is to augment the services offered by the Student Homophile League, particularly in the Southwest area.

Nancy Schroder, the coordinator of this service, and a doctoral student at the School of Education, has identified several needs of the gay student. "The primary need is to have counselors available in the community who are gay themselves. Too often a counseling relationship is disrupted or never begun because the heterosexual counselor is unable to relate to the student's homosexual experience."

For the student who is uncertain about the direction of his or her sexuality, a gay counselor can clarify the gay experience by discussing some of the problems and some of the rewards of choosing to be a lesbian or homosexual.

The Community Resource Center is open 9 a.m.-8 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 9 a.m.-5 p.m. Friday. Nancy will be there Monday afternoons and Thursday evenings. Call 545-2416, 545-2892.

Colloquia Open To SW Residents

Bob Zeiman, M.A. in philosophy, will be teaching five one-credit colloquia in the Southwest area. They will meet each night in Room One John Adams Lobby at 8 p.m.

They will meet on the following nights: Wed. Feb. 28, Psychic Phenomena; Thurs., March 1, Philosophy of Love (Emotional, physical, spiritual aspects of love); Sun., March 4, Casteneda's "Don Juan"; Mon., March 5, Novels of H. Hesse; Tues., March 6, Writings of R. D. LAing.

For the time being the classes will be open to only Southwest residents. For more information call S.W. Academic Affairs Office at 545-2803.

Boston Police Oppose Bill For Citizen Review Boards

BOSTON (AP)—Police spokesmen and others opposed a bill by Sen. Jack H. Backman, D-Brookline, Monday that citizen police review boards be created in the cities and towns.

Backman said that if communication was increased, he believes policemen would gain respect from the people.

Francis Landers of the Massachusetts Police Association and Robert Wise of the Boston Police Patrolmen's Association, told the state house hearing before the Committee on Public Safety they were opposed. Landers said review boards have been created in a number of places, but that they weren't successful.

Boston Councillor Albert L. O'Neil called the idea of such boards "worn out liberalism," and said many of the people pushing for them were lawbreakers who had served time and now wanted to be on boards.

Backman also supported another bill he filed, which would give cities and towns of more than 50,000 population state reimbursements for 60 per cent of the cost of adding foot patrolmen.

Why the good neighbor makes so much small talk.

A baby's born in Denver. But Dad's not out in the waiting room. He's in the Army, half a world away.

And that's when The American Red Cross—America's Good Neighbor—gets involved in small talk. Because we think it's important that good news travel fast. So out of our message center in Washington, D.C., we relay messages by the thousands to servicemen everywhere. 24 hours a day. And of course we do it free.

Maybe there's no serviceman in your family, and this is help you'll never need. But it represents just what Red Cross is all about.

We like to think of the American Red Cross as a hometown affair. That's why you find us doing different things for different people in different hometowns.

We're what you need us to be. Whoever you are. Wherever you are.

And isn't that what a Good Neighbor is all about?
Be a good neighbor.
Help The Good Neighbor.

the good neighbor.
The American Red Cross

"Acid": The Good And The Bad

People have both good and bad trips. Sometimes its "bad acid" and sometimes it's a bad time. Sometime it's cosmic and stoned and sometimes you really get it on or together, and of course, sometimes it's more of a mixture of the two or even worse, nothing happens at all.

At Room To Move this semester we are offering a psychedelic-oriented evening to discuss any problems or troubling questions you might have with regard to psychedelic drug use. Our main purpose here is to help you to better integrate LSD-type experience with a healthy everyday lifestyle.

This is by no means intended as encouragement for taking drugs, rather to let you know that if you have any loose ends, we are available and open to offering any help we can. The design of our evening will be as a follow-up during which, hopefully, you may come a little closer to understanding yourself and to make more sense out of experiences you have had or continue to have.

More importantly, if you have been concerned that, for example, you have not "come-down" from a trip you had two months ago or are having any unusual experiences which you believe may be related to prior drug use, please feel free to visit us and talk over these experiences. There is as much myth surrounding the flashback as there is fact; this is due for the most part, to bad press and political persuasion.

We will write about flashbacks in a later article in more detail. If you are concerned about a friend who is having any trouble with drug use and would like to consult and share your concern with us, do so. Also, if you've had any "far out" trips of "peak experiences" either while on or off drugs and would be willing to share that experience either in person or in writing we would greatly appreciate it because it helps us in our understanding of the spaces that people get into.

Room To Move is at the Student Union, on the Hatch level and is open daily from 9 A.M. to 12 A.M., we are on call nights at 545-0400. Our psychedelic-evening is held Mondays from 7:30 until 10:30.

Selectmen Endorse Citizen Participation

The Amherst Board of Selectmen, in an effort to assure widespread opportunities for citizen participation in local government, has produced a citizen activity form on which to volunteer for appointment to town committees.

There are nearly twenty permanent appointed boards and committees in Amherst plus numerous ad hoc committees. They encompass the alphabet from the Ambulance Committee to the Zoning Board of Appeals and cover such diverse subjects as libraries, finance, conservation, landlord-tenant relationships, discrimination, planning, and the elderly.

The Board urged all citizens who would be interested in serving on a committee to fill out a form and mail it to Town Hall. While the filing of a form in no way assures appointment, the Selectmen and other appointing authorities do consider every name on file.

Forms are available in the lobby of Town Hall, at the Munson, Jones and North Amherst libraries, at Hastings Store, in the lobby of Converse Hall at Amherst College, the main desk of the library at Hampshire College and the Information desk in the lobby of the Campus Center at the university.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Virgo is analytical, can be shrewd, is often self critical and has enough sense to be aware of diet, vitamin intake and health in general. Virgo has a sincere desire to be of service, does not tolerate being pushed, is capable of loving and living life to the hilt. Virgo displays a unique kind of respect for Leo, can make money with Libra, is drawn in a mysterious manner to Pisces, harmonizes with Taurus, Capricorn, Cancer and Scorpio. Natives of this sign must exercise caution in dealing with Sagittarius and Gemini. Virgo earns more money in 1973 and September should be an outstanding month.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Emphasis is on advancement, gain, fulfillment of ambition. You gain now by building for future. Includes real estate, home improvement. You may have to take some risks. But ultimate results could work in your behalf.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You get green light in connection with travel, publishing, advertising. You may be called upon to create special program designed for television. Whatever the specifics, your views will be communicated to large numbers of persons.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Power play could be featured. Let others know you are not without allies. Protect yourself in clinches. Accept added responsibility—but get paid for it. Stop playing games. State your case, your requirements. Then you earn respect and profit.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Refuse to be pushed, rushed, cajoled or chided into impulsive act. Finish current project. Don't make premature start. Strive to make your position more understandable. Insist on better distribution deal.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Stress independence, originality. You are able to get basics into operation. Those who perform special services will come through if you set example. Don't let down on quality. One who challenges you is merely testing.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Love, emotional responses are spotlighted. Relations with those who mean most to you are accented. Nothing occurs halfway. It is all or nothing. Know it and don't play games. Basic change is due to occur. You get news in surprising manner.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Roadblock is removed. You can be more active and happier. If single, question of marriage is featured. Married or single, you will be concerned with co-operative effort. It is apt to be double harness. Review situation and get used to it.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Shake-up due. Sagittarius could be involved. There is movement—there are messages and calls. Cycle indicates activity and unusual dealings with neighbors, relatives. One you took for granted performs great service.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You gain by following through on hunch. Sense of timing is sharply honed. Speculative venture succeeds. There is excitement and also a romantic aura. Accent is on change, variety, possible travel and communication with attractive member of opposite sex.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Get going. Be a self-starter. Push ahead by taking initiative. Start something. Begin anew. Taurus, Libra persons play prominent roles. One who made promise in past now makes genuine effort to fulfill it.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Have confidence in your beliefs, convictions. One who doubts and wants to shake you is jealous. Give yourself some quiet moments for purpose of meditating. Throw off foolish doubts, fears.

JV Skaters Top Div. I Eagles

By JAY LUPPOLD

The J.V. Hockey squad, coming off two big wins this past week (Harvard and Boston St.), continued their winning ways Saturday afternoon at Orr Rink when they humbled the Eaglets from Boston College, 5-3. The game was close all the way, with the aggressive hustle of UMass providing the difference.

The first period saw some excellent goaltending at both ends of the ice from Jeff McReynolds of UM and Bill McManama of B.C. both making several outstanding stops.

Scoring finally opened at 18:50 of the second period when Steve Dee took a pass from Jim Lyons and beat three men for the score. Steve Mason made it 2-0 at 10:11 on a picture-play shorthanded goal. He took the face off in his own end and just outraced everyone.

Boston College hit the scoring column at 18:01 when Bill Ahearn took advantage of a traffic jam in front, and tipped the puck past McReynolds.

At 1:35 of the third period the Eaglets penetrated the Minuteman defense and Rick Ragazio evened things up at 2-2. UMass came right back less than three minutes later at 4:12. Mason tallied a second time combining with Neil Drawbridge and Bill Mintiens for the go ahead goal, but the Boston boys were not to be denied. At 14:01 Steve Goodwin tied things up when the UMie defense couldn't clear the zone.

However, Donny Reddick provided the game winner at 16:06 scoring on a 25-footer which McManama never saw. 51 seconds later, Wayne Douglas stole the puck at the BC blue line and lit the light for an unassisted goal, to give the Minutemen a little breathing room.

After the game, Coach Russ Kidd said, "It's great to beat BC-on any level." He was especially pleased with the third line of Mason, Reddick, and Matt Devine, which accounted for three goals. Kidd said, "We just put that line together, and they've worked out great."

Sports Round-up

Skiers Osborne Champs; Tune For Invitationals

By MDC STAFF

Saturday morning was bright, clear and relatively warm at 32 degrees. In the Greater Boston area no snow could be seen anywhere and it was a spring-like day as the UMass team traveled Route 128 to Prospect Hill in Waltham. No cars with skis were seen until the parking lot at Prospect Hill where the entire ski area was reserved for the race. The lumpy man-made glacier on Prospect Hill shared the distinction of other small ski areas in the Boston area of having the only snow in 50 miles and it was mostly ice.

Two slalom courses were set on the steep, icy, bumpy terrain for the Boston College race on Saturday. Co-Capt. Kurt Syer had the best run on the hill on the easier, faster, red course but was disqualified on his second run on the harder, blue course. Dick McWade fell on both courses and did not finish. Frosh Ed Ahearn had two good runs to finish third behind Bob Morrow of Northeastern and Steve Fowler of BU. Dave Dube of Amherst was fourth and Tim Tague of UMass was fifth. Larry Peck was 15th and Co-Capt. Dave Rutter was 18th.

On the strange lumpy carpet of white surrounded by bare ground, UMass finished first with a four man team time of 313.2 seconds for the two runs of slalom. Northeastern was second with 316.2, Amherst was third with 360.9 and BU had a disastrous 405.8. Other teams in the order of finish were Tufts, UConn, AIC, Princeton, BC and Bentley. The BC time of 500.4 was hard to understand since they practice four nights a week at Prospect Hill.

On Sunday the weather was warm and friendly, but Ulla, the god of skiers, smiled on Amherst while kicking the hell out of UMass. Ken Biederman of BU was first, Bob Morrow of NU was second, Steve Fowler of BU was third and Dick McWade of UMass was fourth. The only other good finish for UMass was Ben Ferris' ninth.

Amherst College had an outstanding day with almost everyone doing well. Mark Brown was close behind McWade with a fifth place while Dave Dube was sixth and Duncan Kerst tied for 10th. Amherst skied themselves into the New England Intercollegiate Ski Conference Championship Race while UMass almost fell out of first place in the divisional standings. Prospect Hill proved to be a large mountain for UMass.

Kurt Syer and Larry Peck fell, Steve Tonelli did not finish, Ed Ahearn disqualified, and Tim Tague had trouble. Fortunately, the large lead built up in the early part of the season on big mountains managed to carry the Minutemen through its disastrous contact with the little hill one mile off Route 128 in Boston, and they will go to the NEISC Championships along with Amherst, NU and BU.

The next series of races for the UMass Ski Team will be the combined NEISC Championships and the National Intercollege Alpine Tournament Races at Wildcat and Cranmore from March 7 to 11. Six top teams from ski leagues outside New England will race against the best ten teams from the New England Intercollege Ski Conference in this invitational event.

For the fourth straight year the ski team has finished first in the Osborne Division of NEISC. This year they had 746.9 percentage points for the season while NU had 736.1; Amherst, 725.1; BU, 724.9; BC, 671.7; Tufts, 668.6; AIC, 641.2; Bentley, 604.2 and Princeton 603.9. The team will spend the next weekend tuning up for the league and invitational championship at Haystack Mt. in Vermont.

JV Gymnasts Down Statees In N.H.

By MDC STAFF

On Saturday afternoon the junior varsity women's gym team travelled to Keene, New Hampshire and easily handled both Keene State and Boston State. UMass scored 78.95 while Boston totalled 53.70 and Keene a mere 46.90 points. The strong JV performance was led by freshman Alicia Goode who won the all-around and the vaulting event. Candy Gross turned in some nice routines to take second in the all-around and first on the balance beam. Marion Kulick won the floor exercise event with Alicia and Candy placing second and third respectively. Diane Meltzer placed second in vaulting and newcomer Nancy Manning finished fourth. The bars event was won by Gail McCarthy and Candy and Alicia followed. On the beam Alicia was second and Jill King finished third.

The next final junior varsity meet of the season is tonight in the Boyden auxiliary gym at 7:00. The team hosts a perennially weak Westfield State team. Just a reminder that the next varsity meet is Saturday night at 7:30 against Springfield College. That meet is also in the Boyden auxiliary gym.

Northeastern Silenced, 80-69

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

Amid the chants of "NIT" resounding through the Cage, UMass took care of business and silenced Northeastern 80-69 last night.

The victory ran the streak to eleven straight to strengthen the claim that the Minutemen deserve a bid to a national tournament. Since the upset of Penn at the Palestra, the hoopsters have silenced all foes to establish themselves as number 2 in New England. That makes the string 14 of 16 with only losses to nation's number six and fourteenth teams (Providence and Syracuse).

A drum roll followed by a standing ovation for close to two minutes greeted the newly crowned Yankee Conference champs. The Minutemen came on tough to relinquish any thoughts of Huskies as NIT material. And in one of their best performances of the year, the cagers outdefensed and outshot the beleaguered Huskies.

The sophs, Bill Endicott and John Murphy, started the offensive display. Endicott started the point parade with his swishes from the corner (three of the first four UMass buckets) and then Murphy showed the home crowd his Penn-style (named ECAC player of the week in that bench performance) by sinking six in a row and 8 of 9 in the first half. His only miss was a stumbling throw from somewhere near the center the Amherst nearing the end of the half.

Murphy had 17, while Endicott had 10 to put the UMass halftime lead at fifteen (41-26). The story was more than just a bombing. Al Skinner satisfied himself with 3 for 3 in the bucket department and gleefully awaited the second half. Rick Pitino contented himself with bringing the ball up the floor against the sticky Huskie defense and chalked up five assists (7 for the game).

But more than that, it was defense. Northeastern which was eleventh in the country in that department was shown the true meaning of the word by the Minutemen. Mark Jellison, the leading Huskie scorer averaging close to 20 points a game, was held to only 1 bucket in the first half by Endicott and his shadow (Murphy) who blocked two attempts that Endicott missed.

Coach Leaman said this afterwards about Endicott, "People overlook his defense, because he is such a dynamic offensive player with his 25-foot shots. He forced Jellison to his left all night and he didn't score until late in the game."

Endicott finished with 8 of 13 from the floor and 20 points, while Jellison was 3 for 16 and 12 points.

The other part of the soph duo, Murphy matched Endicott's total exactly, hitting 9 of 12 from the field, in only twenty-four minutes of play in a relief role.

The Huskies were still in the game, with the fine play of frosh guard John Clark (18 points and 6 rebounds), until Skinner took matters into his own hands. With about 10 minutes to go, the man with the moves began to move.

After a free throw, Skinner hit a layup against press. A few seconds later, he stole the ball for another easy one. This was followed by a jumper from the top of the key. The last of a string of nine, was a behind the back feed from Tom McLaughlin for a layup and a standing ovation.

"I've finally convinced them now that defense is important," said a happy coach in response to why the win streak? The Minutemen hit a torrid 61.8% of their field goal attempts and limited the Huskies to 43.3% of their attempts.

The NIT hopes of NU have been quashed. UMass is undoubtedly number two in New England and deserving!

Players Look To NIT Bid

By EARLE BARROLL

We've heard it from the coach, ditto the writers and finally after last night's game with Northeastern the players had their own N.I.T. forum in a victorious locker room setting.

Captain Tom McLaughlin, whose roots are deep in New York tradition, knows all too well the politics involved in the selection process. He also knows that Big Apple exposure for the Minutemen has been nil. He also knows that UMass in its last trip to the N.I.T. was humbled by North Carolina.

"But," he said, "this team is as good as any team in the top twenty in the country except for U.C.L.A. and North Carolina State (ranked one and two). It is definitely the best team I've played on and I was on the team with Julius two years back."

McLaughlin on a positive note, though, explained that Pete Carlissimo, the Fordham A.D., who heads the selection committee is very much on the side of UMass being that his brother Frank was an assistant hoop coach to Digger Phelps at the Bronx school while his entire family is close, period, to Carlissimo.

Not only does Rick Pitino want to play in the mid-March Classic, he wants victory and nothing less. "I just don't want to go," he said while neatly placing his deep blue "Clyde" hat onto his flambouyant self. "I want to win. It's home for me (he's from Oyster Bay, L.I.). This will be the finest team to be put into the N.I.T. and it has the best chance of winning some games."

When questioned about the possibility of facing Maryland in the opening round, Al Skinner defiantly stated, "Get us down there and see." The junior forward from West Hempstead, L.I., who Jack Leaman has compared to the Knick's Walt Frazier at similar stages of development went on to say, "We figured before the season began that we'd go to the N.I.T.

"Of course we ran into early season problems but right now we have a good streak going. We have a great deal of confidence in ourselves and we definitely deserve to go. If we get there we'll make a good showing."

For appearing at the N.I.T. all the participants, win or lose, get a watch with "N.I.T." inscribed on the face. Why does Chuck Olsen then want a tourney bid? "I need a new watch, that's why." O.K., Olie!!

Skaters vs. Yale Tonight

By NICK POLANO

The regular portion of the 1972-73 UMass hockey season ends tonight when the Minutemen take on the Bulldogs of Yale University at the Springfield Civic Center. Game time is 8 p.m.

The Minutemen have yet to beat a Division I team this season and the Elis are one of those animals. Yale is an improved team and should give UMass a rough time. Last year the Elis handed the then Redmen their first defeat of the season in a 5-4 thriller at New Haven.

Tonight's game will mark the home debut of Springfield native John Kiah, who was thrust into a starting role when Peter Erickson and then Chick Rheault were injured, is a legendary goaltending star in the Springfield area thanks to a great high school career. However, Kiah has never played at the brand new Civic Center.

The Minuteman have already been awarded the second seed in the post-season playoffs, so a win or loss either way to this Div. I team will not affect their playoff position. However, it would mark the first time in at least three years that a UMass team would have failed to have beaten a Div. I team.

Game time at the Civic Center is 8 p.m. and the game will be broadcast on WMUA.

J.V.'s Trip NU, 77-76

By WALLY CLARK

The Northeastern JV's showed up fifteen minutes late for their tussle with the UMass junior Minutemen and by the end of the game they must have wished they didn't show up at all. The Minutemen nipped the baby Huskies 77-76.

A driving layup by Greg Duarte with 1:35 left in the game broke a 74-74 tie and put the Minutemen ahead to stay. The UMass "man of the hour" then came back with a key rebound to preserve the lead. Rick Boron was fouled with 26 seconds left and went to the line with a chance to seal the victory. One free throw was all it took and UMass was home free. A Northeastern jumper with one second to go was all that remained and the Little Minutemen had escaped with a hard- earned victory.

The game was close all the way. Northeastern was in the lead most of the way and continuously forged ahead only to have UMass battle back and make it close. The first half ended with UMass on the short end of a 45-40 score.

Greg Duarte's 35 points and 21 rebounds led all players in those categories while Mike Stokes' 6 assists were also a game high. Paul Walsh lead Northeastern with a fine individual performance of 31 points. The baby Huskies outshot the Minutemen from the floor 42.9% to 35.2% and 80.3% to 73.3% at the line. The margin of victory lay in the fact that UMass out rebounded Northeastern 51 to 33.

It's Been A Long Time Coming

For John Kiah the last four years have read like the script of bad soap opera or a Rodney Dangerfield monologue.

It seems that every imaginable roadblock to a starting job as a goalie for the UMass varsity hockey team has popped up as Kiah tried, and failed, to win himself a regular job between the UMass pipes.

But now, two creaky knees and a freak accident, as well as Kiah's own incredible patience, have made him Number 1.

It looked like it would never happen, because Kiah had become one of those "always a bridesmaid, never a bride" types. He was like the Red Cross—always there to help but not needed very often.

Three years ago the top man was P. J. Flaherty, and Kiah was around with Bruce Crawford and Peter Erickson to back him up. But Flaherty never needed too much backing up and none of the three others saw much game time on the varsity level.

Last year Flaherty was back as top man, and Kiah was still around as a back-up. Crawford and Erickson were gone, and Kiah's new partner was sophomore Chick Rheault. Again, though, Flaherty didn't need much backing up and again Kiah didn't see much ice time with the varsity.

With Flaherty gone, this figured to be Kiah's big chance to win himself the starting job. He had Rheault to contend with and a returning Peter Erickson, but at least this year he figured to have a fighting chance.

That fighting chance turned into a distinct disadvantage when Kiah came down with mononucleosis before training camp and was forced to get a late start from which he apparently couldn't recover.

Thus, the man to win the Number 1 job was Erickson, who performed well until an injury to his already weak knees in practice put him out for the season.

With Erickson's departure, on came Chick Rheault to take the regular spot and play some of the finest goal UMass hockey has ever seen. Kiah had reason to be discouraged and disappointed, and he was. It was apparently his last chance.

But he stuck it out, and with not much more to look forward to than his name in the program, he practiced daily and watched from the bench as Rheault did all the shot-stopping.

And, when Rheault's shoulder and a road had a skirmish, which the road won, John Kiah was it. The Dutch boy with his finger in the hole in the dike.

The situation he's been thrown into is an almost impossible one. His entire career as a Number 1 goaltender will span three, maybe as many as five, games. But what games. He's going to have to be the man in the nets during the Div. II playoffs, as UMass tries to defend its Divisional title.

The playoffs. You talk about pressure, well try this out. You've got your chance, a chance you've waited three years for, and now you're in a situation where if you win the game, you get to play again, and if you lose your college career is over.

Well, John Kiah's a good goalie. He's a tremendous all-around athlete who had a legendary soccer season as a goalie when he was a junior. He can do the job physically and this year he's appeared to tame a temper which, every time he was scored upon, threatened to ruin his whole game. Despite the fact that every time he was scored upon in the Colgate game (which was twice) the partisan crowed chanted "Sieve, Sieve," he's not. He's a good man.

In this incredible hockey season, where every game has been some kind of adventure, where two- thirds of their hockey games have been played on the road, and where two goalies have fallen by the wayside to injuries, none of which was suffered in a game, it seems only just that the one guy who's been a steady, quite part of this mish-mash is carrying the colors when the chips are on the line.

It's Official: You Can Drink Now

Students Throng Bluewall

By MDC STAFF

Students and others under 21 in the UMass area lined up to buy their first legal drinks last night, overcrowding several bars--including the Bluewall in the Campus Center--but causing no serious problems either on or off campus.

Under 21 students began lining up an hour and a half before midnight, when the drinking age was lowered from 21 to 18, outside of the Bluewall bar on the Concourse level of the Campus Center.

Some of the overflow wound up at the Top of the Campus club, where all 90 seats were filled shortly after midnight, with nearly 50 more persons waiting for chairs.

Local bars such as The Pub on North Pleasant St., the Drake on Amity St., and the Chequers on University Drive reported larger than usual crowds. An employee of Chequers said the restaurant had a "full house" and the crowd was "Incredible for a Wednesday night."

Under 21 students at the Bluewall were seated on the under-21 side of a partition shortly before 12:00, when they were gradually allowed into the over-21 section.

With a cover charge of 50¢ and extra bartenders and bouncers on duty, persons were standing at least 15 deep to order at the bar.

Several of the students at the Bluewall said they were not really excited about the age change until a day or two before.

Several Top of the Campus patrons expressed little excitement over their first legal drink. "I'm over 21--I bought the first round and already I regret it," said one.

"When I came up before, you could drink on someone else's card," said one girl as she stepped off the elevators. "I don't think I like this 18-year-old stuff."

The Pub said there were around 30 persons waiting outside the door around midnight, but added they had experienced "no onslaught". The Drake said it was "busier than usual for a Wednesday night," and said "there were people standing around all over the place."

It took a minute to contact the bartender at Quicksilver due to the noise, but when he got to the phone, he said the bar was "mobbed", and added, "I can't talk to you; I'm the only bartender on."

One of the largest local bars, Mike's, could not be reached for comment. The Amherst police department said they knew of no incidents or disturbances related to the drinking age change, as of 12:30.

Campus Center Business Manager, Terry Grinnan, says the Campus Center expects few problems coming from the drinking age change, although several employees of the Campus Center expressed qualms about problems the change might bring up.

Grinnan said yesterday there will be no need for more bouncers in any of the Campus Center drinking spots because he feels the students only want good service with a minimum of hassles. He did say, though, that there might be a small increase in malicious vandalism.

The Center is preparing for a tremendous increase in business by restaffing the Food Services department in the Campus Center and working on plans for a bar in the back of the Hatch in the basement of the Student Union. This bar is expected to be completed by the beginning of the fall semester.

Grinnan said more bands in the Bluewall and Top of the Campus on weekday nights would depend on student demand.

"People are going to be very surprised as to how mature and how few problems the 18-year-old drinker will cause," continued Grinnan, who has previously been involved with introducing liquor to campuses in New York.

Many local officials expressed no serious concern over the change in the drinking age. The Town of Amherst has granted the non-profit Newman Center permission to serve beer and wine in its cafeteria, subject to confirmation by the Alcoholic Beverages Commission.

They started lining up at 10:30, and when the clock struck midnight they crowded 15 deep around the bar, the night the drinking age went down. Area bars reported large crowds, but no unusual problems. (MDC Photo by Pete Manera)

POW Release Seen Soon

SAIGON (AP) — North Vietnam summoned the chiefs of the United States and South Vietnamese delegations to a special meeting Thursday to discuss the release of American prisoners of war. The chief Communist spokesman said more U.S. POWs would be released "perhaps soon, in a few days."

No meeting of the four-party Joint Military Commission had been scheduled for Thursday, but the senior North Vietnamese representative, Maj. Gen. Le Quang Hoa, convened one at 11 a.m. Saigon time--10 p.m. Wednesday EST.

The chief Communist spokesman, Bui Tin, said the North Vietnamese delegation has been ordered by Hanoi "to discuss urgent questions, including the POW release issue."

Tin said Col. Hoang Hoa, a deputy chief of the North Vietnamese delegation, brought new instructions from Hanoi. Hoa had been in Hanoi for nine days, but returned to Saigon on Wednesday afternoon and met with the North Vietnamese delegation.

Tin said he thinks the POW questions can be solved "if the other side--United States--shows good faith."

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House took a guardedly optimistic stance Wednesday in the dispute with Hanoi over the timetable for releasing American prisoners of war.

Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said the United 120 POWs will be released by the end of this week in accordance with the prisoner-release agreement signed in Paris Jan. 27.

But other officials said they could report no solid break-through in the dispute with North Vietnam.

Ziegler also said President Nixon had instructed Secretary of State William P. Rogers, attending the 12-nation Vietnam conference in Paris, "to proceed with the conference as soon as the arrangements for the next phase of the prisoner release are completed."

It was only under questioning that Zeigler acknowledged Rogers would continue to boycott the Paris sessions until all details have worked out for a second-stage prisoner release that Washington argues should already have taken place.

Ziegler, who delayed his daily scheduled news briefing for more than 90 minutes, spoke after Nixon and Henry A. Kissinger, the President's chief Vietnam peace negotiator, received a report from Rogers on a private meeting in Paris with Hanoi's foreign minister Nguyen Duy Trinh.

While saying little about the content of the Rogers-Trinh talk, Ziegler did say the North Vietnamese foreign minister stated his country would release all American prisoners by March 27.

In Paris, a North Vietnamese conference spokesman said Hanoi would stop stalling on prisoner releases only when the Joint Military Commission guarantees the security of its officials stationed in South Vietnamese cities as part of the peace accord.

As he did Tuesday, Ziegler rejected any contention that prisoner releases are contingent on any factor other than the withdrawal of American troops from South Vietnam. On the basis of the withdrawal rate, he said, Hanoi already should have set free more than 120 additional Americans.

The White House spokesman was asked about reports, substantiated by American officials in Saigon and Paris, that the North Vietnamese have set up anti-aircraft missiles in South Vietnam and continue infiltration of troops.

"I don't think anything at all would be served by me discussing these matters from here," he replied.

He said formal truce machinery has been set up to handle such topics.

Neither would Ziegler confirm that American withdrawals from South Vietnam have been halted pending the release of additional prisoners or that clearing of mines from North Vietnamese harbors by the U.S. Navy has been stalled for the same reason.

UMass Re-evaluation Urged

By STEVE FINE

UMass President Robert C. Wood urged the Student Senate last night to re-evaluate UMass as a whole and its own direction in the face of critical evaluations from outside sources.

Wood specifically pointed to the plan to reorganize the education system in Massachusetts, President Nixon's proposed cutbacks in aid to students, and the Board of Higher Education's plan to move toward increased tuition rates.

"What professors did in the 1960's with the radio advances in the social sciences can be compared to scientists involved with the Manhattan Project of the 1940's. I don't believe the next few years will be so accommodating because of the criticism universities will face," he said.

He did say, however, that higher education could find a way and means of defending itself. "My years as President, specifically the next 2 years will be years of accommodation for faculty, administrators and students.

Wood said he hoped a new sense of moral leadership that was a part of Kent State and Southern University would become a part of the student reality today. The 15% of the people who protested under the age of 25, changed the attitudes of 80% of the population," he added.

Attacking President Nixon's proposed budget cuts, Wood said that the program was a social fraud for the middle class student. "Three million dollars will be lost in aid for both undergrads and graduates," he stated.

"This is why next year will be important. We aren't as secure as some of our colleagues in the western part of the country. We'll need the support of the Student Senate this year to help evaluate

Taone Group Delights Audience

By LUIS MANUEL MEDINA

The Taone Group highlighted the first Puerto Rican Protest Music Festival in the Student Union Ballroom yesterday from 12:30 p.m. to 3:00 p.m. before a crowd which a spokesman said was composed of the majority of Latin and Puerto Rican students in the Five-College area.

The Taone Group was formed by a group of Puerto Rican singers last year during the celebration of the "Grito de Lares", which represents for Puerto Rico the beginning of the struggle for the political independence of the island.

All the members of the group belong to the Puerto Rican Socialist Party, and recently returned from a trip to Cuba. Roy Brown Ramirez, a member of the group said that "The trip to Cuba was fantastic. We saw how the new man is built." Ramirez compared Cuban universities with American, saying that "their students work and study. They don't lose their energies."

He added, "The students work in factories, and they work 45 days in agriculture, but many schools are being constructed in the countryside." He said that many of the schools support themselves with their own crops.

Ramirez said that the attitudes of Cuban students are directed to becoming "better human beings" while American students "work for money."

"Cuba is not a puritan society," he said, "but youth doesn't lose so much time like American students in drugs and other ways to escape."

Members of the group include:

--Walter Rodriguez, the director, who was a well-known actor throughout Latin America until he felt that theater and TV had a negative effect on people.

--Antonio Caban, a poet, singer, composer, and guitarist. He says, "We must fight the commercial song, which speaks only of stupidities and doesn't help in the construction of new man."

--Andres Jimenez, who sings Puerto Rican peasant music. He was a migrant farm worker in the United States and became aware of the Puerto Rican political struggle while in Vietnam. He's a student at the University of Puerto Rico.

--Roy Brown Ramirez, a member of the Puerto Rican Party Central Committee, who is the director of Taone Group record production. He has produced two records individually and a third one with the entire group. He has an M.A. in philosophy and a B.A. in Social Sciences from the University of Puerto Rico.

By LUIS MANUEL MEDINA

The reaction of some of the Latin students who attended the Puerto Rican Protest Music Festival include opinions such as: Mr. Mariano Trujillo-Director of the CCEBS Tutorial Component-"Great. Necessary to break down the university monotony." (Magnifico. Necesario para romper la monotonia de la universidad.)

Miss Maria Hernandez-A P.R. freshman, expressed that the concert was great. (Una gran presentacion de la musica de Puerto Rico.) Also she said "that this kind of festival is a good way to give notice about the liberty's struggle of the Puerto Rican country."

"Por el libro"-is the Puerto Rican expression of Lucy Matias, expressing that the concert was perfect. Miss Matias, who is not involved in politics, agreed that the Taone group creates a political awareness among the people.

Amherst Sewage Limitation Imposed

By ED FOGARTY

No further extensions or connections to the existing sewage system will be permitted in the Town of Amherst according to a letter from Thomas C. McMahon, Director of the Massachusetts Water Pollution Control Board. The letter was directed to Allen L. Torrey, Amherst Town Manager.

McMahon said that he recognizes "this will preclude issuance of further building permits."

McMahon cited serious overflowing at the West Street Pumping Station, and inadequate facilities at the present sewage treatment plant as reasons for the denial.

"He (an investigator) finds that overflows are occurring from a manhole located on the gravity line leading through the golf course to the West Street Pumping Station," McMahon said. "He also finds almost continuous overflowing at the treatment plant between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m. during school session."

The West Street Pumping Station is located on Route 116 in South Amherst.

James Smith, Amherst Town Engineer, said a study had been done a "few months ago" and no problem was found at the West Street Pumping Station. "I have no knowledge of any problem" at the West Street Pumping Station, Smith said.

Torrey said, "In my opinion there is no problem with the West Street Pumping Station."

McMahon said that permission to extend the sewage system is "dependent upon design and construction of the new Stanley Street Pumping Station and the design of a new secondary treatment plant."

The present Sewage Treatment Plant is only able to handle 4-million gallons. William Doubleday, Director of Western Mass. Pollution Control Board, said that the treatment plant is overloaded by 1.0 million gallons per day.

Amherst Town Government is presently working to assign a firm to plan a new treatment plant. No firm has been assigned to date. According to Doubleday, final plans for the new plant should have been submitted by Jan. of 1973.

The Stanley Street Plant is overflowing at a rate of 100,000 to 200,000 gallons per day according to Doubleday. The excess sewage is run off into the Amherst College area.

According to Doubleday, the Stanley Street Station should have been completed by last September. Plans for the new station were submitted Feb. 9, 1973, said Torrey.

The Town of Amherst is presently constructing a new pipe line for the station. Without a new pumping station, there will still be overflowing.

In a second letter, McMahon denied permission for the Town to extend the sewage system to serve the controversial Amherst Fields Project. Amherst Fields is a project to be located near the Rusty Scupper restaurant and built by Paparrazo Associates.

William Slegal, Chief of Implementation and Enforcement Section of the Massachusetts Water Pollution Control Board, said that he has not yet received any response from Allen Torrey concerning the problems with the sewage in Amherst.

Free Car Exhaust Testing

Free exhaust emissions testing, checking for hydrocarbons and carbon monoxide in automobile exhaust, will be offered March 2 and 3 at Bill's Service Center, 260 College St. (Rt. 9), Amherst, by Tom Clark, a graduate student at at the University.

Clark, working for his master's thesis on the data analysis of the present conditions of cars, stated that such exhaust testing "will probably be mandatory in the future", adding that it already is in New Jersey and California.

"People are fairly concerned," Clark said, noting that he has previously tested over 200 cars in a single day at Springfield Plaza. He is presently testing vehicles monthly for the telephone company.

Khan In Colonial Lounge

Ali Akbar Khan, the Indian musician appearing in concert this evening (Thursday, March 1) at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium under the auspices of the Fine Arts Council, will also appear in an informal encounter this afternoon at 4 p.m. (Thursday, March 1) in The Colonial Lounge, Student Union. The encounter is open to the public without charge. Ustad Ali Akbar Khan will discuss with students and other interested parties the subject of Indian music.

With the cooperation of the University's India Association, the Fine Arts Council will sponsor an after-concert reception for Ali Akbar Khan on the 10th floor of the Campus Center. These programs are part of the Council's Third World Cultural Series being presented in cooperation with the Third World Alliance.

CC Manager Says:

CC Surplus Premature

By NANCY BASMAJIAN

A report in mid-February of a $300,000-$500,000 surplus of Campus Center funds from previous years was premature, and the nature of the surplus was not clearly defined in the report, according to Terry Grinnan, Manager of the Campus Center.

The report originated in the minutes of the February 14 Campus Center Board of Governors Finance Committee meeting, at which Grinnan was present. At this meeting the Campus Center budgeting process was discussed in relation to the student fee. The question arose of how surplus funds would affect this year's budgeting, and it was mistakenly inferred that Grinnan spoke definitely of such a surplus and of how it might be used.

In an interview, Grinnan clarified the nature of the surplus by saying, "There is no cash surplus available that you can put your fingers on." He expained further that any surplus would be found within the operations of the Campus Center. According to Chairman of the Campus Center Board of Governors, Rich Nelson, it is "cash in different forms," such as book store inventory, debts owed to the Campus Center, and surplus above profits from operations (store, coffee shop, pin ball machines...). Just how much of this surplus would be considered as such, and how much would go back into operation and upkeep, is something that will have to be determined through the budgeting process that will be in process over the next few weeks.

If a surplus of funds is eventually determined, says Nelson, a program would be necessary to decide "how we can best take the money out of the system."

In a letter to Nelson, dated six days after the Finance Committee meeting at which the report originated, Grinnan clarified things by writing, "As to the question of how much of the $300,000 to $500,000 might be available for budgeting as of June 30, I responded that I had no idea--that the budgeting process over the next few weeks would determine that figure accurately and that the Committee and the Board would be instrumental in recommending ways to use any free cash." He said further, "I have never ventured a guess or indicated that any where near the full $300,000-$500,000 would be available."

If a surplus is determined, its possible applications, according to Grinnan, may be in reducing next year's student fee, in new operations, in Student Union renovations, or in subsidy of the added cost of the permanent financing of the CC that will begin in fiscal year 1975.

Gage, Campion Oppose Rent Hikes

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

A proposed rent hike for heads of residence and resident directors is running into considerable opposition from the two men who have the final say over the proposal.

Vice-Chancellors Robert Gage of Student Affairs and Thomas Campion of Administrative Services both have indicated they don't see much merit in a rent increase.

The rent hike, $50 a month for heads of residence and $20 a month for resident directors, was passed Tuesday night by the Student Senate Rents and Fees Committee.

Gage, who said he learned of the proposal in yesterday's Collegian, said he was in "determined opposition" to any increase.

Campion, contacted last night, said that while he would have to consult Gage before making any decision, indicated that monetary return would be too small to justify the possible loss of quality people.

The hike is an effort to increase revenue in the residence hall account, according to Rents and Fees Chairman Mike Gregory. It is one of many areas being investigated by the committee to hold down or eliminate a possible rent hike in the dormitory system.

Gage, calling the heads of residence and resident directors "dedicated workers", said they are paid "little enough for valuable services."

Gage added that a hike might force the University to provide office space for both groups. Presently, he said, they use their apartments as both living quarters and working space. If they had to pay rent equal to off-campus rates, both groups could "justifiably" ask for separate office space, Gage said.

Reaction from the heads and resident directors has been uniformly negative, according to Mike Gregory, who said two called to express their displeasure hours after the meeting ended.

Informed sources have indicated that the heads of residence and resident directors will "be out in force" at a meeting tonight of the committee to push for a repeal of the hike.

Gregory said a motion to reconsider would probably be heard, along with motions to spread the increase out over four years.

At present there are 54 heads of residence and resident directors. The heads of residence, usually married couples, work 12 months and are paid $5,800. The resident directors, usually graduate students, work nine months and are paid $3,500. Presently, both groups pay $30 a month in rent. While salaries have increased with cost-of-living raises over the years, rent rates have remained steady for seven years.

CC Food Head Resigns

By CINDY GONET

Mike Egan, Director of Campus Center Food Services, resigned last week after 3 years at the Campus Center. When asked why he's giving up the position, Egan replied, "I wanted to get into the real world, with real people for a change."

In an interview, Egan stressed that his replacement might most easily be found in his staff.

"For some reason," Egan said, "the Department of Food Services has been very cohesive, which has been stimulated by mutual criticism. A long search for another director could take almost two years. I think it would be best if a successor were in his position by August. A move from the ranks upward would probably be a less risky chance than a search for someone external to the organization, and lacking the knowledge of the shortcomings and positive aspects of the Campus Center."

Egan expressed confidence in the present Campus Center Board of Governors and commended Rich Nelson and Frank Cotter on their concern for the Campus Center. Nelson is chairman of the Board of Governors while Cotter is a member of that board.

"One of the primary reasons for my resignation is the factioning I've seen develop over the past years. Everyone has their own vested interests. I'm not certain that the bureaucracy of deciding the financial fate of the University has been kept in mind foremost."

"However, no one is driving me away, or pressuring me in any way. I've had a lot of latitude in decisions dealing with the Food Services."

Egan said that the main reason he came to UMass was the offer of a teaching position. A Food Systems Course and a course in winetasting have been in his teaching load. "It's been great fun...the students I taught, mainly in the continuing education department acquired the knowledge which must differentiate between a Moselle, and a Bordeaux, for example."

Egan, prior to his position at UMass was Associate Director of Food Services at Yale. After his stay here, he will be living in Florida, as a corporate officer of Olins of New York.

the direction of the University.

When asked what the status of the proposed law school here was, Wood said that it was one of the top matters of priorities at the University.

"There is a definite consensus around the Commonwealth that there is a need for a law school. Many people believe it is a sound idea," he maintained.

In its regular business, the Senate went into executive session twice to discuss the renewal of Student Attorney Richard Howland.

Voting down a proposal by Treasurer Robert Chiller to reopen the University Rifle Range in Dickinson Hall, senators saw the move as only encouraging the possession of arms at UMass. Presently, the possession of firearms on campus is outlawed.

Elliot Sherman reporting for the Matters Committee, who considered the bill, said students had wanted to disarm police on campus. He said now if the bill was passed, the police fear would be justified. "Rifles don't have any place on a university campus," he said.

David Booker, Speaker of the Senate, agreed, citing the shooting by Charles Whitman at the top of a Univerity of Texas tower. "People were actually afraid to walk near the University chapel at Cornell after the shooting," he said.

Positive debate heard on the motion came from Ron Rapallo, Senator from Stockbridge. Rapallo said that rifle range shooting was a form of recreation, which everyone is entitled to and the reopening might provide safety training in how to handle rifles.

When the vote came, the motion was defeated.

The Senate also voted to freeze the 14,000 budget of the Senior Committee, except for advertising until a per cent of the committee has met.

Denise Magnelle, sponsor of the bill, said that $800 would be spent to advertise for future meetings. She said a meeting would be held later this week, with the date to be announced.

The Senate, in addition, passed a proposal for the establishment of the Massachusetts Association of Students in State Supported Higher Education. The proposed plan would encompass students from Massachusetts community colleges, state colleges, SMU, Lowell Tech and UMass, Amherst and Boston.

The basic function proposed in the rationale of the organization says, "The association will serve as central clearing house for student concerns. MASSHE will serve as a communication vehicle between our schools facilitating the sharing of ideas and resources. We would benefit from the ideas emanting from hundreds of other campuses as MASSHE would also communicate with other student associations and individual schools across the country."

TUTORING

The N.E.S. Coordinating Committee, starting this Thursday night, 7:00 in 169 Campus Center, will be holding weekly meetings. These will be totally open to all participating in the program. These meetings, hopefully, will be a chance for feedback constructive to the program and a place to plan major events. Check the notices for the time, date and room of the weekly meetings.

People are still needed to go to Springfield at least once a week to tutor some school child in a subject that they feel most competent in; no experience is necessary. All that is needed is a concern and a willingness to help. For those people interested, come down to the office, 105 Campus Center, or call 545-0575.

US Moves To Force More POW Releases

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP)—The United States pulled a Navy minesweeping force away from Haiphong and suspended troop withdrawals from South Vietnam in moves to force the Communist side to resume releasing American war prisoners.

The actions were taken Wednesday hours before the White House announced it has "every expectation" that Hanoi will release more than 120 additional prisoners of war sometime this week.

They came as the international body policing the Vietnam cease-fire showed the first signs of a major split over an American request to look into alleged truce violations by Hanoi.

A spokesman for the U.S. delegation to the four-party Joint Military Commission said the charges of cease-fire violations and the stall in prisoner releases put "serious strain" on the peace agreement.

Underscoring the souring atmosphere, the chief U.S. delegate issued what was interpreted as a threat of air attacks against Communist missile sites that the United States charges have been set up in violation of the cease-fire.

Maj. Gen. Gilbert N. Woodward warned that the United States "reserves the right with its allies to take such actions as it deems appropriate" if the North Vietnamese refuse to dismantle them.

North Vietnam has denied the missiles came down from the North since the cease-fire, saying the Viet Cong have had SAM2 missiles in the far northern area for some time.

But the United States claimed its photo reconnaissance showed that Hanoi slipped the Soviet- made missiles into the South after the Jan. 28 truce date. It asked the International Commission of Control and Supervision to investigate.

Canada and Indonesia, the U.S. allies on the international body, voted to respond and send an investigating team to Khe Sanh, the former Marine combat base below the demilitarized zone where U.S. authorities said the missiles were installed.

But Poland and Hungary, the commission's Communist members, voted against the idea and the commission can act only on the basis of unanimity. The chief North Vietnamese spokesman in Saigon, Bui Tin, told newsmen his delegation has a list of the next group of U.S. war prisoners to be released but will not turn it over pending "new instructions" from Hanoi.

U.S. officials pressed the North Vietnamese in Saigon and Paris to resume the prisoner release immediately. They claimed Hanoi already is behind schedule and also has violated the peace agreement by not maintaining the prisoner releases at a rate equal to the rate of U.S. troop withdrawals.

Secretary of State William R. Rogers, in Paris for the international Vietnam conference, urgently demanded more releases in a meeting with the North Vietnamese foreign minister, Nguyen Duy Trinh. It was soon after this meeting that the White House expressed confidence more prisoners will be out this week.

The minesweeping suspension, another in the series of U.S. pressures to get more prisoners home, began after removal operations already had started, Pentagon sources said.

Cost Of Living Council Cites Standards

By BILL NEIKIRK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—A Cost of Living Council official said Wednesday that the 5.5 per cent pay standard is only one of a number of guidelines the Nixon administration will use in judging acceptable wage boosts this year.

The notion that wage contracts have been judged by a 5.5 per cent figure, and nothing else, is imaginary, the council official told newsmen.

The official said the figure has become so entrenched in the public mind that it has complicated wage negotiations throughout the nation.

He emphasized that the government's wage standards cover a lot of terrain that permit boosts over 5.5 per cent.

For example, he pointed to the rule that permits wage increases over the mark to allow for gross inequities, market disruptions and so forth. The language is broad, he noted.

The official insisted on anonymity before he would talk to newsmen. He also asked that reporters not use his direct quotes.

Every wage stabilization program, both in the United States and elsewhere, has operated with a variety of standards, he said. If a pay increase goes over the 5.5 per cent mark, he said, the issue then becomes whether it violates the other standards.

The administration announced Monday that it is relaxing the 5.5 per cent general pay guide. But it also imposed more flexibility in enforcing it without saying so directly. A panel of top business and labor leaders named by the administration to advise on wage increases signed a statement saying that no single wage standard was appropriate.

The council official said he explained the public concentration with the 5.5 per cent figure as natural then.

He said it dovetail attention away from the statement by the Labor Management Advisory Committee. That statement pledged the cooperation of the panel in trying to keep wage increases to a level so that the rate of inflation would be cut to 3.5 per cent by the end of the year, he said.

Peace Keeping Force Are Hanoi-Saigon Commuters

By HUGH MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

SAIGON (AP)—The peacekeeping business in Vietnam has swelled the ranks of a rare breed of commuters who shuttle back and forth between the two worlds of Hanoi and Saigon.

Attache cases in hand, most make the trip in a silver and white Boeing Stratocruiser that was old when the war was young. The flight, including a two-hour refueling stop in Vientiane, Laos, takes nine hours.

The creaking, four-engine airplane, among the last of its kind in service anywhere, was officially handed over last week to the new International Commission of Control and Supervision as one of the final acts of the still-born International Control Commission, which went out of business after 18 years of failing to find peace in Vietnam.

"They still have streetcars in Hanoi," a Canadian delegate just back from the North told his mates. "But like the buses, you only see military riding around in them. The civilians are all on foot or on bicycles.

"It's a quiet city . . . not like Saigon where the noise levels are maddening."

One Polish delegate goes from the faded red carpeting and white-louvered shutters of Saigon's Continental Palace Hotel to the faded red carpeting and green-louvered shutters of Hanoi's Continental Palace Hotel. Both were built by the French decades ago and is German-Greek-Jew were under the same management.

"The oversized furniture in the rooms is identical right down to the gloomy heavy drapes," said the Pole. "The old French-speaking waiters in the dining terrace could be almost interchangeable.

"The big difference is in the young ones. In Saigon, they speak English. In Hanoi, they're apt to speak Russian now. Of course, the biggest difference is the absence of bar girls in Hanoi."

An Indonesian who spent several recent years in Hanoi bemoans the passing of the Bamboo Bar at the French mission.

"A casualty of your American bombing," he said. "Now the only good place left to drink is the press bar at the Thong Nhat Hotel, which used to be the Metropole. But it's always full of reporters and photographers from Eastern blue countries."

Governors Discuss Federal Cutbacks

By DON MCLEOD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—The nation's governors met for 2-1/2 hours at the White House yesterday to plead their case against cutbacks in federal grants.

"It was a 'talk to' meeting", said Pennsylvania Gov. Milton Shapp, a Democrat. "They talked to us.

"I wish I could say I knew more about it now than I did before," Shapp said after the meeting between 47 governors and the administration's top economic and domestic advisers.

However, Republican governors, who have generally supported President Nixon on the cuts, said the meeting cleared up some misunderstandings.

At the White House, Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Nixon is still determined to hold back spending costs with budget adjustments.

"Those who attended the meeting understand our position better than when they went in," Ziegler summed up. "And we understand theirs better."

The governors, in the second day of a three-day meeting of the National Governors Conference, are complaining of proposals in Nixon's new budget to trim the categorical grants which largely finance social programs in the states.

"I've told that it was a very healthy exchange of views," Ziegler said. "But some governors did express concern with some of the steps taken."

Ziegler said after Wednesday's meeting he had no information on any concessions by either side.

"A lot of questions were answered but there are a number of very general questions to which we really need answers," Maryland Gov. Marvin Mandel, a Democrat, said.

Republican governors, like William G. Milliken of Michigan, said they were "quite pleased that all of the dire things we have heard were not going to materialize."

Indians Holding Hostages Trade Fire With Marshals

WOUNDED KNEE, S.D. (AP)—Indians holding 10 hostages and demanding to see two U.S. senators exchanged gunfire briefly with federal marshals on their reading a Bureau of Indian Affairs official said.

There were no reports of injuries and an Indian spokesman reported earlier arrangements that the hostages would not be harmed by the demonstrators who had control of this tiny community.

The BIA official said the shots came when a car carrying several Indians from Wounded Knee stopped about half a mile from a roadblock set up by the marshals. He said the Indians, whose leaders said they were well armed, emerged from the car firing rifles at the officers, and the marshals returned the fire.

Indian leaders said there was other gunfire when Indians returned to view the cars from the village. Federal officers at the scene refused to discuss the shots and say whether they were returned. Another BIA official said only the Indians fired.

Spokesmen for the Indians said the occupying force had given from the time the trouble started by 6:00 by Wednesday afternoon. Some also said a ceasefire had been arranged with the FBI.

The situation at the community, site of a bloody battle between the security and Sioux in 1890, began at about 10 p.m. EST on Tuesday, in the middle of the afternoon Wednesday, an FBI spokesman in Washington said. The Indians are in charge of the town, hostages are there, roadblocks are up, the demands are the same.

Clyde Bellecourt of Minneapolis, a leader of the American Indian Movement, said the exchange of gunfire occurred when Indians fired warning shots over cars that came within a quarter of a mile of the village of about 200. He said federal marshals returned the fire.

Carter Camp of Paris City, Okla., a national coordinator of AIM, said warning shots were fired by Indians at a low-flying airplane that circled a way and left. Camp said the exchange was agreed upon before it got. EST.

Camp said the hostages would not be held unless authorities, who had surrounded the village, came too close.

The Indians—including members of AIM and of the Oglala Sioux tribe—held two members of one family, and a Roman Catholic priest. They demanded that Sen. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts and J.W. Fulbright of Arkansas, both Democrats, come to the Lakota square with Pine Ridge Reservation to discuss the Indian's grievances.

Fulbright, contacted in Little Rock, Ark. said, "I would do anything to help clear up the situation," but added that he had received no formal request for assistance. He also said, "This is one of those things that I don't know much about and I think I should get some advice from some official people in government."

Kennedy could not be reached immediately for comment.

The trouble allegedly started when the Indians broke into a trading post in the town 100 miles southwest of Rapid City and seized documents with weapons and supplies. Their demands included an investigation of the dealings of the Department of the Interior and the Bureau of Indian Affairs with the Indian tribes. They also sought an audit of the current leaders, including tribal chairman Richard Wilson who has leaned with AIM members in the past.

Irish Vote For Prime Minister

By COLIN TOUGH
Associated Press Writer

DUBLIN (AP)—The Irish turned out in heavy numbers under a bright sun yesterday to decide whether to keep Jack Lynch as prime minister for at least another five years. The high turnout could spell danger for him.

The result won't be known until late today when the tabulations start.

Party organizers forecast a near record turnout of perhaps 80 per cent.

That, most Irish commentators believe, would be an advantage for the opposition, a national coalition led by former and arbitrary Liam Cosgrave.

Lynch, he asked in Dublin, then went to help his party organization in Cork, where he rights his personal battle for a place in the national Dail—Ireland's lower house.

He leads Fianna Fail, or Soldiers of Destiny, a party of big business, farmers and workers which has held power for most of years. He will return as prime minister if his party wins a majority in the house.

In the last election, Lynch's party won 75 seats, including the speaking member, against 54 for Cosgrave's middle road Fine Gael. In by Labor and one independent.

This time Fine Gael and Labor fought a coalition. Their commitment on shipping harbor issues closely decided a government campaign first picture on national security and Lynch's record in keeping Northern Ireland's troubles remote from the republic.

Ballots were by a complicated system of proportional representation and counting in some of the 41 multimember districts could take 48 hours or longer.

Grey Claims FBI Investigated Watergate

WASHINGTON (AP)—Acting FBI Director L. Patrick Gray, III, said Wednesday his agency sent to the Senate Watergate information obtained in the FBI investigation of the bugging of Democratic national headquarters during the presidential election campaign.

Gray said the investigative report and interviews conducted by the FBI into the Watergate headquarters bugging were sent to the White House after the tapes were requested by John Ehrlichman, presidential counsel, last July 19.

The 30-year-old Gray also told the Senate Judiciary Committee that one month earlier, he had killed a letter addressed to H.R. Haldeman, White House chief of staff containing information about the Watergate investigation. He did not say who on the staff prepared the letter which came to him two days after the June 17 bugging was discovered.

The case of the FBI's activities in the Watergate case arose during the third day of Gray's appearance before the Judiciary Committee which is examining his credentials to be the permanent director of the FBI.

Gray, who has been acting director for the past 6 months, was nominated by President Nixon for the permanent post on Feb. 15.

Gray gave assurances to the committee that, if confirmed, the agency would remain as non-political as he said it had been during the former tenure of his predecessor, the late J. Edgar Hoover. He also denied he made political speeches for President Nixon during last fall's election campaign.

Despite his statements, Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W. Va., a formerly leader and committee member, again said he would not vote for Gray because he still believes the acting director is too political for the job.

Eight Colloquia Funded

By STEVE RUGGLES

An additional eight colloquia anc the beginnings of the Northeast Area Resources Program received funding at a meeting of the Northeast Area Government Tuesday evening.

Several colloquia tabled from the last meeting, as well as a few new offerings received a total budget of $756. Colloquia passed with budgets of $50 for instructor salaries were Dog Care, Elementary Auto Mechanics, Leather Crafts, Silversmithing, and Photography.

Other funding for colloquia included $50 for Backpacking equipment, $75 for Photography equipment, $105 for Leather Crafting tools, and $176 for Silversmithing tools. It is hoped, by the Area Government, to establish an area crafts shop in the future. Two other colloquia on Values Clarification and Sexism were budgetd $100 apiece.

In response to a proposal at the last meeting by Colby Smith concerning the Northeast Area Resource Program, a special committee made their recommendations, and the Government acted on various parts of the proposal.

The three part proposal calls for the setting up of a Center for Educational Innovation, a Women's Center, and a Center for Racial Understanding and Awareness.

As stated by the proposal, "The Educational innovation component is proposed to stimulate new educational ideas and to guide the development of in-house educational programs. The Women's Center is proposed as a reflection of the needs of the especially large number of women in the Northeast Area, to provide a vehicle for communication, information, and academic programs. The racial understanding and awareness component is proposed in order to facilitate the examination of racism in the Northeast Area."

As part of the Educational Innovations portion, $500 was allocated to Marion Kowacki for teaching the colloquia programming during this and next semesters. An educational library has been initiated in the Area, and $400 was budgeted for the purchase of new and used books.

The Women's Center component of the proposal was tabled until further details are available. The proponents of the Center will evaluate the recent Women's Weekend held in Lewis House, and will submit a detailed proposal soon.

Judy Katz, group facilitator, and Eric Goldman, racism program educator, will be paid $150 each for their services in conjunction with the Racism Center. It will be their jobs to provide educational workshops, and to teach a racism colloquia.

At the time of the meeting Tuesday night, many details of the proposed N.A.R.P. were incomplete. Further action will be taken as the proposals are formulated.

The Quad Government voted to contribute $200 to the Black Musicians Conference to be held in April. This $200 will be administered by contract.

Steve Spellemburg, photography colloquium instructor, has also been hired as Media Center Director at a salary of $150. The Media Center is located in Knowlton basement, and is being equipped with necessary facilities for black and white processing.

The Administrative Aid to the Area Government for this semester is Donna King, 105 Leach House. The Area Government Office is located in the basement of Leach, and the telephone number is 5-3950.

The next Northeast Area Government meeting is on Tuesday, March 13 at 7:00 in the Lewis seminar room.

Waiting With Crossed Fingers

By ALEXANDER G. HIGGINS
Associated Press Writer

WELLFLEET, Mass. (AP) — Carol North, hoping her husband will be among the next POWs released from North Vietnam, is "strongly disappointed" as she continues her seven-year wait in this Cape Cod town.

"I'm sitting here with my fingers crossed," she said Wednesday, following word of the cease-fire dispute in which North Vietnam delayed the return of more prisoners of war and the United States halted its troop withdrawal from South Vietnam.

"I'm distressed," she said. "I really don't want to say any more right now."

"In fact," she added, "my only criticism of the whole affair so far is the way the news media haven't left them--the returnees--alone.

"I don't think you should press for any information until all the men are returned."

"The less said at this particular time, the better," she said.

Mrs. North--whose husband, Lt. Col. W. North, has been held captive since being shot down over North Vietnam in the summer of 1966--said she didn't think that what returned POWs have said so far is a factor in the delay.

Powerline Worker Returns

By WARREN E. LEARY
AP Science Writer

BOSTON (AP)-It's bad luck for a powerline worker to wear new boots when he climbs a pole.

Maxie Compton, of Sumter, S.C., bucked the superstition and lost last autumn when he wore shiny new boots up a pole and met a loose line which sent 23,000 volts of electricity ripping through his body.

The jolt left Compton partly paralyzed, badly burned and partially blind, but it did not destroy his determination to overcome his disabilities.

"When I get out of here, I'm going to climb one more pole," Compton says, "and I want my wife to take a picture of me doing it."

The 33-year-old man is undergoing rehabilitation in the spinal cord unit at the Boston University Medical Center and even though his doctors say it will be a "long haul", they say he is making a remarkable comeback.

The electric shock almost blinded Compton by causing cataracts on both eyes. Surgeons removed the cataracts and Compton will be able to read and watch television again with ease, once he is fitted with special glasses.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP)-The wife of a former prisoner of war says that the North Vietnamese told their prisoners about major news events, even if the presentation was a "little slanted."

Mrs. Eileen Cormier of Bay Shore, N.Y., said her husband S.M. Sgt. Arther Cormier, 38, told her that in addition to the news supplied by the North Vietnamese, "new prisoners would come into the camps and they would all exchange information."

She said her husband "does not seem as surprised as I would have expected him to be by everything that happened" since he was shot down over North Vietnam in November, 1965.

Sees New Morality

The changing styles in men's hair lengths "didn't throw him as much as we anticipated." Mrs. Cormier said, but he was surprised by the relaxation in American morals. "He said, 'I don't think of myself as prudish, but I'm a little bit startled."

She said her husband is adjusting to having a family again.

"My husband was very pleasantly surprised by how well the kids handle themselves," she said. "Occasionally, one child resents it if the other appears to be getting one iota more attention from their father."

Cormier has shown his family the spoon and cup he used in prison and his navy blue prison uniform.

Mrs. Cormier, who left the base Sunday with her children, said her husband had no major medical problems during his imprisonment. He lost about 20 pounds, she said, but 'I'm amazed by his marvelous good looks."

Diet of Soup

Cormier told his wife he was in several different prisons and subsisted on a diet of pumpkin soup and cabbage soup. "He says he doesn't want to see any cabbage soup for a long time," she said.

She said she has not talked to her husband about the possibility that he was tortued. "He indicated there were some very bad moments, but I have shied away from talking about that."

The former prisoner said there were times when he had trouble keeping his hopes up, his wife said, "but he was able to surmount it. He is a religious man. His letters have always been strong."

Cormier, a 19-year veteran with the Air Force, arrived at Westover Air Force base Feb. 17, and has been undergoing medical checkups, intelligence debriefings and counseling.

As of Tuesday, Mrs. Cormier did not know when her husband would be coming home to the Bay Shore house she bought three years after he was shot down.

"I've shown him pictures and floor plans, but I'm a little nervous," she said.

She said it still doesn't feel like her husband is really home. "I am looking ahead several months from now when we will have breakfast together in the morning and supper in the evening. At that point, I'll really believe he's home."

Cormier was scheduled today for some more medical work and a session with the Westover dietician. And he plans to do some skiing later this week.

State Of Emergency At Walpole State Prison

By MARY THORNTON
Associated Press Writer

WALPOLE, Mass. (AP) — A state of emergency was declared at Walpole State Prison Wednesday after inmates said they were staging a non-violent work stoppage to demand the resignation of the prison's superintendent.

Inmates told newsmen touring the maximum security prison that they started the strike to bring the prison to a standstill until Superintendent Raymond E. Porelle submits his resignation

Afterwards, Porelle said, "I do not intend to resign. It's an institutional matter."

Reporters were allowed inside the institution Wednesday for the first time in two months.

Staff Problems

Porelle declared the state of emergency Wednesday morning when the kitchen staff refused to clean the dining room for breakfast. He said the inmates had refused for a week to clean either the cell blocks or dining room.

As a result of the emergency, he said, Wednesday's breakfast was cancelled. Visitors were left in the waiting room without an explanation. The superintendent allowed newsmen into the prison to talk with the 22-member inmate council and then allowed the group to tour the maximum security and segregation areas of the prison.

Bob Dellelo, president of the inmate council, said "the main problem at the prison is Porelle." He said that the inmates have completely cut off negotiations with him and will continue to refuse to talk to Porelle.

The superintendent was characterized by Ralph Hamm, vice president of the group, as "inhuman, a mad dog, unreasonable and a megalomaniac." He said, "The only time we ever see him is with a shotgun, a gas gun, a gas mask or a club."

Non-Violent Protest

Dellelo said that the work strike was the only form of non-violent protest available to the inmates, and "We think it's better to have paper on the floor than guards as hostages."

He accused Porelle of allowing severe beatings of prisoners and of planning a behavior modification program at the prison with "overtones of psychosurgery brain surgery involved."

He said the differences with Porelle involve the existence of a cadre block of prisoners who received special treatment; opening up the prison to the community, and the lack of recreational and sports programs.

The most recent series of problems at Walpole began Dec. 29 when a six-week lockup was ordered. During that time, guards conducted a complete shakedown of the institution. Numerous homemade weapons and contraband items were uncovered.

Bad Timing

Dellelo said the timing of the lockup upset prisoners.

He said prisoners were taken to their cells at 6 p.m. on Dec. 29 by armed state troopers, rather than being allowed to stay out until the usual 10 p.m.

According to Dellelo, a party had been planned for that night which would have included most of the prison's 600 inmates and their guests.

Inmates said that during the lockup they were not allowed out of their cells, couldn't take showers and were forced to "subsist mainly on baloney sandwiches and half-pint containers of bland food."

Medeiros Becomes Bishop

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Archbishop Humberto Medeiros prepared to leave for Rome Wednesday to be installed as the Roman Catholic cardinal of Boston, a job he says he'll serve without imitating his colorful predecessor, Richard Cardinal Cushing.

"After 57 years of being this way," said the archbishop Tuesday, "I'd have an awful hard time changing."

"He was good that way," Archbishop Medeiros said of Cardinal Cushing's blunt, outspoken manner, "but I could never be like that."

The archbishop's quiet, restrained actions, his English slowed by a trace of his Portuguese boyhood, contrast with the abrupt, smiling Cushing, who spoke Latin with an Irish brogue and loved a joke.

"I've lived under his sunlight all my life," Medeiros said. "I'm very happy to follow in his footsteps, but I think he had longer strides than I can take."

Cardinal Cushing died two years ago after a quarter century of leading the nation's second largest archdiocese, counseling such families as the Kennedys and working for religious ecumenicalism.

Don't Raise Tuition

Once again, there is talk of hiking tuition for state colleges. Also under consideration is a proposal for the state legislature to provide for an increase in financial aid to students at state colleges. Hence, there are two issues, loosely contingent upon each other, which will be handled about among UMass administrators and state legislators during the coming months.

The ideal situation would be to see tuition remain the same, and at the same time, see an increase in the amount and scope of financial aid available to students. This, unfortunately, seems to be an unlikely combination. Another alternative would be an increase in tuition, and no increase in available financial aid. We hope this will not be the case.

We strongly urge the administration and the legislature to carefully weigh the pros and cons of a tuition increase at a state university. We believe that the Board of Higher Education, as President Robert Wood put it, "put it [illegible] court," by also taking into considerable [illegible] increased availability of financial aid. We [illegible] a worthy endeavor, in any case, since there is [illegible] "great gap" in financial aid in the state. [illegible] of increased tuition should be abandoned [illegible]

The Return Of ROTC?

R.O.T.C. That stands for the Reserve Officers Training Corps. Do you remember them?

For the suburban teens, as well as those who believed themselves to below the Ole University's ivy Farts/Natters, ROTC was perhaps the only tangible item with which to practice some "Made in U.S.A." brand of guerrilla warfare. Drill parades, practicing, leafleting, underpaying, brainwashing, and more exciting just-for-you-people the figures of the Left with a sense of revolutionary fulfillment. What was needed was a target authority remote from the everyday lives of the majority of students, yet simultaneously visible enough to attract a protest slot on the six O'Clock local news. Far turning the University into a staging grounds for the revolution, ROTC proved to be a wide-scale cause for raising the consciousness of the academic hate-propagandists.

The period of time ROTC was a vantage area for the brick throwers and the leak burners. ROTC, which had previously played a very minor role in the overall structure of the nation's Universities, suddenly became the focal point of hatredom. Most major campuses became embroiled in the debate on the "legitimacy" of having military training on places other than the traditional Service Academies. Naturally, the debate remarked on a series of duty Crusades to purge all elements which would resemble American colleges with the ugly reminders of the "Establishment." Consequently, the various ROTC headquarters were either burned, gutted with incendiary military devices, tomatoes, cans, eggs, bricks, or "plain-over" by the hordes of unwashed and brainwashed and converted into Group Therapy Commuters.

[illegible] may prove to be the year of reason's Renaissance. The environment which permeated the Outlook of the nation's campuses seems to be subsiding. Many of the more vociferous student activists have either departed or come to grips with their own hatreds and philosophical inequities. And many of the "return travellers," those who joined the crusade merely because it provided an escape from the boring routine of classes, have evidently found other and more valid channels of activity. For the first time in many years, a student can express tolerance for ROTC without being subjected to isolation or assault of "traitor harbinger."

For those who don't see visions of the Gestapo every time the name of ROTC comes up, there really isn't any need for debate. Giving credit to ROTC is just as legitimate as giving credit to courses in Fascism, Yoga, Marxism, and Human Sexuality. The fact that the curriculum is formulated by the military, rather than the University, is really a little relevant for an opposing case. The military is best suited to set the standards for its future Officers, just as other employers set standards for those considering entering their employ.

The University Student Senate, in a rare state of consciousness, voted to reject a motion by Senate President Weinberger which would put the Senate on record as continuing to oppose the return of academic credit to the ROTC program. Critic by the Faculty Senate, hopefully, the Trustees will come back to their senses and leave credit to those who wish to serve as officers in our Armed Forces. As for President Robert Wood, his official position on the matter is that he will "look into the matter." Here's that for a commitment: is honesty anti-charity?

Local Election Scene

After Watergate, and all the other "bad-luck" that surrounds national elections, it seems inconceivable that another political scandal would be breaking down the backs of people to date.

But for those of us who realize that politics is a more personal affair than listening to a bunch of national celebrities on the tube, or live there. But that is not realistic.

What is realistic is going to the polls Tuesday, March 5, and voting for Walter Sarnaski. He volunteered to be the town treasurer to remove the need for additional revenues. Life Itself Is An Improvisation

To The Editor:

[illegible] Area is forming an improvisational theatre group, open to anyone interested. We are thinking of the moment in the direction of a Commedia dell'Arte troupe. The Commedia was a form of theatre that was very popular in Italy during the Renaissance and later also in France. The company of actors and actresses, dancers, musicians, and singers improvised comedies from written and memorized material, taking any character which he or she developed throughout many performances and different productions.

The type of theatre is especially suited to comedy, including satire, and the players often used their productions to comment on the current social and political conditions. Obviously our own productions are merely unfounded. We may use our productions as a way to express our opinions on anything that interests us.

Often, when the Commedia is revived, it is done in period costumes, with exaggerated mime characters. It is done in a more modern style, again we have a [illegible] there. Everyone has some talent for improvisation, the mark of an improvisation, after all.

If you have a special talent, here is a chance to display it. We need many types of people—those with performing skills and those with skills such as painting, sewing, singing.

We are having a meeting on Thursday, March 1st at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center Lounge. If you are planning to celebrate that night, please come—you may well be in just the right mood, we believe. If you can't make it Thursday, but are interested, contact me at 6-0461. Mr. Cockell.

Student Evaluators

To The Editor:

Now that the problem of rapid growth is diminishing as a focal point of concern, the University have shifted their emphasis toward distinctly improving the quality of education. One specific area of this concern is faculty promotion procedures and the issues near. There is virtually no area of campus governance or academic programming that is not affected by these structures. Among the most important to students are the criteria used in evaluating professors in their teaching, and the weight given to much of the several groups within departments and special programs such as those in residential colleges. Student participation in the personnel and policy decisions in the various departments is significant in the potential development of programs responsible for the needs of the undergraduates as well as the graduate students in a given department. Maintenance and improvement of student-professor relationships is another important aspect to be considered.

The question of faculty tenure is coming under close scrutiny by Trustees, the Governor's Budgetary Commissioner, and others concerned due to the end of the University funds are resulting from the "Baby Boom" of the post-war period. Maintenance of a vibrant dynamic and intellectually encouraging environment in all fields requires teaching, and research in the interest of the entire society, and specifically that of the UMass campus community. We feel that the recent rumblings concerning tenure levels indicate that a searching and critical eye be cast by UMass at this question. The confrontation with a certainly accomplished fact in the form of new tenure guidelines is possible which might therefore be more various disappointment of their personal tenure levels, thus potentially isolating the University from any bright new scholars. Tenure is today as much as it ever was an important mechanism for safeguarding the ideals of Academic Freedom. Therefore, we believe that, in concerns of these closely tenure be protected, as well as the standards of education implied in them. Institutions such as personally negotiated evaluation contingent upon the interests of the faculty equally as well as the needs of the students are possibilities that may be discussed.

As partners in the process of education students are of course directly affected by its quality. They are aware and responsive to the needs of their peers, and can be crucial in the necessary understanding of meaningful departmental programming, and advising. Having a direct line of communication to their students would seem to be the only feasible means for faculty to approach higher standards in their methods. This would be done on a personnel and professional level, where the student can critically evaluate without being in a distinctly inferior position.

To this end, we feel that it is crucial at this time for the individual departments to constructively seek out the input of students into the decision making process. It is time to realize that a cohesive effort to enhance the development of our institution is necessary. Discussion concerns of faculty and student concerns are deeply damaging, and it seems that an approach to mutual understanding is in accordance with the needs of every one concerned, especially with the uncertainty of Transitation.

International Fair Features Door Prizes

A wine-making kit, wall clock, portable radio, jewelry, articles of clothing, 6 "Zap Comix" and gift certificates from several restaurants and food stores including one "Pu Pu Platter" and 6 MacDonald's hamburgers are all part of the collection of door prizes gathered by the International Student Association as door prizes for its International Fair next week. The Fair will be open in the Student Union Ballroom from 1:00 p.m. 'til ten or eleven on both Friday and Saturday.

Admission to the Fair is free, but contributions to the Foreign Student Emergency Fund will be gladly taken at the door and Door Prize tickets cost a quarter each. Drawings will be held every half-hour or hour, so if you've won you can collect your prize before you leave.

Inside the Fair you will find an array of display booths put up by each of several Foreign Student, American Student and Community groups; in addition there will be more or less continuous entertainment on the Ballroom stage or the floor beside it. In many of the activities you can participate as you wish. The Latin American group, for example, is scheduling a pinata for children early Saturday afternoon, at which one is blindfolded and handed a broomstick with which to bash at a papermache animal on a clothesline containing a clay pot filled with candies. If you connect, you win and everybody wins in the mad scramble. The Japanese Tea Ceremony (3:00 p.m. Saturday) on the other hand is something to enjoy and observe, but not to join in.

There will be food from many countries: Lebanese, Latin America and Western Europe (French and Danish included). Clothing and handicrafts will be on sale, and the Round the World Wives will offer their cookbook of international recipes.

The Americans will be running a thrift shop (AAUW), a "Gay 90's" display (Gamma Sigma Sigma) and will be taking part in the Friday evening Fashion Show. Tying the whole thing together will be a couple of features: the Center for International Education will be running some of the games developed for non-formal education (out of school) and cross-cultural communication, as part of its Ecuador Project, which are open to one and all.

Finally, on Saturday night, George Young (School for International Training, Brattleboro) has agreed to lead the audience in one of his famous folk dance demonstrations and teaching sessions. He is a witty, energetic leader who makes your feet come to life when you are doing one of his dances from Japan, Africa, Russia, Latin America and other parts of the world. The routines he picks are easy to learn and fun to do. One nationality forgets itself and merges with the next in a moment of shared awareness and shared fun.

George Young's dancing is scheduled to phase into a Latin American party given at the end of Saturday night. For a complete schedule of international Fair events, look to the pages of the Collegian next week.

Equal Rights Fails In Maine

By PHYLLIS AUSTIN
Associated Press Writer

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP)—The Equal Rights Amendment failed passage in the Maine Senate Wednesday but was kept alive for another vote amid parliamentary confusion.

After two hours and 14 minutes debate, the Senate's vote on acceptance of a favorable committee recommendation ended in a 16-16 tie.

One Senator who reportedly supports the controversial proposal was absent because of a family death. His "yes" vote could have meant Maine would be the 29th state to ratify the amendment to the U.S. Constitution giving women equal rights. The House passed the proposal by a 10-vote margin Tuesday.

Opponents, who voted at the outset of the debate not to wait until Republican Sen. Bennett D. Datz of Augusta could return, moved quickly to have the amendment killed after the tie vote.

But Sen. Harrison L. Richardson, R-Cumberland, pulled the controversial amendment out of the fire and delivered a caustic lecture to opponents for what he called their "heavy handed display."

He accused those voting against a motion to table the amendment until Katz could return with being "unfair". Richardson said it was a courtesy "routinely granted" all legislators.

He emphasized the importance of voting on an amendment to the federal constitution and added: "In all honesty I fail to see how the Senate can vote without having everyone here. It's fundamental fairness."

Richardson's scolding caused three senators to change their minds. They voted 24-8 to delay further action until Monday. The initial tabling motion was 21-11 against postponement.

When the Senate meets Monday, the pending motion will be acceptance of the unfavorable report from a minority of the state government committee which reviewed the proposed amendment.

If the "ought not to pass" report is rejected, then the majority favorable recommendations will be considered for a second time.

Senate President Kenneth P. MacLeod, R-Brewer, who voted in favor of the proposal, said after the debate that he will vote against it next time around.

On the 16-16 vote, there were six Democrats and 10 Republicans who supported the amendment and five Democrats and 11 Republicans who opposed it.

A parliamentary muddle developed after the tie vote.

Senate majority leader Richard N. Berry, R-Cape Elizabeth, moved for reconsideration of the vote in order to prevent its being debated again.

But before a vote could be taken on his motion, Sen. Wakine G. Tasnous, R—East Millinecket, tried to have the proposal tabled until next Tuesday.

Richardson pulled the rug out by calling for immediate adjournment.

Richardson's motion was rejected on a 19-13 roll call vote, and Tanous' tabling moved was turned down by the same margin. But after Richardson's sharp oratory, his colleagues reversed their stand and shelved further action until next week.

'Honor Thy Father' To Be Aired Tonight

By JAY SHARBUTT
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP)—"Honor Thy Father" is a huge, well-researched book by Gay Talese. It's about New York's Cosa Nostra, its various "family" squabbles and the resulting thumps of falling bodies.

The book has been fashioned into a two-hour movie that airs tonight on the CBS Television network. For some viewers, this may be an offer they can refuse.

Others may give it a try if they've enjoyed Talese's fine, real-life account of the affairs of Salvatore "Bill" Bonanno and his father, Joseph "Joe Bananas" Bonanno, the latter listed in government files in 1963 as head of his own Cosa Nostra family here.

But a warning: After movies like "The Godfather" and "The Valachi Papers" "Honor Thy Father" comes across as just another Italian "Our Gang" tragedy.

It is suggested, should you watch it, that you have a copy of the Talese book at the ready.

It's a necessity if you are to keep track of the assorted "family" references that zip by faster than one can say fettucini.

The show's composers try to keep things together with an off-screen narrator, Joseph Campanella, who periodically describes who is fleeing, fighting or fooling around with whom.

It's of little help. The correct note is sounded by a peace delegate from the big boys who, upon facing Joseph Bonanno's small army at a parking lot meeting, asks: "What's going on here?"

There also are scenes of men dying of heart failure attributed to pastel and submachine gun bullets in their persons.

And so it goes, not all of it violent, until the Bonanno empire is whittled down. The final whittle involves the use of a credit card that puts Salvatore Bonanno in jail for four years.

The movie was an ambitious project, but it seems too familiar, too long and too disjointed. It was shot on location in New York, and after seeing it I wish New York had shot back.

Priests Work To Include Women

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP)—The New England Delegation to the National Federation of Priests Council has approved resolutions which include the ordination of women into the Roman Catholic priesthood and a survey of church feeling toward optional celibacy.

Meeting at Holy Cross College Wednesday, the 14 priests who attended the session decided to ask the Detroit convention next month to "work to change the church law which prevents ordination of women" and to "encourage women to seek entrance into programs preparing candidates for the deaconate and the priesthood."

The resolution said, "There is no scriptural or theological reason why women should be excluded" from the priesthood.

Another resolution provided for a survey of the laity this spring on optional celibacy. The council would then send the results of that survey and an earlier survey to the bishops and the Vatican for consideration.

A survey conducted by the Gallup Poll two years ago showed that a majority of the laity favored optional celibacy. A third resolution urged "each council of diocese and Senates of Priests to endorse the proposal of the Canonn Law Society of American CLSA on the selection of bishops."

The CLSA proposal would give priests and laity a voice in electing bishops. The plan would establish an 11-man committee of priests, religious members of religious orders; and laity in each of the 156 dioceses.

The committee would periodically submit names of candidates for bishop to their Senate of Priests. The names in turn would be sent to the bishops and the regional conference of bishops.

The delegates also asked that the priests consider an NFPC proposal which would give the laity "some part or voice . . . in the choice or retention of their ministers."

Under a final resolution, the NFPC suggested it serve as a clearing house for married priests who want to continue church work and for parish councils, church institutions and religious boards seeking their services.

The priests who attended the meeting will represent the Boston Province at the NFPC House of Delegates meeting in Detroit March 18-22. The Boston Province is composed of the Boston Archdiocese; the Fall River, Mass., Diocese; the Worcester, Mass., Diocese, the Springfield, Mass., Diocese; the Burlington, Vt., Diocese, the Manchester, N.H., Diocese, and the Portland, Maine Diocese.

More Games Introduced

BOSTON (AP)—The Massachusetts Lottery Commission Tuesday unveiled its long range plans to introduce a family of "number selection games" intended to compete head-on with games operated by illegal bookmakers.

The new family of games would include the "Lotto Game," patterned after West Germany's official state lottery, a "Lotta-Perfect" game patterned after Quebec's, and a "Numbers Game" directly competing with the numbers racket.

"The numbers business is the largest and most lucrative lottery operation that we can conceive of at this time," Thomas B. O'Heir, deputy director for management services for the state lottery commission, told the Government Regulations Committee at a hearing on bills to legalize state-run gambling.

The numbers selection games, said O'Heir, "are aimed at what we consider to be a large market of people who wish to choose the lottery numbers they purchase."

Under the Lotto game, bettors would mark betting slips, choosing digits from six of 49 possible number combinations. Betting slips would be collected weekly, and six winning digits would be drawn from a drum. Prizes would be based on matching numbers.

The Lotto Perfecta game would be based on selecting winners based on the outcome of a horse race, though the bets would be a true lottery, not simply a race bet, said O'Heir.

No Bounds On Lottery Sales

The Senate Tuesday approved the direct sale of state lottery tickets that a critic said could have "lottery hawkers" peddling tickets everywhere, even at wakes.

Sen. David H. Locke, R-Wellesley, said the gamblind concept for Massachusetts is an "unholy and unhealthy development." He said it is "undermining the fiber of the Massachusetts citizen who is no longer the hardy pioneer."

No one defended the bill at this final stage and it cleared on a 26 to 7 roll call. The Senate earlier had banned sales in state institutions—such as prisons, hospitals and state colleges.

The bill now goes back to the House for concurrence and, if the amendment is accepted, enactment. The bill conceivably could prompt the first veto of the session from Gov. Francis W. Sargent.

"The lottery hawkers," Locke said of the pending bill, "will chase you along the sidewalk, they'll interrupt you in restaurants . . . they'll accost elderly ladies on the street, unsuspecting welfare recipients, persons receiving social security checks."

He went so far as to predict they'd try to market tickets at Irish wakes, weddings, funerals, Bar Mitzvahs, at schools, ballparks. "What a bonanza!" he said.

Sen. Edward L. Burke, D-Natick, expressed in similar reservations and said the lottery is becoming "unaccountable, even to the legislature."

Severence Pay Questioned

BOSTON (AP)—The House Tuesday deferred—possibly until next week—a showdown on legislation giving severance pay to the former employes of the defunct Hampden County Training School.

Rep. Charles F. Flaherty Jr., D-Cambridge, protested it would "establish a dangerous precedent." He also said the public employe who acquires his job through "friendship" rather than specific qualifications "runs the risk of being removed as easily as he was appointed."

Rep. James L. Grimaldi, D-Springfield, said it wasn't "fair" to say these individuals got their jobs through friendships.

He said they were "earned" and weren't eligible for unemployment compensation when the legislature last year terminated the school.

Hot And Cold War Propaganda In Project 10

John Gnatek, a prize-winning artist and expert in the field of twentieth-century revisionist history, will address the Political Campaigns Seminar in Project 10 tonight at 7:30 p.m.

Gnatek studied at the University of Miami, Maryland Institute, and the London City Guild Art School. He has won more than a dozen awards for his art works in exhibits in Massachusetts, New York, Delaware, and Maryland, and his paintings are found in private collections in the United States, Canada, England, Austria, and Western Australia. For twleve years he has painted murals in the Massachusetts building at the annual Eastern States Exposition in Springfield.

John Gnatek

A one-time backer of Senator Barry Goldwater (R-Arizona), Gnatek finally broke with Goldwater in 1964 because he assessed that Goldwater's foreign policy was identical to that of then-President Lyndon Johnson. It was during this period that Gnatek was influenced by the writings of leading revisionist historian Dr. Harry Elmer Barnes, and in the ensuing years he developed an outstanding collection of revisionist books on World Wars One and Two and the Korean and Indochinese Wars, as well as works on anarchism and libertarianism.

Gnatek's talk tonight will be concerned with American Hot and Cold War propaganda and its influence on American politics and foreign policy over the last three decades.

Tonight's presentation is one in a series of appearances by local political figures in conjunction with the Project 10 seminar.

Slight Earthquake Hits Pennsylvania

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

An earth tremor startled residents of eastern Pennsylvania, and parts of Delaware, Maryland and New Jersey early today, triggering an avalanche of phone calls to police and fire department switch boards.

No injuries were reported, and there were no reports of extensive damage.

The quake, which rattled windows and caused buildings to tremble, lasted six seconds. The seismograph at Fordham University in New York City registered the quake at 3.5 on the Richter scale.

Philadelphia Police Sgt. Calvin Forsythe said 1,829 calls were received by the police radio room between 3:20 and 4 a.m.

There were reports that the rumbling in the Philadelphia area reached as far south as Wilmington, Del, and in a northerly direction some 50 miles to Allentown, Pa.

Only 31 quakes have been recorded in eastern Pennsylvania in the 245 years since recores were started in 1727.

The National Earthquake Information Center at Boulder, Colo., said the tremor could not be connected with the "major earthquake" centered in the Kurile Islands in the northern Pacific at 1:38 a.m. EST. That quake measured 7.5 on the Richter scale, compared to the 6.25 earthquake that devastated Managua, Nicaragua, last December.

Despite the fact the earthquake information center at Boulder discounted any connection between the East Coast tremor and the Kurile Islands quake, a Philadelphia scientist said he thought there was a link between the two.

Dr. I.M. Levitt, director emeritus of the Franklin Institute's Fels Planetarium, noted that the Kurile Islands and the Aleutian Islands are in a relatively young part of the earth that is still settling.

"Apparently there are two massive blocks of rocks" in the area of the Pacific quake, he said. "When these rocks slip, the waves are generated and begin traveling out all over the earth," he said.

The East Coast quake was felt 105 minutes or 6,300 seconds after the Kurile Islands quake, Dr. Levitt said, tying in with the city's 12,600-mile distance from the islands and the "L" shock wave traveling at two miles per second.

Dr. John Reed of the U.S. Geological Survey's Eastern states, said Philadelphia, like many other East Coast cities, lies along the inner edge of the Atlantic Coastal Plain-a thick accumulation of clays, sands and gravels that flank the Atlantic Seaboard from Long Island to Florida.

Hasty Pudding Presents People-Of-The-Year Awards

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Harvard University's Hasty Pudding Club, which calls itself the nation's oldest theatrical organization, presented people-of-the-year awards to actor Jack Lemmon and writer Gloria Steinem Wednesday night.

The club gave its man of the year award to Lemmon and its person of the year award to Ms. Steinem before it raised the curtain on its 125th annual production.

Ms. Steinem, senior editor of Ms. Magazine, was cited as one who "best exemplifies the combination of social conscience and personhood" and Lemmon for "outstanding achievement in film acting and directing."

The all-male organization also inducted its first woman member last night--President Matina Horner of Radcliffe College.

Julia Child presented a potful of hasty pudding, said to be made from the original 1775 recipe. The club puts on yearly plays written by student members.

Project SELF Offers Workshops

Project SELF is a series of workshops by, for and about women sponsored by Everywoman's Center at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst.

A new series will begin the week of March 12 and will run through the week of May 7. These workshops grow out of the needs of area women to know what it means to be a woman in today's world--and what it can mean. Most will meet once a week for eight weeks. The cost per workshop is small, with a special rate for women who are on welfare.

Registration will be Wednesday, March 7, from 1 to 8 p.m. at Everywoman's Center, Munson Hall, UMass. Mail registrations, with payment enclosed, should also be received by this date.

Because of the great demand for these workshops last semester, the number offered this term has been increased to 28. Catalogs with descriptions and registration forms are now available. If you are not already on the Everywoman's Center mailing list, call or drop a card asking for a catalog, or stop by and pick one up. Everywoman's Center is open Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Project SELF spring semester offerings are as follows:

Learning from Our Bodies--Hatha Yoga and Meditation; Temple Restoration; Reclaiming Physical Fitness; Fat Consciousness-Raising; Freeing Our Bodies: Movement As Self-Expression; Movement Together As Self Expression; Tai Kwan Do; Female Sexuality: Our Bodies, Ourselves.

Learning from Our History--Messages From Out There: Writers on Women; Sexual Institutions of Patriarchy; Sex Role Stereotyping in the Elementary School; Lesbianism; Prostitution; Catholicism and Women; Women in Art; Film: Sex Roles and Self-Image.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

Gemini often finds that Libra rings the bell of physical response. Gemini investigates, asks questions, is idealistic, impatient and often plays the role of "jolly good fellow." Gemini often fears Taurus, works a financial arrangement with Capricorn and is intrigued with photography, writing, travel. Gemini may appear haphazard and happy-go-lucky but natives of this zodiacal sign usually know where to go, when to go and how to arrive at ultimate destination. Some famous persons born under Gemini include Paul Lynde, Robert Cummings and Rosalind Russell.

Seniors, Win Streak Highlight Luncheon

By STEVE CROWE

"If winning number seven put you in heaven, what will number twelve do?" This was the question of the day at the Varsity M Luncheon yesterday afternoon at the Newman Center. Basketball Coach Jack Leaman, who, when looking for his team's seventh win in a row (before the Rhode Island game) coined the phrase, "We'll be in heaven if we get number seven," couldn't come up with an answer and it remains a mystery.

The Minutemen have now won eleven in a row and a victory this Saturday against Fordham will tie UMass' record for most consecutive wins. Four seniors will be making the final appearance of their careers in Curry Hicks Cage: Chuck Olsen, Charlie Peters, Tom Austin, and Tom McLaughlin.

It's hard to say something complimentary about a guy who sat on the bench most of his career, but Coach Leaman credited Chuck Olsen with having a lot to do with making other players better players because of his hard work in practice. The proof of this is that when Chuck comes back next year as a grad student he will work with the freshman basketball program.

"Charlie Peters was expected to start at the beginning of the year and then be beaten out after the first couple of games. But he's proven that no one's going to beat him out. He's been making plays that a 5'9" guard is supposed to be making, diving on the floor and coming up with loose balls," said Leaman.

"Tom Austin--I've been telling him for four years that he could be a great player. Then I stopped and now he's become a great player," said Leaman.

Leaman saved his greatest compliment to Captain Tom McLaughlin. "Next year, we will be able to find a player as good as 'Mac', but we won't ever be able to find a player who will keep the team going like he did. 'Mac' blended this team together; seniors, juniors and sophomores all together."

McLaughlin had a very interesting observation about the three UMass basketball teams he has played on. The players seem to be getting lousier, flakier every year. This year's group of sophomores is the wildest yet. They bounce the ball on the locker room wall and dance to music on their stereo before each game.

"I have to use Tommy as an interpreter to talk to them," said Leaman. "Then, when I hear him telling them, I wonder if he's saying the same thing I said."

Tommy Austin apologized for his sluggish play in the first half of the Northeastern game. He said he didn't wake up until the second half when No. 22 pinched him.

"I've been kicking him all year," said Leaman, "and that wasn't working. Now I see all it takes is a little pinch."

In the big news of the luncheon, the Collegian's own Marty Kelley came up with the winning ticket for the door prize. Kelley's only reaction was, "I'm phlegmed. It was worth cutting Ziff's class for this."

Coach Jack Leaman leaves the Cage floor with his daughter, Laurie, after logging his eleventh straight basketball victory of the 1972-73 season. He is awaiting a possible NIT bid which may come out today.

BOWLING

On Sunday, February 25, the UMass Intercollegiate Bowling Team competed in the Fourth Annual Edward L. McCaffery Tournament sponsored by Lowell Tech. Team members for this tournament were: Matt Dichard, Dave Dimmick (capt.), Brian Elsden, Bill Fisher, Ron Gilmartin, and Wayne Kowalski. Despite solid performances by Elsden and Kowalski (588 and 576 respectively) the team failed to place in the top three. In the Tri-State league match against Briant College the team won one and lost three, bringing the team's record to 13 and 11 for the season.

In the doubles event, Kowalski and Elsden placed first. Kowalski shot a 637 and Elsden a 581 for a total 1218. They narrowly edged out second place which was, total'ed 1215, winning it with clutch strikes in the tenth frame of the last game. Kowalski shot a 246 game in this set.

In the singles event, Kowalski again was the strength for UMass. He finished second in the most hotly contested match of the day. He rolled a strong 649 only to be defeated by an outstanding 661 series which included two games in the 250's. This match went right to the wire with the outcome hinging on one ball in the tenth of the final game. His opponent proved to be very tough under the gun.

In all-events, Kowalski outdistanced the field handily with 1852 to place first. His nearest rival was almost 20 pins back.

Two weeks ago Kowalski became divisional champion of the A.C.U. He will compete for the national championship in Syracuse, N.Y. on April 14-16. The next league tournament will be held March 17 at Schine Ten Pin in Chicopee. It is being sponsored by Western New England College.

AGATHOS SOCIETY

The University of Massachusetts Agathos Society will be holding an organizational meeting in the near future. Agathos was a form of athletic competition developed on Cyprus in the seventh century B.C. It was used primarily to prepare young men and women for the physical and psychological hardships they would face during military training and campaigns. Knowledge of Agathos was lost to mankind until recently when a team of archeologists from the University of California unearthed fragments of a poem celebrating a championship contest of 2700 years ago. Although several details are still missing, scholars have been able to reconstruct Agathos' basic structure, rules, scoring, and team organization. Agathos has been played during the last year at several large universities and has met with great success. Participants report that their muscles become firm, their sleep sounder, their body control is increased, and considerable, often dramatic, improvement in their mental health. Further details concerning the origins, aims, and nature of this activity will be forthcoming.

Baseball Agrees

MIAMI (AP)—Player representatives of 22 of 24 major league baseball clubs gave unanimous approvel today to a new three-year contract negotiated with owners by Marvin Miller, executive director of the players group.

Key points in the agreement call for salary arbitration to begin in 1974 for players with two or more years of major league service and a provision requiring players with 10 or more years service, including five with the same club, will not be traded or sold without his consent.

The contract must still be approved by a simple majority of the baseball players, considered a formality.

JV Pucksters Win, 10-3

By JAY LUPPOLD

The Junior Varsity hockey team closed out their season in fashionable style trouncing the JV Yale team 10-3. The win evened off the Minutemen's season record at 8 wins, 8 losses, and 1 tie.

UM was sparked by Jimmy Lyons who contributed four goals in the assault and Bill Mintiens who put in a solid defensive effort.

Lyons started things off at 2:31 of the first period with a 20 foot blazer after taking a pass from Chuck Rooney. Steve Mason came right back at 4:17 on a fine solo effort taking the puck from behind the Yale cage for a 2-0 lead.

Yale finally scored with only two minutes remaining in the period when UM couldn't break out of their own zone, with Bill Morden registering the goal.

The second period had the Elis coming back with two goals only to be sandwiched between Lyons' second and third tallies. At 11:53 Lyons scored on a backhander through a screen for a power play goal. The Ivies made it 3-2 when Steve Givney hit the mark at 11:04, and then tied it up at 15:57 when Dick Snyder scored an unassisted break-away goal with the Minutemen all caught up ice. Then Lyons "scored the hat" taking a perfect two-line pass from Jim Alesandroni to put UM ahead to stay.

It only took 59 seconds into the third period when Alesandroni connected on a shot from the blue -line. Neil Drawbridge made it 6-3 on an unassisted effort beating two Yale defensemen wide, and then cutting in alone on goal. At 10:20 with Leary off for slashing Lyons got his fourth goal on a short-handed situation with an assist to Alesandroni.

At this point Coach Kidd replaced Jeff McReynolds who turned in another fine performance for John Binkowski who promptly made three big stops to thwart a Yale threat. But it was all over at this point. Wayne Douglas, who played a great two-way game converted a nice pass from Steve Ryan for a breakaway goal at 13:03. Then Chuck Rooney made it 9-3 on a drive along the ice from the point. The scoring was finally finished up with only 32 seconds left in the game when Bob Moore scored on a slapper from the blue line.

Yale Outskates UMass At SCC, 6-1

IN A FLURRY—Pat Keenan (4) reaches for the puck in front of the Yale goal last night at the Springfield Civic Center. The puck eluded him and so did the chance of knocking off a Division I team. Lonnie Avery (5) watches the frustration in the pucksters 6-1 defeat. (MDC Photo by Alan Chapman)

By ROY LYONS

Playoff-bound UMass got the second period blues in its regular-season finale at the Civic Center last night, dropping a 6-1 verdict to Yale University and snapping a three-game winning streak in the process.

Linemates Ron Grabner (3 goals), and Bobby Kane (2 goals, 3 assists) stole the show-and the Minutemen's last crack at a Division I victory-triggering two goals apiece in the second period to break a 1-1 deadlock.

It was not an impressive tune-up for Saturday's quarter-final round against Middlebury with the defense really breaking down in the middle stanza. Although John Kiah looked shakey at times-that's understandable for a guy who's warmed the bench all year—he couldn't be faulted on more than one goal.

The Minutemen had problems all night trying to clear out the traffic in front of Kiah, and they weren't much better clearing it out of the zone.

Things started well enough for UMass when Jim Lynch snapped a 15-footer past Gerry Stenson at 9:16 to open the scoring. Scott Stuart centered it to Lynch who picked his spot perfectly-high and to the stick side.

Pat Keenan was robbed by Stenson on a power play bid a couple minutes later as UMass pressed, but the Elis tied it at 13:56 when Grabner scooped home a backhander from a scramble in front. Kiah was screened on the play.

The UMass netminder made a great save just seconds before the buzzer on Dave Starkman's 20-footer, and they skated off even after one period.

UMass swarmed Stenson at the outset of the second period, but he was equal to a couple testers of Keenan's stick and another off Don Lowe's from inside the point. Don Riley almost stuffed one as he circled the net, but Yale finally cleared the zone.

Grabner gave the Elis the margin they needed at 3:01 when he beat Kiah with a 40-footer. It wasn't a particularly tough chance, but Kiah couldn't handle it.

Kane really put the game away with two quickies just 12 seconds apart halfway through the game. He broke in at 8:02 after collecting a loose puck at the blue line. Kiah got a piece of it, but it broke behind him. Then at 8:14 he rammed home Ron Grabner's passout to run the count to 4-1.

Grabner got the hat trick at 14:35 with a wrist shot along the ice from in deep on the right side. The angle was bad, but the shot was perfect.

Bob Balzhiser wrapped it up seven minutes into the third period when he stuffed a rebound past Kiah. The defense never even picked him up on the play.

Kiah had 43 saves for the night while Stenson steady all night, grabbed 40 Minutemen shots. Those are misleading stats. The good bids were almost all of Yale sticks.

Girl Swimmers Take Meet

By JANIS AHMADJIAN

A victory is the best way to end any season in sports. The UMass Women's Swim Team (WOSTUM) reigned supreme over the Rams of URI Tuesday night 56/53 to end a long season filled with its high and low points, plus good team spirit and effort.

The meet was nip and tuck in places. The final decision rested on the last event, the 200 Freestyle Relay. UMass team of Laurie Seluk, Kathe German, Mimi Ward, and Mary Ellen Dash clinched the victory for the Minutewomen Swimmers.

High point scorer for UMass was Seluk who placed first in the 50 Butterfly and 100 Freestyle.

Another top swimmer Dash won the 100 individual Medley and 100 Butterfly.

Swimming her best time of 2:28.9 in the 200 Freestyle Kathe German topped all other competitors.

Freshman Carol Canterbury scored first in the one meter Diving Competition (she just started competing this semester too).

Gaining valuable second place points were Kathy Abramson in the 200 Freestyle and 100 Breaststroke, Ilene Handler in the 50 Freestyle and German in the 100 Freestyle.

Scoring thirds were Abramson—50 Breaststroke, Mary Beth Stanne—100 IM and 100 Butterfly, and Clarke—100 Backstroke.

Also competing for WOSTUM were Roxanne LaCoste (Backstroke), Claire Briana (Breaststroke), Jan Garavano and Sue White, and Janine Corwin (Freestyle).

Thus, ended the 1972-73 season. No more gruelling workouts at the pool 3,000 yards a day 5-7 days a week which began way back in September. A comment should be made on the tremendous team spirit and unity forever present. The team worked with optimistic spirit as a whole encouraging one another on to do their best all the time. Alot of this had to do with Coach Pat Griffin who has done a tremendous job in setting this good type of sports/competition atmosphere at the practices and meets. It is important to win but more to enjoy the sport and what you're doing. She felt that "everyone improved their times over the season and achieved their personal best."

This was the last collegiate swim meet for graduating seniors Briana, Stanne, and Clarke.

The team has many Freshmen and Sophomores who will form a strong nucleus for next year's team.

Traveling to Westchester, Pa. this weekend to represent UMass in the Eastern Championships will be Dash, Handler, Abramson and Seluk. These girls have met the qualifying times in their special events plus the Freestyle Relay and will be competing against all the top girl swimmers of the East.

UMass vs. Middlebury, Saturday

NEW YORK (AP)—Topseeded Vermont, undefeated in 15 division games, will face eight-seeded St. Anselm's, 14-4-0, at Burlington, Vt., in the first round of the Eastern College Athletic Conference Division II hockey championship, it was announced Wednesday.

Other first-round pairings were: No. 2 seed Massachusetts, 11-4-2, vs. seventh-seeded Middlebury, 9-7-0, at Amherst, Mass.; No. 3 Norwich, 11-6-2, against Merrimack, 12-5-1, at Northfield, Vt., and fourth-seeded Williams, 14-4-0, vs. No. 5 Bowdoin, 10-4-1 at Williamstown, Mass.

The winners advance to the semifinals March 7 with the championship set for March 10. After the first round, the games will be played on the home ice of the higher seeded team.

Fencing

In a match held recently with the Springfield Fencing Club Jim Rose went undefeated on the day and placed first in the Men's Foil event. In the same event Al Chin placed fourth while in the Women's Foil Sue Uhl claimed first place and Sue Pannel came in fourth.

In a match held at Berkshire Community College, the men tied for second but were awarded third in a close match on a technicality.

Coaches Thoughts

What do the coaches think of the lowering of the drinking age in relation to the performances of their athletes? Coach Dick MacPherson of the football team summed up his faith in his men as follows: "I don't think it will affect them because if the athlete was serious about his training in the past, then the lowering of the drinking age will not effect his drinking habits in the future."

The Civic Center Experiment

The Springfield Civic Center "experiment" is over! At least for this year.

You can't call the experiment an overwhelming success; nor can you call it a total flop...(at least some people showed up for the games).

Two basketball games and two hockey games were taken away from the local arenas and shuffled on down to UMass' "home away from home"-the Springfield Civic Center. Students opposed this "experiment" from the beginning to the end. Some felt they had been cheated out of four games (which cost a buck to get into in Springfield) saying that their athletic fee had already paid for those games.

An athletic department spokesman explained to me that these kids don't know what their athletic fee covers. It doesn't just pay for the price of admission into sporting events. That's just a part of it. The fee also pays the salaries of the athletic department people, supplies, uniforms, etc...etc...

But, for me, it just isn't a thrill to see a UMass player posing in a uniform that I helped to pay for. Nope, I like to get something for my money...like free admission to all "home" athletic games.

Frank McInerney, Head of the Department of Athletics, in a Letter to the Editor of the Collegian last week, said that he had issued the following statement to all Athletic Department members effective immediately: "All athletic contests designated 'home' will be played on campus when the University is in session."

The key phrase in McInerney's letter is "when the University is in session." This means that use of the Civic Center will continue, but only during Intersession.

McInerney says the Civic Center will be "a very valuable adjunct for spreading UMass athletics." He claims that it will give taxpayers and alumni a chance to see UMass play and a chance to gain "new friends".

All that's fine. But how many games will be played down there? "A couple of basketball games, a couple hockey," says McInerney.

And what teams will supply the opposition? "It would have to be an attractive team to play; some team of interest to the Western Massachusetts market," he replied.

How about Providence College in basketball? Is that game of enough interest to the Western Mass. market? I'm not saying that this game will be played down there; but it is an interesting thought.

The hockey players complained about having to play their biggest game of the year, against Vermont, away from their real home, Orr Rink. They lost that game, 5-4, before a crowd of 2400 fans. Would the closeness of the Orr Rink crowd have made any difference if it had been played there?

The basketball team doesn't mind playing down there. Coach Leaman feels the same way McInerney feels, that it will be very beneficial to UMass athletics. But, both Leaman and Captain Tom McLaughlin were disappointed in the student turnout at the two basketball games.

Will the students of UMass ever accept the Springfield Civic Center as their "home away from home"? I highly doubt it. However, there is one possible way. Why doesn't the Civic Center admit students carrying UMass ID's free of charge? That way you might get the students to go down. And if the students of UMass start showing up at these "home" games at the Center, maybe next year our teams won't have to play before those small, non-partisan "crowds" like they did this year.

Demand Sirhan's Release

Guerrillas Sieze Diplomats

By HARRY DUNPHY
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT (AP)—Palestinian guerrillas stormed a diplomatic reception Thursday night in Khartoum, seized the U.S. ambassador and colleagues as hostages, then demanded the release of Sirhan Sirhan in California and other prisoners elsewhere.

The British Foreign Office said its ambassador reported that the Black September guerrillas shot their way into the reception, and the West German government said a Belgian diplomat was wounded.

An Associated Press dispatch from Khartoum said the guerrillas demanded the release within 24 hours of Sirhan, the Jordanian immigrant to the United States who was convicted of assassinating Sen. Robert F. Kennedy. They also sought freedom for the leaders of an urban guerrilla group in West Germany and Arab prisoners held in several countries, including all Palestinian women held by Israel.

It was not known what the guerrillas planned to do if their demands were not met. The Sudan government pledged it would do what it could to safeguard the lives of the hostages.

Sudan is an Arab country, south of Egypt on the Nile.

The AP dispatch from Khartoum said those held captive included U.S. Ambassador Cleo A. Noel Jr., the American charge d'affaires, the Jordan charge, the Belgian charge and the Saudi Arabian ambassador, his wife and children.

The dispatch said the raid was at the Saudi Arabian Embassy during a tea party for the U.S. charge d'affaires, Curtis Moore. He was due to leave Khartoum March 5.

Witnesses heard six shots, the dispatch said.

Britain's ambassador to the Sudan, Raymond Etherington-Smith, reported to the Foreign Ministry in London that the terrorists, after shooting their way in, held diplomats inside the embassy, "which is completely surrounded by Sudanese police."

It was not clear whether the commandos' strike had any connection with some sort of reprisal for Israel's downing last week of an airliner from Libya, a neighbor of Sudan. The death toll in that tragedy exceeded 100.

'Market' A Crowded Success

By KATHY FRASER

Business at the People's Market in the Student Union has steadily increased since its opening on February 12 and the response seems to have proven the need for such a student co-operative market.

"Most students really like it," stated Ellen Gavin, one of the founders, "and already we have some steady customers." Often the same student, usually a dorm student, will come in two or three times a day to purchase lunch and snacks, she said.

Since its opening, the People's Market has had 7,000 customers and is now doing approximately $350 in business per day.

Presently, the greatest problem is the lack of space and refrigeration, for there is only one small room for storage and office space beside the tiny Market. To solve the overcrowding, attempts are being made to obtain the Science Fiction Reading Room which presently adjoins the People's Market.

Although an inventory has not been taken yet, Ms. Gavin said she believes there has not been much theft during the day, and there have not been any security problems.

Ms. Gavin attributes the success of the People's Market to the high prices in local supermarkets and to its location in the Student Union. "People are just sick of big supermarkets," she said.

Suggestions have been made to enlarge the co-operative market to include records and bicycles, but at the present time there are not enough staff members to develop these ideas.

Ms. Gavin emphasized the fact that it is a co-operative market and any student who desires to help in some way should contact her. The People's Market has a great need for people to unload produce, to price goods, and to help with the bookkeeping. Members of the Campus Center staff have frequently helped in these areas, although the People's Market was intended to be run entirely by students.

Organized by a Student Senate sub-committee, the People's Market was funded with $4,000 from the Commuters Assembly. Ellen Gavin and Gail Sullivan, both sophomores, were members of the sub-committee and are presently managing the People's Market.

No Beer In Heaven-But The Bluewall...

By MARY KEANE

"This is the first time I'm going to miss my 1:25 all semester"—That was one student reaction to the first twenty-four hours of liquid liberation.

UMass students filled to capacity most of the local drinking establishments on the first day of the lowered drinking age. Reactions to the floods of newly licensed drinkers are many and varied.

Terry Grinnan, Manager of the Campus Center, was enthusiastic about Wednesday's midnight crowds at the Bluewall. Pleased with the absence of fights in such a large crowd, Grinnan likened the good feelings among the new drinkers to "a large wedding or birthday party, where people go to enjoy each other and drink without getting drunk." He predicts that the crowds will continue to jam campus bars all weekend, but by Sunday Morning the thrill may be gone.

Between 12 and 1 a.m. Wednesday night the Blue Wall served four times the volume of alcoholic beverages than is normal for the same hour on Wednesday nights. This doubled the total volume of liquor served in the Bluewall on an average Wednesday.

Now that the Bluewall's infamous blue fence is gone, Campus Center officials plan to carefully chart the amounts and times when liquor is consumed, in order to plan for future drinking spots on Campus.

Dorrit Kinder, Beverage Manager of the Campus Center, was present Thursday night at the opening of a bar with folksingers at the back of the Hatch.

Proposals have been submitted to the SUG board that would fund the creation of a pub in the rear of the Hatch. Kinder hopes that an atmosphere less sterile than that of the Bluewall could be designed in that area. Although plans for such a tavern could not be implemented until this summer at the earliest, the Student Union Governing Board appropriated $1000 Thursday to be used in decorating the new Hatch Bar. These funds will be used to buy large industrial spools and barrels, and students will be invited to design furniture with them, Ms. Kinder noted. She also would like to see the TOC used more for students than business functions.

Thursday saw a steady flow of students in both the Bluewall and the Top of the Campus. Gordon Bennett, bartender at the TOC, noted that the TOC was much busier than it ever had been in the afternoon. He commented that many students had tried to get into the TOC, but there weren't enough seats to accommodate them.

Which brings us back down the elevator and into the Bluewall. By three p.m. Thursday, there was a standing room only crowd. By ten p.m., the Bluewall had reached its 750 person capacity and waiting lines had formed at the entrance. Bouncer Doug Kimball said that the crowd appeared to consist of more 18-20 year olds than anyone else. Drinkers saw some relief from Wednesday night's crowds as people were standing only four deep at the bar, instead of fifteen. Twelve bartenders rushed to meet the requests with no interruptions from rowdy drinkers.

But how are students reacting to their new status? With an elbow to the bar and an overactive ear, these comments were overheard:

"This could make going to school fun."

"This ain't worth it."

"I don't get it. I've been drinking since I was fourteen, how come I'm craving a legal taste?"

"Look at all those kegs!"

"It's one o'clock and I'm already loaded."

Possible 'New Lead' In Video Equipment Theft

By MARK VOGLER

The University of Massachusetts Public Safety Department said Thursday that they may have come up with a "new lead" in their continuing investigation into the intersession break-in involving estimated theft of $6200-worth of video-taping equipment.

It is believed by UMass police officials that sometime between December 30 and January 14 various types of TV recording and camera equipment were stolen from WTOY, a student video-taping studio located in the Student Union.

Saul Chafin, assistant director of the Department, declined to comment further on the matter, claiming that revealing substantial information could hinder the case since "we may have come up with a new angle."

Student Senate treasurer Paul Hamel said the equipment had been uninsured at the time it was stolen. WTOY sources and Hamel have pointed the blame at the senate for "failure to do a composite inventory check which is a prerequisite for insurance."

Hamel said that whoever took the equipment "obviously knew what they were doing because one complete operating unit was taken." He also indicated that it was discussed many times prior to the theft that WTOY's room posed a major security hazard for the type of equipment they stored.

Senate sources have said that entry to the WTOY studio occurred by means of a curtain partitioning WTOY from the Student Homophile League, an adjacent office.

WTOY members have declined to comment about the issue. Secretary David Bunker said the UMass security office had instructed the studio not to give out any information to anyone-especially the Collegian because "it could wreck the current police investigation."

According to Bunker, "we have been unduly harassed by the Collegian. A lot of different people have confronted me with a lot of different rumors of how we were going to get screwed if we didn't hand over the information we had available."

Environment Concerns Class "Sees" Frisco Earthquake

By CAROLYN CALDWELL

"San Francisco: Morning 1906. An earthquake shook the city to the ground in 60 seconds. Another earthquake is inevitable."

This is the beginning of a film predicting a San Francisco earthquake with a potential of 100,000 deaths within the next few decades that Dr. Randolph W. Bromery showed to the Environmental Concerns II class last night.

Chancellor Bromery spent a major part of his geological career with earthquake research and was one of the scientists involved in making this film.

Bromery said that the film illustrated how hard it is to get people working on environmental concerns. "We can't convince the people in the city that the earthquake is going to happen," Bromery said. "No one in San Francisco is worried about it." Houses, schools and hospitals are built directly on active faults, according to the film.

"My moral is: Don't give up. A lot of people try to get others involved in projects like controlling the pollution of the Connecticut River and get discouraged because people fail to get concerned," Bromery continued.

Bromery said that economics are higher on people's priority lists than environmental issues. "No television network will show this film. Economic impact is more important than environmental impact."

"Big Ditch" Keeps On Creeping

By NANCY BASMAJIAN

The big ditch, carrier of the pipes that will connect the new steam-generator plant at Tillson Farm with the old plant near the Textbook Annex, is becoming less visible on its difficult way to completion, according to Ed Ryan, chief project engineer at the Physical Plant.

"Ninety-five per cent of the piping is in the ground." That figure includes the length of piping from the Tillson plant which passes the Sylvan dorms on its way down Eastman Lane, then across North Pleasant Street past the Grad Research Center, and down Governors Drive around the Engineering buildings, up to Campus Center Way.

The piping has not yet crossed the Campus Center Way, which is the road on which the old plant is located.

The stretch of the ditch from Holdsworth Hall to the Campus Center Way is still an open excavation, which will be filled in and covered with gravel until weather conditions are more favorable to paving. Traffic in this area will have to be rerouted for the time being. Referring to the inconvenience that this rerouting may cause, and speaking of the whole project, Ryan emphasized, "Before we can really do any cleanup, we've got to have the frost out of the ground, and better weather." This means late March or April, after which the last link to the old power plant will be the crossing of Campus Center Way. Concerning this, Ryan said, "We'd like to do it when no one is here," when there is "favorable weather and longer daylight hours."

As for the completion date, Ryan says of the new Tillson power plant, "Our expectation is that it will be operational in January of 1974." Ryan also said there are many tests which must be passed along the way. After the pipes are laid into the ditch, and before they may be covered, they must be tested for leaks and for conformance with specifications.

When a leak is found, much care and time must be taken to reweld the pipes before they may be buried. Finally, the boilers at the new plant itself will undergo a type of trial period before they are actually operational. All of these requirements tend to make the completion date more flexible.

Meanwhile, Ryan says, "We try to create as little inconvenience as possible." He adds that, "The old steam-generated plant eventually will be phased out," to the point of total dependence upon oil and/or gas, as opposed to the present coal-burning system.

Indicating the need of the new Tillson power plant, Ryan said, "You've got to expand the power plant if you want to have heat and power for the University." The oil burning plant will be better in many ways, including the cost, availability, shipping and storage of fuel, he said.

CC Board Reviews Finances

By CINDY GONET

The Campus Center Board of Governors last night reviewed the mid-year financial report submitted by Warren Grinnan, Manager of the Campus Center.

In revenue-producing accounts, the Campus Center for the past 6 months has generated $175,300, compared to $156,000 produced for the last 6 months of fiscal year 1972.

"The trend seems to be reversing in maintaining a cash balance for the Campus Center," stated the report. However, the totals when compared to last year will appear golden, as last fiscal year was a financial disaster.

Anticipated in the report by Grinnan, was a projected 12-month fiscal year budget for 1973 of $217,300. Budgeting for this fiscal year was projected at only $175,200.

The Board then discussed the renovation of the "back of the Hatch" into an operational bar. It way passed that $1,000 be allocated for expenses in procuring telephone wire spools and nail kegs as furnishings for the bar.

It was expressed by the Board that students will hopefully help in shellacking the furnishings. The possibility was first suggested by Grinnan, thus making it a "student bar". The new furnishings are hoped to change the atmosphere of the area.

The Board, especially Frank Cotter, Board member, felt that it would be financially wiser to make provisional renovations costing $1,000 rather than the projected expenditure of $50,000 for permanent renovations.

Other business included the approval of a motion allowing for an expenditure of not more than $300 for additional storage shelves for the Sweet Shop (Candy Counter).

Presented by the Food Services Committee of the Board was a list of priorities and objectives. They included: a look into the food price increase in all areas, including the Top of the Campus and Catering, where the increase was not enacted (mainly due to the high price range), a study and implementation of the Arthur D. Little study, which is soon to be completed, to work with management in developing new policies for providing better quality/quantity of service, and to work with the management on the budget for the forthcoming fiscal year.

Tabled to the appropriate committee was a move to approve a policy regarding the use of the Catering Kitchen in regard to foreign students and cultural groups.

Jim Lindsey, of the Services Committee, reported that any ideas for the expansion of the University Store, such as setting up an arcade, would be welcome.

A motion was passed approving the relocation of monies in the budget for the fiscal year 1973.

Remuneration of the Board Officers and Committee Chairmen was requested and a subcommittee was consequently established.

Rape Trial Continued

NORTHAMPTON—The trial of a UMass senior on charges of rape and assault and battery was continued Wednesday for 20 days, as Judge Paul A. Tamburello ordered the defendant to undergo further mental examination at Bridgewater State Hospital.

The continuance was ordered in the trial of 25-year-old John A. Langsworthy of Washington, D.C., who is charged with the rape of a 19-year-old UMass coed during the UMass-Maine football game September 23.

In ordering the continuance, Judge Tamburello said the original mental report on the defendant was incomplete.

Langsworthy, who was employed as a part-time custodian at the Hopkins Academy in Hadley, admitted Tuesday that he forced the coed into woods near Alumni Stadium and assaulted her by holding a pen to her throat.

UMass police have alleged in testimony that Langsworthy spotted the victim sunbathing while he was bicycling near the stadium, and alleged he put the point of a pen to her throat and took her into nearby woods, where he allegedly raped her during a two-hour period.

Crash In F Lot

Four cars were damaged, but no injuries were reported early this morning when a car driving down Fearing St. hopped the curb into F lot and crashed into three cars shortly after midnight.

A UMass security spokesman said he had reports of "just property damage" to the three cars, the owners of which had not yet been determined.

By FRANCES BROCK

The Student Senate Budgeting Committee continued reviewing the rationales of R.S.O. groups last night under the new criteria for funding. Under the new criteria, R.S.O. groups must come under one of the following categories: a mass-media unique in scope to the student body as a whole without subscription cost; a unique service vital to the interests of the undergraduate populace; a unique group whose prime purpose is to increase the educational scope of the undergraduate population, while providing a vital service to the community.

Paul Doran, chairman of the committee, pointed out, repeatedly, that many R.S.O. groups are duplicating as well as many are becoming too political or social action orientated. Examples were the Black Scientist Society, Union of Third World Women and Committee on Poverty. Another question repeatedly brought up was whether the poverty class was really being helped by adding more organizations for funding. Increase in funding means the increasing of student taxes. Despite opposing arguments, only the rationale of the U.T.W.W. failed. However, this will be challenged at the Student Senate meeting March 11.

The Concert Committee, Black Scientist Society, Outing Club and Committee on Poverty had their rationales passed.

The University and State Communication Council, which is the student lobbiest group in Boston, had their budget cut from $3,750 to $2,160. This was agreeable by all.

The committee will continue working on budgeting for the next week.

Resident Heads' Rent Hike Rescinded

By CINDY GONET

The Rents and Fees Committee of the Student Senate last night debated the justifiability of an increase in meal tickets and the rent increase decided upon last week for the Heads of Residence and Residence Directors.

After 4 hours of deliberation, the Committee rescinded their action of last Tuesday increasing the rent of Heads of Residences $50 per month and $20 per month for Residence Directors.

It was recommended by the Committee that 1) the rents of Heads of Residence and Residence Directors be paid in whole or in part by the state, and 2) the salaries of Residence personnel be increased.

Bobbie LaPorte, Student Senator, reported that because the apartments of the Heads of Residence are not merely living quarters, but double as offices as well, the grievances against the Committee were justified, to a certain extent.

The rent fees for Residence personnel has not increased since 1964.

Salaries for the Residence Directors annually is $3,400, and the Head of Residences receive $5,600. The differentiation is based mainly on the fact that a Director supposedly works only 20 hours per week and 9 months of the year.

After this recommendation by the Committee, the proposal will be sent to Vice Chancellor of Administrative Affairs, Campion, and Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, Gage. Reportedly, Gage and Campion were opposed to the increases decided upon by the Committee last Tuesday.

The state will then arbitrate the motions directed by the Rents and Fees Committee.

At the opening of the meeting, Stoneham, Director of Food Services submitted a proposal for the budgeting in the next fiscal year. Included in the report were factors indicating an increase in food prices and housekeeping of the Food Services Department.

Stoneham reported a 4% overall increase in food prices and as a result, meal tickets will increase in price from 3.7 per cent to 3.9 per cent, depending on the meals per week.

Student Role And Faculty Union Discussed

By LINDA WOODWARD

The Tenure and Personnel Policy Subcommittee of the Student Senate held a discussion last night with representatives of the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) and the American Association of University Professors (AAUP).

The discussion centered primarily around the future of student interests if these two groups merge, with students questioning their role under such a plan. Frank Falta, a representative of the MSP, stressed the fact that the students still will have no legal involvement within the union. Their views will have to be limited to advisory status. Stan Young, also a guest at the discussion, claimed that in order for the union to be successful it would necessarily be closer to students and their needs.

$100,000 Taken From SW To Subsidize Sylvan Area

By DON BISHOP

"A common business practice" were the words used by Charles Hampton of the Housing Administration Office, this week, to describe the transfer made at the beginning of the academic year of $100,000 from the budget of Southwest to that of Sylvan.

This sum of money goes into the operating budget of Sylvan, where it ostensibly serves to keep the room rent charges for that area at its percent figure of $700.

While nothing definite is known at this time, it appears that the Administration will attempt to keep the Sylvan rent at $700 for next year also, with the possibility that more monies will have to be withdrawn from the "reserve accounts of Southwest, where the $100,000 used this year was taken."

Hampton stated that the transfer was made in the interest "of the whole system of University Housing." He added that this type of thing had been done in the past and that it would probably be necessary in the future.

The money transferred in this case came from reserves to be used for re-furbishing the dormitories in "Project 4" of the UMass Building Authority. Project 4 includes the Southwest dorms: Coolidge, Kennedy, Emerson, Thoreau, and Melville.

While the decision to make this transfer of funds was made by the Administration, permission did have to be obtained from the Building Authority, whose funds have been used to construct the dormitories in Southwest, Sylvan, Orchard Hill, and Brett and Gorman House. Earlier dorms were built by the state and the now defunct UMass Building Association.

The Building Authority considers any transfer of funds from one area to another as being a "temporary loan" according to Hampton. In actuality however, this "loan" may not be returned for a number of years. Hampton stated that there was no way to figure how long or how short a period of time this would be.

The $100,000 has been used in Sylvan as part of their debt service payment (construction costs and interests). This is one of the four main categories of the residential areas budgets. The other categories include Physical Plant—used for such things as janitors salaries, Business Office, and the Area Budget—used for furniture purchases and dorm renovations.

According to Hampton, the debt service for Sylvan is substantially higher than for the older dorms on campus. Comparatively speaking, a student living in Central is giving $131 out of his annual $580 charge in payment of the debt service of his dorm. Out of the $700 charged per student for Sylvan, $535 goes for debt service. There is then comparatively less money left in Sylvan to go into other areas of the operating budget.

One other factor that comes into the picture is that the transfer of these reserve monies can only be made from the different Building Authority projects in Southwest and not from the earlier Building Authority funded dorms of Orchard Hill and Brett and Gorman. There was a stipulation made with these dorms that reserve funds could not be transferred to another area.

While Student Senate Rents and Fees Committee Chairman Mike Gregory says that his Committee supports this type of transfer, in the interest of "students helping students," he does acknowledge some inequity in the "freezing of reserve funds in the older residential areas.

While Southwest Area Business Manager John O'Connell was unavailable yesterday for comment on the current transfer of Southwest funds, informed sources alleged that O'Connell is dissatisfied, feeling that the $100,000 may not only be being used for payment of the debt service, but also for the institution of new residential area programs in Sylvan, which are not presently being offered in Southwest.

136 POWs To Be Freed By Saturday

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP)—U.S. and Communist delegations are meeting Friday to work out final arrangements for the weekend release of 136 American prisoners of war by the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong.

The refusal of the Communists to free the men earlier in the week had set off the first real crisis in the Vietnam cease-fire agreements.

Coming out of POW camps with the Americans will be two West German medical workers, two Thais and two Filipinos captured at various times during the war, the Communists said. The Philippines and Thailand had troops in South Vietnam at one time. The Germans were here as part of a charity team.

The U.S. delegation said that while it had been assured 136 Americans would be freed in this latest group, it had not been advised by Thursday night of full details of release procedures.

In Paris, North Vietnamese foreign minister, Nguyen Duy Trinh, assured Secretary of State William P. Rogers that the prisoners would be released by 9 p.m.—8 a.m. EST—Saturday.

Rogers is attending the international conference on Vietnam in Paris.

A U.S. spokesman said North Vietnam had given the United States a list of 106 Americans and two Thais who would be released in the North, but the American delegation was still awaiting the names of 30 U.S. prisoners captured by the Viet Cong in South Vietnam.

A Communist spokesman in Saigon said the Filipinos and West Germans are among those on the Viet Cong list of POWs to be freed. The Thais were on Hanoi's list.

Bui Tin, the chief spokesman for the North Vietnamese delegation to the four-party Joint Military Commission, said the American prisoners held by the North would be released at Hanoi's Gia Lam Airport and flown in U.S. planes to Clark Air Base in the Philippines, headquarters of Operation Homecoming for the repatriation of all American prisoners in Indochina.

The Viet Cong delegation held back Thursday night on the release point for the U.S. prisoners held in South Vietnam.

During the release of the first group of 143 Americans in North and South Vietnam on Feb. 12, those held in the South were turned over to American authorities at Communist headquarters at Loc Ninh, near the Cambodian border 75 miles north of Saigon.

In Washington, the Defense Department said the resumption by minesweeping operations at Haiphong were contingent on the release by the Communist delegation of a specific timetable for the freeing of the 136 American POWs, and the turn over by Viet Cong of their list to the U.S. delegation.

The United States had temporarily halted troop withdrawals with 11,300 servicemen remaining in South Vietnam and had suspended the sweeping of mines from North Vietnamese waterways after the Communist side failed to release the prisoners Tuesday.

The 30 Americans scheduled for release in South Vietnam include 26 servicemen and four civilians.

The release of American POWs this weekend will bring the rate of repatriation in line with that of the rate of U.S. troop withdrawals from Vietnam. The Vietnam peace agreement signed in Paris on Jan. 27 stipulates that prisoners will be released at the same rate as troop withdrawals and both will be completed by March 28.

The release of the additional 136 prisoners will bring the total of Americans repatriated to 299, or better than 50 per cent.

Indians Free 'Knee' Hostages

By TERRY DEVINE
Associated Press Writer

WOUNDED KNEE, S.D. (AP)—The 11 persons held hostage for two days by members of the American Indian Movement were freed Thursday night after the militant Indians negotiated for more than two hours with South Dakota's two senators.

The freed hostages said they would stay in Wounded Knee because it is their home. Sens. George McGovern and James Abourezk told a news conference.

McGovern and Abourezk said they would continue to negotiate with AIM leaders, who had asked to talk to the senators about Indian civil rights and treaties.

"They are going to construct a tepee in a field where the negotiations will be continued tonight," said McGovern.

"We went down to Wounded Knee to the Clive Guildersleeve home and talked to all 11 hostages." Abourezk said. "Although they are free to go, they don't want to leave because they consider Wounded Knee their home."

Guildersleeve and his wife Agnes, the operators of the trading post, were among the hostages.

"All 11 indicated they are free," said McGovern. "We offered to take them with us, but under the circumstances they preferred to stay there."

McGovern, Abourezk and Joseph Trimback, FBI special agent in charge of operations at Pine Ridge during the disturbance, left Pine Ridge by car Thursday evening and headed toward Wounded Knee, about 20 miles northeast of Pine Ridge.

Their car passed through a roadblock set up about seven miles outside Wounded Knee, but all cars carrying members of the news media were stopped.

The Indians had asked to talk to the senators about Indian civil rights and treaty rights.

McGovern and Abourezk were accompanied to South Dakota by staff aides to Sens. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., and J. W. Fulbright, D-Ark. Indian leaders had said they would hold the hostages until Kennedy and Fulbright themselves came to the reservation.

Dollar Tailspins On European Markets

By ANTHONY COLLINGS
Associated Press Writer

BONN, Germany (AP) — The dollar went into a tailspin Thursday on European money markets left unconvinced by President Nixon's 10 per cent devaluation 17 days ago.

The situation grew so acute that leading European money markets, as well as Tokyo's, decided to close Friday to bar all trading.

There was talk of joint action by the Common Market countries. The British and German leaders, Edward Heath and Willy Brandt, met. Germany's central bank council held an 11-hour meeting.

On Thursday the European governments latched onto a record $3-1/2 billion to little avail.

West Germany's central bank bought up an unprecedented $2.65 billion as part of the effort to keep the dollar from falling and to keep its own mark from rising in value.

All major European currencies, however, rose in value against the dollar, indicating the Nixon gamble was a flop. It was the first time since June.

The reason Americans will have to pay even more for European vacations and goods is the attack on the dollar germans.

Nixon ordered the 10 per cent devaluation last month in what his administration described as a move to make American goods less expensive to foreigners. But to Americans it meant the price of foreign goods went up.

The devaluation came after a rush from dollars into West German marks and Japanese yen, regarded as the world's strongest currencies.

West Germany and Japan, major traders with the United States, want to keep their currencies from rising too far above the dollar for fear of losing lucrative sales and also to keep inflation from grabbing hold of their economies.

Brandt called the emergency meeting of experts soon after the arrival of Heath for two days of talks centering on the money crisis.

Widespread belief that the two leaders would agree on a joint float of Common Market currencies against the dollar apparently triggered the wave of selling.

Foreign exchanges have been in a state of jitters for many weeks—and rumors bring quick reactions.

"I just can't see any end to this mad speculation," one London banker said. "Economic fundamentals don't matter any more."

Since Nixon's devaluation Feb. 13, the exchanges and gold markets have held to a number of times by such bursts of activity that have subsided just as quickly.

Exchange dealers and dollar-selling orders were flooding in from every direction Thursday—from the Far East and Middle East to New York.

Excitation heating into after up two full percentage points, showing speculators were increasing dollars in order to sell them and buy more marks, Dutch guilders and even pounds.

Panel Recommends Human Experiment Protection Board

By JOHN HELLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—A draft report from a citizens panel investigating a controversial federal syphilis experiment has concluded that possible damage should have been given the black participants in the test.

The panel also horrendously recommended Thursday that the federal government establish a permanent National Human Research Protection Board to oversee all government-sponsored research involving human subjects.

The committee was appointed last year by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to investigate the syphilis experiment, known as the Tuskegee Study.

The study, begun in 1932 and ended after public disclosure last summer, involved more than 400 black men from Macon County, Ala. The men, all suffering from syphilis, were denied treatment for the disease so that the U.S. Public Health Service doctors could determine through autopsies what damage untreated syphilis does to the human body.

Lynch Party Faces Defeat

By COLEY TROUT
Associated Press Writer

DUBLIN (AP)—Prime Minister Jack Lynch's ruling party took stock of what looked like certain defeat in Irish parliamentary elections, with returns early Friday giving new seats to the opposition coalition.

While declining to concede, Lynch had admitted: "It does seem unlikely that we shall form a government."

With 13 of 144 seats left to be decided in the vote counting, Lynch's party had shed seats to the coalition and to the opposition controlled by Liam Cosgrave. Lynch's party lost 10 seats, the latter coalition had 54 and others had 3.

Approval for Lynch depended on picking up seats in the cities, and Lynch admitted that this was unlikely.

He said he will seek urgent talks with Cosgrave on what he regards as the most pressing issue facing Ireland—the expected British plan for Northern Ireland, where Catholic guerrillas are waging a guerrilla war for union with the republic.

Lynch's party, the Fianna Fail, or Soldiers of Destiny, had a slight lead over Cosgrave's coalition in earlier returns from the Thursday election. Both Lynch, 56, and Cosgrave, 54, hold law degrees in the Irish.

Nixon Abandons Welfare Reform

By LEE BYRD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon officially gave up his long-troubled welfare reform plan Thursday and defended cutbacks in other social programs.

Nixon also offered one of his most caustic appraisals to date of the Great Society initiatives of his predecessor, Lyndon B. Johnson.

"Well-intentioned as this effort may have been," declared the President, "the results in case after case amounted to dismal failure."

Nixon said his rollbacks in the human resources area had produced "some convincing and considerable misunderstanding." But he proposed expenditures of $176 billion nonetheless "both a generous budget and a responsible budget," he said.

Elsewhere, he noted, the total is "nearly twice the amount that was being spent on such programs when I took office in 1969."

The President said "the welfare mess cannot be permitted to continue" and acknowledged he was abandoning broad welfare reform "since the legislative outlook seems to preclude passage...in the immediate future."

Nixon had wanted to replace categorical welfare aid with the family assistance plan. It would have guaranteed a minimum annual income to poor families, while bolstering work requirements.

The President said he would follow through, however, with vigorous steps to strengthen the management of payments to families with dependent children through both administrative and proposed legislative programs. The system now, he said, is "inequitable, inefficient and inadequate."

His remarks came in a 17-page document sent to the Congress as one of a series of State of the Union reports.

The President said that even as he is "unremittingly committed...to fulfilling the American dream for all Americans," the first place to begin is "by recognizing that by almost any measure, life is better in 1973 than ever before in our history."

Nixon said he was not as much concerned as "simply a matter of government helping people," but rather one "under which government helps poor people to help themselves and one another."

Nixon said he would ask Congress for a new law to reform the "often crushing burdens which property taxes place on many older Americans," but gave no hint of what he had in mind or when the legislation would be forthcoming.

The President said he would submit a national health insurance plan, but offered no details. A previous proposal would have tied the insurance to private industry.

Nixon advocated legislation to convert specific federal programs for helping new black growth in the urban. This step, he said, would foster greater self-determination for Indians.

Mazda Engine Meets 1975 Emission Standards

By STAN BENJAMIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency said Thursday the Japanese-made Mazda rotary engine meets the U.S. auto emission standards for 1975, becoming the third unconventional engine to do so.

None of the conventional engines used in 99 per cent of the cars sold in the United States has passed the test, and EPA must decide soon whether to extend the 1975 antipollution deadline.

An EPA staff report says the Japanese version of the Wankel rotary, a Japanese-made piston engine of unconventional design and a German diesel all appear capable of meeting the 1975 standards.

But it noted that the three engines together supply less than 1 per cent of the U.S. auto market and predicted their market share by 1975 "will probably remain small."

To meet the 1975 standards, an auto engine must emit no more than 15 per cent of the carbon monoxide and hydrocarbons emitted by 1970 engines, even after 50,000 miles of driving.

EPA said Thursday that the Mazda, a small car made by Toyo Kogyo and equipped with a rotary engine, passed a 50,000 mile test of emissions.

The EPA staff reported however that General Motors, Chrysler and Ford were "above average" in antipollution development and "will probably be able to comply by model year 1975."

The "Big Three" automakers supply about 85 per cent of the U.S. auto market, EPA said.

A number of automakers asked EPA last year to extend the 1975 deadline, arguing that the technology is not yet available. But requests were turned down by EPA administrator William D. Ruckelshaus. A federal court later ordered Ruckelshaus to reconsider the deadline.

EPA appears now capable of public hearings on the subject March 27.

Big Five Signs 'Hands-Off' Pact

By GEORGE C. CARPENTER
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP)—The Big Five nations Thursday joined in an endorsement of the Washington-based peace agreement leaving U.S. foreign soldiering in Indochina.

But the actions by the United States, the Soviet Union, China, Britain and France, along with several other governments, left the fragile agreement over the control and working of the settlement.

The world's great powers, plus the Communist and pro-Communist governments in Vietnam, and the four nations supervising the cease-fire, initialed a nine-point declaration.

It's central purpose was to decide the international commitment with the terms of the month-old compact of peace accords.

Canada, South Vietnam and Britain, however, voiced definite reservations while accepting the document.

Foreign Secretary Mitchell Sharp of Canada told his colleagues frankly that the peace-keeping arrangements were inadequate.

South Vietnam's Tran Van Lam lashed out bitterly at Hanoi for its refusal to have the Saigon government recognized largely as the only legal regime in the country.

"In substance, in words, instead of a conference can insure the maintenance of peace in Vietnam," Britain's Anthony Royle warned before initialing the declaration. "This must and will be the position committed on the ground for if they are determined the agreement will work. It will, if they are not so determined, it will not."

An important announcement to every student in the health professions:
NEW SCHOLARSHIPS ARE AVAILABLE IMMEDIATELY.
THEY COVER TUITION AND RELATED COSTS AND PROVIDE AN ANNUAL INCOME OF $5,300 AS WELL.
If a steady salary of $400 a month and paid-up tuition will help you continue your professional training, the scholarships just made possible by the Uniformed Services Health Professions Revitalization Act of 1972 deserve your close attention. Because if you are now in a medical, osteopathic, dental, veterinary, podiatry, or optometry school, or are working toward a Ph.D. in Clinical Psychology, you may qualify.
We make it easy for you to complete your studies. You're commissioned as an officer as soon as you enter the program, but remain in student status until graduation. Still, during each year you will be on active duty (with salary paid) for 45 days. Naturally, if your academic schedule requires that you remain on campus, you stay on campus—and still receive your active duty pay.
Active duty requirements are fair. Basically, you serve one year as a commissioned officer for each year you've participated in the program, with a two year minimum. You may apply for a scholarship with either the Army, Navy or Air Force, and know that upon completing active duty you'll have risen and shaken in keeping with your professional training.
The life you'll live under yourself requires long, hard, expensive training. Now we are in a position to give you some help. Mail in the coupon at your earliest convenience for more detailed information.

Student Control

Remember Freshman Orientation? Remember all the propaganda you received during those three days–all those nice things about dorm life, courses, and the University in general? Remember how impersonal of it seemed?

Well, there is now a proposal to change all of this. The proposal, brought up at Tuesday's meeting of the Academic Affairs Committee, would give students control over the Summer Counseling program, which is currently administered by the University. The purpose of this idea is to reach the incoming freshman on a personal level, and to accurately educate him on the structure of the University and all the alternatives available to him.

The best person to do this would be another student, one who has experienced life at UMass and is able to convey his impressions and his experience to a newcomer. It is the student who knows best what kind of things an incoming freshman wants and needs to know; it is the student who would best be able to fill this need by devising an appropriate counselling session. Furthermore, the present program is funded entirely by students as it is, which is one more reason why students should have control over it.

The University should give students control of the Freshman Summer Counseling and Orientation Program.

Recreation Allocation

The operation of Boyden's and WoPE's gyms and pools has been subject to criticism lately. There have been complaints that the pools and gyms are not open enough, particularly on the weekends, and that the hours the facilities are open are not the most advantageous times for students.

Unfortunately, these problems cannot be solved by any simple formula. They are involved with other activities the Phys. Ed. Department operates. The availability of the facilities is tied into University finances, varsity sports, PE 100 classes and maintenance. The hours the pools and gyms are open depends on the amount of money the Intramurals Office has to pay its help. If the pool is open, there must be a lifeguard present. If the gym is open, a supervisor and trainer must be in attendance. Janitorial services are also required. Other criteria for opening the facilities include the amount of time teams want to practice, and the demand on the facilities by Intramurals and PE classes.

The Intramurals Office has a very limited budget; this year they will spend a little over $30,000 on activities. Of this sum, about $1,275 is used to pay supervisors who are present during 'open play' periods. Twenty-five hundred dollars was used to pay lifeguards (they have not had a raise since 1966). Over seven thousand dollars was spent on the supervisors for the Intramural programs themselves. Supervisors are necessary to prevent rip-offs and insure some sort of safety for the participants in the activities. A trainer is also on duty when the gyms are open to provide aid in case of an emergency. The role of the lifeguards is obvious and necessary. A janitor must be in attendance when any facility is in use.

Opening the pools and gyms on weekends, especially for a few hours, is very expensive. Janitors must be paid overtime and compensation must also be given to trainers and supervisors. The Intramurals Office feels that the best way to allocate the use of the facilities is on the basis of expense and demand. Relatively few people use the gyms and pools on long weekends and the operating expenses at that time are very high. So, the gyms and pools are closed on three-day weekends. Operating the facilities on regular weekends is more expensive than it is during the week. This, combined with the belief in the Intramurals Office that this is a suitcase school (everyone leaves for the weekends), means that emphasis has been placed on operating the pools and gyms during the week.

The Intramurals Office receives money from the state "03" account, but very little. Most of their revenues come from a twenty-dollar fee paid by freshmen. If the recreational facilities are to be open more often, especially during the weekends, more money is needed. This money could come from the thirty-dollar Athletic Fee we pay each year. The thirty-dollar fee is used to finance varsity and sub-varsity sports, and maintain and pay for the stadium. About six dollars out of each thirty dollars is used to service the stadium debt and insure maintenance. The remaining twenty-four dollars is used by the intercollegiate sports and their supporting systems. Last year, the Student Athletic Fee represented over half a million dollars for the varsity sports and the stadium. Money for Athletic Scholarships does not come from this fund but instead from gate receipts and guaranteed fees (these are the funds that other school guarantee we will receive when we play their teams at their schools).

What I would suggest, to increase the Intramurals budget, is that one or maybe two dollars of each fee be taken away from intercollegiate sports and set aside in a fund designed to keep the pools and gyms open more often, particularly on the weekends. One dollar from each Athletic Fund would represent a fifty percent increase in the Intramurals Activities Budget. Some of this money could be set aside for paying janitors and trainers who are not paid at present by the Intramurals Dept. This should only be done, of course, if the demand for the gyms and pools remains high.

Increased availability of the recreational facilities is of no use, if the hours they are open are not widely known. Schedules of the hours the pools and gyms are open should be posted in each dorm, and should appear in the Collegian at least twice a semester.

Little People

In view of the majority of minority groups that have liberated themselves in recent times, I think it only fair to mention one group (in which I am personally involved) that has been grossly overlooked. Let us not forget the little people of America. Little people of America, let us not be looked down upon any longer.

Up until now, I've been pretty tolerant of people who are bigger than me. After all, some of my best friends are tall, but I've had my last neck cramp from looking up at anyone when I speak. I will be embarrassed no longer at the fact that my feet don't touch the floor when I sit on a couch in the Campus Center. And absolutely refuse to sit in between the front seats of a small foreign car when it's crowded because I'm the smallest.

The Wizard of Id proclaimed last week as "Be nice to the Little People" week. But no one was nice to me. I was still abused for being little. People still patted me on the top of my head and still used my shoulders as resting posts for their elbows. The worst part of all this is the fact that no one even realized that they were even discriminating against the little people by what they were doing. There are so many little people being discriminated in this manner every day that no one recognizes us as a full-fledged minority group. The time has come to demand our rights as an oppressed minority. (Now that we've been declared as an official minority, does that mean that we can take over the School of Ed.?)

My small brothers and sisters, stand up for your liberty, but don't let your lack of height stop you from being seen. Let the tall people of the world know what you're going through. Do they think that it is so easy living in a world of standing on chairs to reach the top shelf? Do they realize the tremendous physical effort it takes to stand on tiptoes to see over the counter in the Coffee Shop? Yes, tall people, it's quite a luxury to be able to lean over the bar in the Bluewall. Think about that the next time you see a little person try and order a drink. Small people, the next time one larger than you comments on your size, look that big bigot right in the navel and say, "All power to the small, brother."

So, my small brothers and sisters, the time has come for us to make our presence known to the tall world. We must respond to the lack of height as being not only natural but becoming. Stand straight, but not tall, and remember that lack (of height, that is) is beautiful. Right on.

Consideration

By BILL MANBURG

It has recently come to my attention, that students do care about their fellow classmates. I wish to refute any and all charges levied against students for being inconsiderate, or not caring about rising costs or the economic plight of the University.

I live in Brown, a dormitory in the Sylvan Area, which is to many like living off campus. Right down the hall from where I reside, is the laundry room. Once a week, because I have a limited supply of clothes, I'm forced to do a load of wash or two. I usually plan to do this early Saturday mornings while most are still sleeping off the effects of a rough Friday night, to avoid having to wait for a washing machine or dryer. As far as I'm concerned, there is nothing more boring and annoying than having to sit and wait for an unused washer or dryer, unless you have sat in on a Wednesday night student senate meeting, saw the Patriots play football, or listened to Kate Smith singing Beatle hits!

For the past several weeks, after doing my weekly wash, I entered the laundry area and found my clothes sitting on top of the dryer. Now some people would be upset and annoyed by these actions, calling them inconsiderate, and unnecessary, actions by individuals thinking only of themselves, but not me. I'm simply amazed at the intuition and ESP that some have shown, somehow knowing that my back has been bothersome and I couldn't bend down to take my wash from the dryer. I just wish that someone would fold and return my laundry to my room!

Now I'm not naive enough to believe that students are only motivated to help fellow students, I recognize that there must be other factors and considerations as well. One of those factors must be the desire to help fight rising costs, and the increasing campus center fee. By utilizing the washing machines and dryers to the fullest, which are operated by the Campus Center Food Services of all things, I believe could actually lead to a reduction in the campus center fee.

If in the course of a day, the down time (time when the machine is either not being used, or is idle with clothes in it) could be reduced a savings of approximately 4 and 1/2 cents could be reduced from the campus center fee. This figure is arrived at by multiplying 10¢ (the cost to use a dryer) by the number of dryers on campus, by the extra loads to be dried per day (5), by the number of days in the year that a dryer is used and dividing by the number of students.

I hope I have been able to convince even the most skeptical, that students are indeed considerate, more so than most would believe!

You too can have your very own massage parlor.

How To Win Friends

By James Olsen

(James Olsen is the pseudonym for PR staffer who would prefer to remain anonymous).

Why a Massage Parlor and what is it doing on the UMass Campus? Pierpont, the dorm in Southwest known for its community living-learning and as the home of Project Ten, a residential Academic Program, now has a full-fledged massage room. A sturdy, professional size massage table was built by two of Pierpont's amateur masseurs and moved into what was once the dorm's fourth floor, sunset-side study. A floor length curtain to partition the room for added privacy was installed, and the response has been arousing. The room is being increasingly used.

The builders, Patrick Coffey and Philip Curry hype their tandem-team massages "Hi, I'm winkin' and I'm blinkin', all you have to do is nod". They said they felt there was not enough physical caring and touching happening within the dorm and they masterminded the massage room as a way of bringing people together in a meaningful way and helping them become more aware of their own bodies.

Coffey who is a teaching assistant in the Orchard Hill Human Sexuality Course, feels that "the center of massage is its unique way of communicating without words, and there is some room for that amidst the steady flow of rhetoric we live in". He said, "There is some room for the touch that lets those around us know that we like them, or that we sympathize with them, or that we believe in their worth. Massage is an act of physical caring. It is for those you love and if you are up to it, for those you hate."

"We put about seven hours into building it" said Curry. We were out on several midnight, secret squirrel runs, too." Lumber is cheaper after midnight. They used about 45 feet of 2" x 3" stock for legs and a 2' x 6' 6" sheet of 3/4" plywood for a top, held together with #8 common nails. The table is padded with a 3" thick sheet of polyurethane foam, bought at McCrory's, upholstered with about 3 yards of Zayre's brown vinyl. They said they were working with borrowed tools and very little money. The dorm reimbursed the $15 it cost to build

C C Notes

Speaking about something that almost everyone has predetermined opinions about, is like the NEW Nixon, everybody at first disbelieves, then comes to accept, like emptying garbage, you have no choice. Well the information flow has fallen on hard times in this community. Why, possibly because apathy is running rampant. Five people show for a dining commons food service session. Everyone bitches at one time or another but when anyone (even you) can help solve their particular problems to help yourself and other members of the community what happens? Nothing, almost no one shows. Why? Everybody has got reasons but break it down and you end up with no one giving a Damn. With no input from the people what can you expect.

1. Less services
2. Less efficiency
3. Higher prices
4. Lower quality
5. Less than ideal product mix

In other words things to bitch about.

——————We want your input——————

We need the committees ideas and their help. You are the consumer pay a high price for apathy.

The Campus Center Student Union Complex Board of Governors invites anyone from the U. Mass. community to join with us to serve the community in which we live. People with constructive criticism or ideas concerning food or alcohol distribution should contact John Hayes, Chairman of the Food Services Committee for the Campus Center-Student Union. This committee is run by students, for students, it sets all prices and standards for food within the complex. The services committee deals with the Bookstore, Hotel, Games Room, Pin Ball machines, Vending, Print Shop and the Student Union Sweet shop. This committee is the one that decides the prices of "all" textbooks and popular books. How much should the bookstore make as a profit or should they make any profit? If you want to help decide these complex questions join the committees who do decide on the issues.

Anybody ever feel this place is like a minuature Logan Airport with beautiful empty halls leading to other halls just as empty? Well, if you want to change it join the building committee, they deal with space allocations, maintenance and building alterations.

Maybe you're more into where your sixty-two-fifty went and what next years fee is going to be or who pulls the final figure out of his head. The Finance committee heads up this intriguing search. It also tries to figure out budgets, accounting techniques and systems and still retain their sanity. We need people with constructive ideas from the Business School, Hotel and Restaurant, Food Science, and others, depending on the committee.

The People's Market is a great success, well hopefully, we can do the same with the whole Campus Center Complex. We as students hold that power now, legally with the University's blessing. We are a model, a strong one that has the power to hire, fire and grant term raises to it's employees. No similar group in the country is as powerful as this Board of Governors. The B.O.G. Board decides all policies and capital expenditures without input from the specific committees the decisions cannot be reached validly. The opportunity is here now, we have won some major battles we cannot sit back and relax, for we can shape the direction of power but only with your help. So if you want to play an active role in a true revolution, come up to room 817 in the Campus Center. Some one is usually there from 9 to 5, Mon. thru Fri. to explain things in detail. If you don't want to take an active role, DON'T BITCH.

The Returned: A New Rip Van Winkle

By Stefan Kanter

The very village was altered; it was larger and more populous. There were rows of houses which he had never seen before, and those which had been his familiar haunts had disappeared. Strange names were over the doors - strange faces at the windows - everything was strange...the very character of the people seemed changed. There was a busy, bustling disputatious tone about it...a fellow...was haranguing vehemently about rights of citizens-elections-members of Congress --- liberty...and other words which were a perfect Babylonish jargon....

Washington Irving set his story in the late 18th century, when it took 20 years and an American Revolution to bring about such laterations. With contemporary efficiency and such time-saving devices as the Viet Nam War change now occurs at quintuple speed. The returning P.O.W.'s have been away an average of four years; it is long enough to make them a new breed of Van Winkle, blinking at a world that can hardly believe how profoundly it has changed. Nor will it really believe until it sees itself with the returning P.O.W.'s' fresh, hungry eyes.

The little things are what the ex-prisoner will notice first, phenomena that civilians have long since absorbed. That local double bill, for example: Suburban Wives and Tower of Screaming Virgins. Four years ago, it would have been restricted to a few downtown grind-houses. Today, blue-movie palaces are as much a part of the suburbs as the wildly proliferating McDonaldses. Shaking his head, the new Van Winkle heads for a newsstand. Here, there is still more catching up to do. A copy of Look? No way. Life? No more. How about a copy of Crawdaddy, Screw, Money, Rolling Stone? Rip had heard of none of them. He looks, dazed, at the roster of more undreamt of magazines: Oui, Penthouse, World, Ms. "Pronounced Miz," says the proprietor who starts to elucidate, then drops the subject and the magazines. Who, after all, could explain Gloria Steinem? Ah, but in this broiled world a few bedrocks remain. There it is--the good old Saturday Evening Post. No, it is the good old new old Saturday Evening Post, risen from the grave and swathed in thrift-shop clothing, an item of that rising phenomemon, nostalgia.

Every age has enjoyed a peek in the rear-view mirror. But in the last few years, total recall has become almost a way of life. Rip examines magazines devoted to trivia, recalling the names of Tarzan's co-stars and the Lone Ranger's genealogy. He sees ads for Buster Keaton festivals and even for Ozymandian musicals like Grease, celebrating the vanished glories of '50s rock 'n' roll. The stranger pushes on; nostalgia-at preposterous prices – peers at him from shop windows. Fashion bends backward with shaped suits and long skirts, wide-brimmed hats, ubiquitous denims and saddle shoes. He has, alas, missed miniskirts and hot pants. He is just in time to see almost all women in long pants. Well why not? But men in high heels?

He peers in the window of a unisex shop, and then, holding fast to the corner of a building to maintain his balance, he seeks stability at a furniture store. Surely this window will yield a glimpse of the familiar. After all, what is furniture but chairs, tables--and waterbeds? It is time, he feels, to cross the street.

Jesus freaks are gathered at the corner, mixing freely with other louder groups. They carry the perennial banners of militancy, each inscribed with the device, Liberation. Over it are the words Gay, Black, Women's, Chicano and People's. These are the remnants of a great tidal wave of protest that broke in Rip's absence, still sporadically coursing through the streets and campuses. The year 1968 was at once its crest and ebb. Rip was gone when Martin Luther King was assassinated in Memphis and when 172 cities went up in smoke, when 3,500 were injured and 27,000 arrested. He was gone when Bobby Kennedy was murdered two months later, and when two months afterward, the city of Chicago seemed to become the epicenter for every disaffected demonstrator in America.

A striped pole catches Rip's eye. He settles into a chair- only to hear a fresh diatribe from the barber- who now calls himself a stylist. Once, long hair was the exclusive property of the hippies; they have gone but the hair has remained. How all the straights sport it. The barber talks on about a world gone into reverse. Nixon has toured Communist China, which is now in the U.N. The Empire State Building is no longer the tallest building in the world. The World Trade Center is. Eighteen-year-olds can vote. The New York Giants will soon play in New Jersey. In the American League, pitchers will no longer bat.

The stock market, Rip learns, has hit 1000, yet the go-go funds and glamour conglomerates are a sere and withered group. Unfamiliar newsworthies are summoned to his attention: Mary Jo Kopechne, Clifford Irving, Arthur Bremer, Vida Blue, Archie Bunker, Angela Davis, Daniel Ellsberg. There are new countries leaping up from the headlines, nations born while he was away: Bangladesh, Botswana and Qatar. There was another country too, called Biafra. Like those radio-active elements produced in a laboratory, it was destined for a brief, intense half-life before it vanished forever. But the eyes of its starving children still stare from old magazines - and in the memory.

His hair cropped, or rather, styled - at absurd prices - Rip retires to a bar for refreshment and intelligence. The TV set is in color now, and there is something called Cable that makes the reception better - although for what purpose is not so clear. True, there are no more cigarette commercials, and some programs called Sesame Street and The Electric Company are brightening the day for children. But for adults, it is, as always, lame adventure series and innocuous sitcoms, the halt leading the bland. There are fewer talk shows and more movies made expressly for TV- all of them, it seems starring James Farentino and George Peppard.

Not all movies are made for the tube, announces a defensive film buff down at the other end of the bar. He tells of the emerging genres: black films with superheroes carpet bombing the inner cities; hetero-, homo- and bi-sexual hits; Andy Warhol spectaculars that may yet replace Seconal: and of course, the constantly refilled pornucopia.

Yet films can still provide comfort for the weary and overburdened. Rip learns that the stalwarts have not toppled. Gregory Peck, Paul Newman, John Wayne, Steve McQueen are impervious to criticism; throw a rock at them and it still produced sparks. As for the theater, that too has its enduring endearing qualities. There are laments for the passing grandeur of the now tacky Broadway; butter and egg musicals, and Neil Simon comedies still pull in the theater parties. Save for the new nudity, the visitor might never have been away.

Rip wanders from the bar in search of nourishment. Next door is a restaurant; it is not until he examines the menu that he sees the words "health foods" - and by then it is a little late to run. On the shelves are strange labels: Granola, mung beans, Tiger Milk, lechithin, all at nonsenical prices. Vitamin E, he learns, is expected to cure everything but the common cold; Vitamin C takes care of that. Adelle Davis has become the Brillat-Savarin of the counterculture. Her self-help books beckon from the paperback rack: Let's Get Well, Let's Have Healthy Children, Let's Eat Right To Keep Fit.

Let's not, mutters the ex-prisoner. Abandoning his pep-up and soy derivative, he pushes onward to a record store. His favorites have quite literally passed on. Judy Garland, Janis Joplin, Jimi Hendrix - all killed by various ODs. The Beatles? Fragmented. The unheard of Woodstock? While he was gone it was born, matured, grew senile and became a comic epitaph and an old emotion. Some stalwarts remain here too: Streisand, Elvis Presley, Joan Baez, The Stones. But who are the Partridge Family? Cheech and Chong? Dr. Hook and the Medicine Show?

Fighting off a syncope, Rip flees to a bookstore. He is just in time for the revisionist historians. When Rip left the U.S. the faint afterglow of Kennedy magic was still warm to the touch. Then they called it charisma. Now they call it Shamelot. Such books as Henry Fairlie's The Kennedy Years and David Halberstam's The Best and the Brightest sound the knell for the '60s and its leaders. The returnee has missed the spate of Concerned Books: Soul On Ice, Deschooling Society, The Whole Earth Catalog - when Rip left, earth was only dirt-plus almost every float in Norman Mailer's Mr. America Pageant. Lose a few, win a few. He has also missed Love Story, Myra Breckenridge, The Sensuous Woman. He browses through the current paperbacks; words rise up and greet him like so much Urdu: ecology, software, encounter groups, moon rocks, body language, future shock, acupuncture, transcendental meditation, deep zone therapy. His trembling hands try the poetry shelf, but the words of Auden seem as odd as the day he has just lived: In the deserts of the heart; let the healing fountain start, in the prison of his days; teach the free man how to praise.

No matter how bitter his past, the prisoner must find a way to leave the personal desert for the world of common humanity. But how can one enter that world when there are no doors? How can one "praise" what one cannot understand?

"Surely I must be exaggerating," Rip thinks. "Why try to understand it all in one gulp? Why try to overtake history? Start slowly, read the leading fiction bestseller. Escape for a while." He picks up Jonathan Livingston Seagull. The story of a what? Of a goddam Bird? His eye roves to the self-help books. Here's one: Primal Scream.

The air is cool in the police car, and the cops, although jittery, relax when they see that their passenger is unarmed. They have their own stories to tell, of new ambush attacks, and of strong desires for shotguns to repel something they call the Black Liberation Army. But after they listen to their passenger's story, there is a quiet in the car, and there is not further attempt to educate the new Rip Van Winkle. There is no attempt to go to the station. Rip is, suddenly, a free man all over again, and stuttering, he tries to find praise. Praise for his country, for an America that, despite all the staggering changes, somehow is still America. The is, finally, only one way. "Where to?" asks the driver. Rip looks out the window for a long, lonely moment trying to remember something. "Home", he says.

the table and Curry spent $10 of his own money for the curtain. Coffey said, "it could have been done a little bit cheaper, but we wanted to do it well, and people have already gotten that much use from the room."

Jim Gilbert of Pierpont who dislikes his official sounding title of asst. director for community developement said "I see the massage table as being a start, and it's a good start, because it's really simple. It took a relatively small amount of work to put together... if you have massage tables over a long period of time, people are really going to get into their bodies". Gilbert said, "In the dorm I think it is so important thst some kind of first step be taken for people to get into their bodies. It's a Basis for community developement for people to understand themselves as sexual beings".

"There's some things you can't hide when you don't have your clothes on," Gilbert added, "Once your genitals are exposed the whole realm of your Psyche is kind of bared...And when you find no one holds it against you, you open up, you trust more".

One woman who had just gotten a massage was enthusiastic, "it was really good. I felt like a hundred pounds of strawberry jello".

Barbara Schenk, Pierpont's Peer sex Counsilor says the massage room helps the dorm because, "If you as an individual are more at ease, not more loose, but less tense,then you can relate to the people in the dorm better".

"It was a very nice body trip, very sensual and that toe sucking was ridiculous. I never thought of my toes as sensual, they're so ugly," said another massagee. "It's a nice way to get to know your friends. A lot of times I don't have anything to say. We didn't have to talk at all, it's a different kind of communicating."

"It is a remarkable improvement on the way the study was before," said another Pierpont resident. "I think we should have more of them...there are going to be certain rush hours and a lot of people are going to miss out."

Coffey and Curry plan to build more if interest is great enough, and said that they are available to help any interested group on campus that intends to start such a project. Double stalls for group showers in Pierpont have already been made by removing a partition panel and plans for sauna baths are being formulated in both Pierpont and Cance house. Gilbert has spoken of tying in the physical facilities with experimental courses such as Howard Munson's Human Sexuality course and a massage colloquium.

A massage table's most important advantage is that it eliminates some stooping and bending which means if you are giving a long massage your own back is less likely to get tired. A table also makes it easy to change position with respect to the person you are massaging--from head to leg, from one side to the other, etc.--without a break in the flow of your massage. It puts certain body parts more directly within the reach of your hands. Finally, it is a focal point for people interested in massage.

The counselor of the massage parlor corridor, Rose Marston, is known in the dorm for her Esalen style massages, She confides that the only really good way to do massage is with oil. Your hands cannot apply pressure and at the same time move smoothly over the skin without some kinf of lubricant. Mineral and vegetable oil work well, are inexpensive, and can be pleasantly scented with Faces of Earth body oils. Baby oil and hand lotions soak into the skin too quickly to be effective.

Basic massage stance on table.

Leafing through a massage book brought up a few basic things one should know before giving or receiving a massage. The best way to receive a massage is in the nude. Even a minimal amount of clothing will get in the way and will deny you what is perhaps the singlemost pleasant sensation of a complete message, that of the total wholeness and connectedness of your body. The massagee should not try to "help" in any way; this can only cause a break in the relaxing flow of the massage. The person being massaged should simply tune into the quality of his or her touch the way you might listen to the sound of someone's voice. The less said during a massage you should feel a sigh within you, just let it out with the exhalation of your breath.

Here are some hints about giving massage. Apply pressure when you do massage; your friend's aren't that fragile, Pressure feels good. Relax your hands and mold them to fit the contours over which they are passing. Maintain an eveness of speed and pressure and make any change a gradual one. Rhythm is essential. Explore and define the underlying structure of the body of the person you are massaging. Try to use your weight rather than your muscles to apply pressure, lean your upper body into your hands. Once you have made contact with your friend's body, try never to break it until the massage that you are giving is completely finished. Your friend will have entered a universe of touch whose one reality is the contact of your hand. And be as spontaneous as you can; let your hands do most of the thinking.

The Pierpont head of resident, who prefers to remain anonymous, was asked to comment on the new massage room. He said, "If it's for POOR RICHARD'S I'll make it spicy. Hmm...It sounds like a sleaze to me. It sounds like an indirect way of getting someone interested in you sexually. That's neat. I've got to come up some time."

Polish Poetry And Paltry Prose

By Ed Smith

Christmas in Biafra and other poems by Chinua Achebe
Doubleday
Anchor Book

Chinua Achebe has been described in numerous places as the most powerful novelist to arise out of decolonialized Nigeria or even Africa. This newest publication by Achebe assures for him as well a place among the poets of Africa. However, by describing him in these terms, I feel we are confronted by a problem which goes deeper than just semantics. The limiting of Achebe's achievements by adjectives relating to his nationality are debilitating to our conception of him as a writer. While he is a writer who often deals with the problems and intricacies of Nigerian culture, he is, as well, a man who is capable, through his writing, of dealing with the universal human situation which is limited by no bonds of nationalism. He is a prominent figure in the world literary scene and, while this may be generally understood, I feel the point should be made to insure that his readers approach him without this barrier of the place of his origin in mind.

This present book is divided into five different sections. The variety of moods which they represent are really quite refreshing. There are no sections which are dwelled upon to the point of destroying their effect. Achebe's humor, as demonstrated in "Misunderstanding" for example, is extremely subtle and most unlike what you may be accustomed to. This type of subtlety is woven throughout the poetry and results in both entertaining and profound reflections. Another one of the poems, "Remembrance Day", is almost bitter in its tone. It involves generally, the corruption and destruction of tradition in Nigeria by colonizatin and more specifically, Christianity. Particularly, it deals with the changes in attitude by his countrymen towards those killed in war. It has always been the belief among the Igbo's, Achebe's people, that those who are killed in war come back to their villages and all the able-bodies men must flee and get as far from their homes as possible. Western influence has changed this tradition and turned this day of remembrance into a time for eulogizing and twenty-one gun salutes.

This type of diversity in approach and tone is demonstrated throughout the book. One section of this volume deals with the Biafran war, another with the gods and still another contains love poems. Even with this diversity and the wide range of human experience which Achebe explores, certain unifying factors can be seen in his writing. Symbol patterns, metaphors and other allusions, often deal with peculiarly Nigerian topics. There are many old tales among the Igbo people which he refers to in the course of his writing. This can be seen as well in his novels, "Arrow of God" for one. In the back of this book, Achebe has notes on some of the poems, so that those unfamiliar with these stories will have some added insight into the poems.

Possibly the best way to give you a demonstration of the variety of moods and subjects in his poetry is to cite a couple of them here. The first one is from the section "Poems About War."

Air Raid

It comes so quickly
the bird of death
from evil forests of Soviet technology

A man crossing the road to greet a friend is much too slow
His friend cut in halves has other worries now than a friendly handshake at noon.

This poem is representative of many others in its simple, straightforward manner. There are, however, other selections where he moves into more esoteric and complex areas. As I mentioned before, there are also those which incorporate a very subtle, sarcastic humor. This next poem seems in part, to be a member of this latter category. I shall give to you here the first and last sections of it.

NON-commitment

Hurrah! to them who do nothing see nothing feel nothing whose hearts are fitted with prudence like a diaphragm across womb's beckoning doorway to bar the scandal of seminal rage... talking of apostles that other fellow
Judas wasn't such a fool either; though much maligned by succeeding generations the fact remains he alone in that motley crowd had sense enough to tell a doomed movement when he saw one and get out quick, a nice little packet bulging his coat pocket into the bargain- sensible fellow.

I hope then, that these notes and selections have given you some idea of the scope of Achebe's writing. His poetry is not, to my mind, of the same polished quality as his prose. After hearing Mr. Achebe give a reading of some of these poems and then discuss them, I feel his purpose is clear. He felt, it would seem, that when he wrote these poems, this was the most useful manner by which he could communicate at the time. Prose often cannot serve to express certain types of thought as well as poetry. So, for this reason, I would urge those who wish to gain a more rounded outlook on Chinua Achebe, to pursue this book.

Lately, the last ten years or so, it has become quite the rage to unite fictionalized, quasi-historic accounts of the incidents of and surrounding the rise of the Nazi party in Germany and the second World War. Outside of literature, this has occurred as well in television, movies and the theater. There is some tupe of fascination, it would seem, attached to the incredible brutality and the monstrous proportions of the genocide which occurred at that period. There is, as well, a tendency in the television and movie scenes, but also in literature, to depict the Nazis as foolish, pompous and rather stupid individuals who are easily duped by clever Englishmen, Americans and an occasional Frenchman. This is all well and good for boosting old egos, but in another sense it is quite foolish and even dangerous. The reason why I say this is that latter generations, in trying to gain historical perspective, rely heavily on the literature of a given period for assistance in this task. They gain from the media of that time a contemporary view of the situation they are trying to investigate. Therefore, if many, many years from now, men look back on our era and see Hitler and the Nazis portrayed in this rather frivolous and light manner, would it not seem logical that they would interpret these events as a phenomenon with very little historical precedent and therefore dismiss it as irrelevant to their present state of affairs. This, I feel, is the inevitable outcome when such books as "furioso" are about to enter the best-sellers list and are recognized as literary accomplishments on the world scene. It might be easier to explain my point if I outline the plot and general sequence of events for you.

The book opens by introducing to the reader a group of soldiers called the Revenge Commandos. After this rather trite beginning the book heads downhill. This club is composed of disgruntled Frenchmen who have fled from France to England and, once there, have formed a group who's express purpose is the liberation of their homeland. Following this dynamic start, we meet up with Winston Churchill who is characterized as a bumbling, but harmless old fellow, who drinks a bit too much. He somehow comes upon four men who are connected with these Revenge Commandos and sends them on a mission to Germany, much to the displeasure of General de Gaulle. They are supposed to recover a photograph album of the Queen's which contains some pictures of her together with a German officer before the war. Added to these, by the Germans, are some more pictures which contain the same German officer with another woman who bears a startling resemblance to the Queen. They are rather compromising, to say the least, and I am sure I do not have to tell you what the general topics of the photos were. So these four misfits are sent to recover it and after leading us through a gauntlet of bloodshed, they do so and one survives. Attempting to elaborate on their characters here is pointless, since the author did not deem it necessary in his book.

There is an attempt, as noted on the flyleaf and at one point in the story, to draw a parallel between this book and "The Three Muskateers." Let me quote from the flyleaf for you: "Imagine "The Three Musketeers" - the greatest adventure story of all time-transposed to the twentieth century." Imagination is indeed what it would take, and a great deal of it, to draw any real relationship between this book and the classic by Dumas. I have found a much more current and, I feel, highly more pertinent comparison myself. I should say they were four perverted and incompetent James Bonds winging their way half-cocked through Germany. One could even say they are more along the lines of the "Dirty Dozen", but really, "The Three Musketeers, have a little respect.

In the end though, the book seems to be attempting to satirize, make a farce of, the events it pertains to. While I have a great respect for this form of writing, I feel Lestienne has confronted and failed to overcome two obstacles in this respect. The first deals with that of the writing itself. This form is on whch is extremely hard to handle, as evidenced by the few truly fine samples we have of it. For one, it must be extremely sharp and, missing that, at least clean. Allow me to explain what I mean by these rather ambiguous terms. Sharpness is that quality where a point is made very definite; it is quite easy for the reader to perceive exactly what the author is getting at. "Furioso" attains this overall, with the absurdity of getting back the photograph album. However, in the course of developing the plot, the story is often sluggish and ambiguities fly from every corner of the page. By the word clean, in this context, I mean the events must be cohesive and quickly moving so that they drive towards a central parody. Scenes which are injected merely for the sake of titilation inevitabally work against this. These two qualities together form a tight book, which needless to say, is quite unlike the one presently under discussion. As well, I personally often fail to see the uproarious humor which others so often perceive in war, but this is of course a personal view. This, however, I feel is the second obstacle, that of content, and here also I found myself disappointed. While some people claim that all of history is a farce, pinpointing a war and attempting to draw this out, demands a great deal of sensitivity and insight which is sorely lacking in this case.

However, like many books I have formed a hearty dislike for, this one has an excellent chance of commercial success. A few well-placed ads in the "New York Times" and a television spot or two by the author will in fact, nearly assure it. The real test of a novel though, is not whether it is made into a movie or television series, as more and more people are beginning to think, but rather whether or not in the future, to which we are always so confidently referring, it is still read and unscarred by time.

FIRESIGN THEATER 1972: NOT IN VAIN

Stirring (in order of appearance):

Dear Friends (Columbia KG 31090 time: 74:06)

The Firesign Theater's Big Book Of Plays ($4.00 Straight Arrow Press. time: 1972)

Martian Space Party (Warner Bros. Records time: 30 min.)

Not Enough Air Anything You Want To (Columbia KC 31980 time: 43:30)

1971 saw the most ambitious showings of the gaggle of three top-rip boys known to us as the Firesign Theater. With two albums now a two-record set, a movie and a book of plays, you might suspect that they were stretching things a bit, but as one of the records, Dear Friends, is a double album released last January, and is a collection of artistic essays, skits, commercials, radio pieces, alternate embodiments and glorious duds from the past. Collected from various bizarre days when they were appearing in radio and in clubs, it is not an entrance or an presence as their album long spoors of the past, present and future. So, as goofy here under Dear Friends (although it is an interesting, fond bouquet and turns may even skyward to that great Wright Flier, the Big Book Of Plays Martian Space Party Not Enough Air trio).

First, The Firesign Theater's Big Book Of Plays.

Published this summer by Rolling Stone's Straight Arrow Press, true fiend fans will gladly hand over the $4.00 necessary to get the Book. Inside, this invaluable guide to the Facts.

What is a hero to just by party pay, line by line line-up of the scripts of Waiting For The Electrician Or Somebody Like Him; How Can You Be In Two Places At Once When You're Not Anywhere At All; Don't Crack Your Heart; Beam Me Up Phil; and I Gotta Move Along. In the Book, Fate's all-Seasons Do-This-Run-Into's on side one of the Facts (side one of Dear Friends' Fate's Dangerous Outlook). So it is that at last we have our hands on just what was going down before our ears and never get a look at. For instance, as well as having the Proper Names of all the Characters on stage, it is interesting to see, as well as Educational to see the Proper Punctuation and Capitalization revealed. It is also very nice to have it all Down-In-Print if for no rare spell up your sore Grumpy gripper by quoting Literally from the various speeches in the book. Like this: "Fuckin' Doubt came to town, Writing Martin Buber. Took a Fakir in our back, and called it Schadenfreude."

(Warning: The peculiar Writing Style and Grammatical Philosophy of The Firesign is a Definitely Thing. Don't get startled drop.)

If your (hypothetical) roommate came out for the days and you know he's a real gone cat but he's never heard the Firesign in any great detail, how do you begin to get him comfortably introduced without being too much of a nerd? Dear Friends is certainly a nice try, as a homage to gives all the Theater Stuff, this book is ideal for introducing someone quick shape into the world of The Firesign. Of course the best way to take one of these novels for the first time is to listen once to your usual natural naked state, so as to grasp the full beauty of the pure sound of the record. These guys are great performers as well as writers, and they deserve to be appreciated in this respect. After one pure listening, a rumthrough with book in hand will begin to unravel the knots and mysteries. Also, having script in hand is helpful in getting balky English teachers to give it a try.

As your cousin will tell you, voice characterizations are hard to keep up with, but with everything written down, this problem disappears.

As for the heavy part, well, admit it, you never quite got the ending of Beam, now did you? You never knew Dixie were never other complaints besides in Memory, and that Pumpie on Bragg's in spelled Pumpie, did you? It's all here.

Also very interesting are the photographs, and Mark Finn's Two Chronology of the Firesign Theater which gives us the secrets of their past. More more interesting is Dr. Bradshaw's Social Identity Roster which outlines just who plays what in all the original skits. Amazing.

Before each play there are introductions written by various Firesigns, and they are extremely helpful in giving partial hints to their skits little stories. These introductions also confirm the theory that all the records are one continuous body of work featuring one central character (one side of Electrician and Nick Danger multiplied). So it is that Dr. the central traveller in Electrician and over the border and into himself in "Dale" in Two Places, in Southern California, trying a car from Ralph Spoilsport's the week up on George among in front of his TV in front. Just as Heart ends with moment an cream truck bells and chirping birds, so does Beam begin on the same street that George was what his ice cream truck, with Chris pulling the plug on our electric Jesus he's heard, as Chris Dennis telling this time tailor his before as they talk out with creaking ship sounds. It is that they but Beam's Shakespeare play begins on a creaking ship. But we'll get to that soon.

Martian Space Party

Real life is always stranger than fiction, and the powerful force of Good Job that Tom Kapelson unveiled on the Firesign's bands napes. When they came down, they performed the quite natural act of finding Presidential Power Politics quite suited to their satire skills. And natural it was too that these playfully serious masters of words should stumble over and use the perspective of alternative Shakespeare. Given the convenience of simulating the unpredictably predictable programming of television, combining Shakespeare and George Popson is one alternative of TV is a workable if puzzling combination.

Martian Space Party is a twenty minute short that was brilliantly coupled with Beam Medium in Dale's unstrikely sidecar mirror when it first moved last fall. The film was state of short half the material contained on but hence to any comparation of the contents will be found later in when we deal with the record. Since we're not yet interested in content, let's examine the form. Seeing the Firesign Theater perform on film seems to be a natural, organic step. So it is, but not without a few changes due to the nature of film. First, since film is so fleeting and usually viewed only once, it's therefore suited to quite different material than easily-repeatable recordings. Since serious reflection and repeated screenings are impossible with a film, it is unfortunate that the Firesign used the same type of bizarre humor and presentation as on record.

The film setting is static, a stage on which they perform half of the Billy Shakespeare play and most of the Pigpen convention and blast off. The only other scenes shown are those of the dazzle member Gulliver's escaping a tiny the-phone toy town.

All in all, Martian Space Party was certainly a classy-great production. Though it lacked the dimension that their records have, I guess the main complaint about Martian Space Party has to do nature of the medium, the nature the volume and absolutely exactly bend themselves to your imagination, making things as vast-sure as you want. Or like, besides having to choose sound, everything is plastered on the screen for you.

Not Enough Air Anything You Want To

Now the big stuff, as I said before, Tom Kapelson authority are up here off, and his little episode in Cop Station (which provides the tail for the label exploration of our Safe & Sane Society, but boasts in two best performances and perhaps their most Unbelievable and impossible) Not Enough Air Anything You Want To.

Now the big stuff, as I said before, Tom Kapelson authority are up here off, and his little episode in Cop Station (which provides the tail for the label exploration of our Safe & Sane Society, but boasts in two best performances and perhaps their most Unbelievable and impossible) Not Enough Air Anything You Want To.

But First, our Breakfast Toast.

Side one is very reflecting entertainment. We're watching TV again, and a shakespeare movie called "Anything You Want To" is on. It's entertaining to note the wide-mark of channels at the beginning of the record, as if you TV were being tuned like a radio, with channels being in and out. And yes, the play begins with the creaking ship that brought us to Beam.

The play, with its standpoint Shakespearian clichés and abominable puns, has little to do with any "message" the bards have to say. It's just fun entertainment. There's a feeling, whirling about one-time, very concentrated in the monitor, that Dale Lonsdale is really the play.

Dale Tree (the "Dale" alter-ego) sees the play and, and then they get into the [illegible] Bard's Business, in episode of "Young Guy Meets Everyone" is next, and story so that there's some MEANING to here after all. "Young Guy" is a Japanese version of "Rip Van Winkle", but it also used to compete up the Japanese Movie Industry Demo. Young Guy is accused of being behind Orson Bundelo (Jimmy and Gorgonzola, the cheese monster. Just as Lt. Bradshaw is about to make the arrest, Young Guy pull his better Bundelo makes the issue by "exposing" Brad ("Bundelo") Shaw as George Bernard Shaw, who was a famous author and Martin Court Guy. This business of Guy-Gorgonzola is all very confusing until the next show comes on, the Springfield Convention, where the models for Pigpen is underfoot. As Pigpen's fellow is being abducted, so is the coloring Dundee being travelled into extinction (Hint: it's a Man). It might as well be independence. Blessed or the Lid Bunch, or complete in the rut between President and Forgotten Powerless Private Cities).

Pigpen is the politician of All Times, with the usual impressive nonsense platform, and though we never hear him or the President, we know exactly what they're like.

Although the other monsters (WWI? WWII? Korea? Vietnam? Poverty? Racism? Malt Shops? Public Schools?) have been lulled to sleep by drugs and loud music, Ghaleists, the Big Guy, will not submit, and rampages across Monster Island towards the President's switch. A banner unfurls from his trial making "not insane". This makes Pigpen's delegation over, but of course Pigpen has been advertised as being sure not insane. Finally, as Pigpen gets into office, Ghaleists, the lumbering giant, hands Monster wrapt Island's ground the President's switch and he and the President shut all together forever.

So it is that Tomlin always had Kapelson and Bundelo in his back, and LBJ carried him from into a milldew. Nixon will have him here and more. A school President is a very strange and sensitive thing. It history absolutely has the years from now that won't be him much good now. Then LBJ story sparkle were from Mr. Man (it is a one person good only for sensational long hair, conversation with George Bernard).

As the convention ends, the channels again want together in a week, and another typical day's viewing is done. Same as always.

And so is to also Dale, from people needed as being truly not insane have committed some of the most barbaric and insane acts in history while resulting in horror at the thought of an Eugenics. And to top off this indictment of our Safe and Sane society, throughout the record we hear this flipped out voice saying, "Oh, you guys are so crazy!" I humbly disagree. But hence, but chillingly when people that are disgusted because they suspected where Yoko is headed with her music, we where she has already been.

Side one of Approximately Infinite Universe is the outstanding highlight where the first three songs are unbelievable. "Death of Samantha" is an interesting prelude from Yoko's band, Elephant's Memory. Yoko's voice is detached and follows as she sings an event, haunting lyric: "Tonight we I'm cold, Yeah, I'm a cold chick, baby/Everyday I think cold, I'm such a cool chick, baby." Wayne Cabello's lead guitar is given to blend when against the dark, shocking rhythm.

"I Want My Love To Feel Tonight" contains the only text in the album where John is recognizably audible. He sings where high harmonies with Yoko during the chorus. The song is an affectionate, compassionate piece sympathizing with the dude's harassment. "Satan, he's not there, no matter how much, He tries hard to bring their hair." Yoko's vocal is sincere and believable in spite of the occasionally tight lyrics.

"Yang Yang" is a solid rocker with a double-tracked vocal and tension chorus. It's an encouraging note that Yoko can actually sing, not scream, sing-composing, but she's not at all bad.

Summing the remaining three sides, side two has nothing worth pressing and should have been clipped on means. Side three is Lennon's version, filled with emotional echo-chamber vocals that become repetitive. "I Felt Like Smashing My Face In a Clear Glass Window" gives me to question about Yoko's spiritual endeavors as does "Looking Over From My Back Window", a song somewhat better. "Age Is Getting Pretty Serious/Wondering If I Should Jump off on you sleep." (note line) has some potential. "I Have a Worm Inside My Head" complete nice lyrics with a positive outlook. "Move On Fast" has a great guitar line and vocal.

Eliminate the bullsh processing exercise solution (necessary material) and high-brow art and one is left with one good side of approximately infinite Universe. Unsurprisingly infinite. I wonder if at last, which just happens to be the most encouraging thing Yoko has ever done.

Yoko Ono

By Steve Feld

Approximately Infinite Universe — Yoko Ono (Apple SVBB-3385)

"Don't Worry, Kyoko" was one of the lurking bad cuts and will usually ever make." — John Lennon

When the subject under discussion is Yoko Ono's music, John Lennon isn't the one to go to for an unbiased evaluative opinion. Nevertheless, it has always been an organ to take some against Yoko's music. There is a wealth of material to incriminate her. Yoko's earlier works with husband John were something less than conservative, while her solo outings have been uniformly excessive and all-in-which offensive. She has been responsible for "experimental" Fly, for albums of bad poetry, bad a few deeply introspective and undecipherable song called "Mrs. Lennon" buried beneath her records of natural screaming and such artsy-fartsy avant-garde as a fucking tuba solo. The best song on her have been "Yes, Yes Yes, "Born In A Prison", was Yoko's, and "Listen, the Snow is Falling", another song of Yoko's, moved me to make an all-the-record instrumental prediction that in five years she would become rock's most respected female vocalist. The result were not like a bad apple, yet, if we listen to Approximately Infinite Universe we must acknowledge the validity of events. Yoko is still serious, clearly evident but she, unlike some a long way, baby.

All of which is not to say that you'll find head-over-heels for Yoko's new record. There is not much here that is immediately albeit unfortunate. It never should have been a double record. First of all, Yoko records at tempo is too much to take period. Somebody involved with this project agreed for a single distributably edited, record except for Yoko and, well, nobody argues with Mrs. Lennon. Approximately Infinite Universe has its share of memorable moments, be it clarion radical politics, high-falutin' art-talk, or that sometimes-soaring voice. Yoko's voice is unmistakably quite in spite of the occasionally tight lyrics.

"Yang Yang" is a solid rocker with a double-tracked vocal and tension chorus. It's an encouraging note that Yoko can actually sing, not scream, sing-composing, but she's not at all bad.

Summing the remaining three sides, side two has nothing worth pressing and should have been clipped on means. Side three is Lennon's version, filled with emotional echo-chamber vocals that become repetitive. "I Felt Like Smashing My Face In a Clear Glass Window" gives me to question about Yoko's spiritual endeavors as does "Looking Over From My Back Window", a song somewhat better. Bonnie Raitt On Campus

By Charlie McCallum

The U. Mens concert committee presents the second in line of major concerts this semester featuring Bonnie Raitt and Dave Brubeck. There will be two performances, 7:30 and 10:30 p.m. in the Worcester dining Commons beginning tonight.

Bonnie Raitt learned television over the holidays, flushed with the success of a performance at the Gaslight Inn (New Jersey) Blues Festival, the same cohorts of an old boy friend from the devastated city of Managua, Nicaragua, and a chance for her among friends for a week or so before a longish junket to the West Coast. New Year's Eve was spent at Jack's where Chris Smither provided the music and he knew Bonnie many. For a while, there was the feeling he was back in 1970, drinking the way of it, loving for the lack of it, enjoying the music for what it was.

When a city breeds a talent that makes it big, the city eventually loses that person. Dallas musicians moved across the projects of the country after a while. Boston hasn't been the haunting ground of so much talent as late. Nashville had the Taylor family, Clannon and Livingston, at any rate, and L.A. Cells of record moguls are now gone and Boston is following them one at the city. Although she says she hopes only when she wants to, Bonnie Raitt is now out of town more and more, albeit of the Main Point in Philadelphia, at Max's Kansas City in New York, the Ann Arbor Blues Festival, the Troubador in Los Angeles, Wooden's for one album, L.A. for another. A local mecca of sort and naturally that "I Banner's latest album, doesn't make it big, the man will and everyone in the business knows it. Bonnie is young, up Hollywood's charts, probably appear in Newsweek, falling down and the Times and pretty soon the nights at Jack's and Joe's Place, the long drinking bouts and just pleasant sessions.

The summer of 1971 was a good one for Bonnie. The old Phoenix and Boston other back were thriving, places like Jack's and Joe's were just starting. There was music on the Common every week and Cambridge had music in the streets every night. That summer, came to think of it, was the time of street music. You could still see a little woman having to fight your way through a rule of order rap pull-puppets. Jerome Mooney (spelled) and his blues band could still have the bit of Jack's without causing a riot. Livingston was still in town, hanging John Everett was just in from Denmark, and soon they were turning up at Jack's to join. That whole time months—and it could be my imagination since the Phoenix stuff, of which I was a part, made Jack's its second home—seemed to revolve around Jack's. Every evening started there and ended there unless you could struggle down the street to the Coolidges where they stayed open one hour longer.

First night I had a chance to talk with Bonnie was at Jack's, the following in the area was already visible and there were patrons of Bonnie stories to go around. Bonnie at the Philadelphia Folk Festival stealing the show from her mentor, the late Otis Spann (Mississippi Fred McDowell). Bonnie coming a cross here and a dropping such there. Bonnie playing with legendary blackness who called her friend and vowed about her talents. And stand of all, her drinking. That legend always preceded Bonnie and even Boston Phoenix spoke series George Kimball, one of the superb students of our town, secured a time in one with the Raitt capacity to drink more bourbon straight i.e. bartender than Max's Kansas City where every he drank in the Big Apple congregation were asked we very seriously. How can she play so well when she's so damn blind?"

The consensus was "Don't go hassling with Bonnie unless you have three days to recuperate." It was never quite that hard but that first night was. They were all there. Bonnie, her backboard, Mal Boone, the photo-journalist who escaped the destruction in Central America, Harlan Barnes, the house editor of the Phoenix, Kimball, Phoenix artist Francis Bernard, now a White House correspondent, Vic Sebastian, the former Phoenix city editor now a Los Angeles free-lance, Dick Evans, the old New York theater critic who was then the Phoenix's ad manager, Mississippi Fred had stayed at Bonnie's house while doing a local gig and Bonnie was just gearing up to do her first album so the conversation was in that direction.

Bonnie was particularly interested the troubadour adventure her friend, Mississippi Fred Dunn, she was given to saying, why can't people understand that he is the real thing? How can they appreciate Bring? The Bang and Spare Rib? There was an artist in her voice as she described her appearance with McDowell at the Philadelphia Folk Festival, a place where she was the hit and the aging and drug-class genius was all but overlooked. "I can understand why audiences can gravitate to Bonnie's more better-known more than Mississippi Fred. They feel doesn't make it any more to take," she says and is one. "I sometimes think that if I were better they'd like me less. I just can't always bring off the music I really the best maybe I within the music just enough to appeal to white audiences."

The new album was another thing entirely. Bonnie eventually described how it was going to be recorded up at a friend's place in Minneapolis as a best back musician with all her friends. Every one thought that was very funny until someone looking back through the house that permanent the conversation it might have been not suggested that a upgrade producer with an established reputation and a regular studio with a in-track medium might be better. Bonnie wouldn't hear of it, the musicians in the album with her friends so that they would get some exposure and some money. "If I don't make the record the way I want it," she would say, "what good is doing it anyway?"

Bonnie is, about all she, charming in description, she'd probably regret not one that his the main time with people and homes to them. Her night in Jack's Philadelphia Folk Festival. Bonnie had just finished her part of the show and was due at a party back at the hotel where the artists were staying. The hotel, time, however, is left to a college but trying to book musicians for the school's coffee house. The hot were through a long rap so how good the place was, how much they needed beds and Bonnie hesitant making promises along the way. Finally one told the that her manager, Dick Waterman, did all her booking but she'd mention the college to him. Bonnie couldn't turn out the lad all with a "no, my manager" but she didn't, and the student was every satisfied and stimulated. That's a sense of grace lacking in many performers.

"But some lack of patience shows up in her ballad, John Kalb, and he had to struggle even harder to maintain it. Kalb was a regular star of Broadway and Hollywood musicals during the twenties and fifties. A man of rugged looks and anxious vocal addition, he was the leading man in countless productions of the Carousel/Showboat/Oklahoma variety. But he basically refused to play the games required of stars of the time, the plastic world of Hollywood had no attraction for him. "My father was just never into that sort of thing at all," says Bonnie. "He's a simple man, works straight. We don't always communicate that well but I think he is proud of me. Anyway I know I'm."

Kalb's contempt or lack of interest in phony Celebrities rubbed off on Bonnie and her two brothers. Bonnie hated the star world of starting and starting issues, the hot-house atmosphere of the Ivy League in the East where her brothers went to school for two years.

It was very fully realized the aspects the young had on Bonnie with one hangover-dominated morning when we talked the blues and you could really see her dark eyes into the world of that place. "It was a big thing to have a blacklisted parent at that young," she says. "We were all hippie radicals and the place was destroyed by words like tactics, SNCC, and SDS. Everyone listened to Joan Baez and Pete Seeger. Everything was up-front, very political. I'm bad to be aware of the political realities."

But that wasn't the only thing I heard my mom there. I heard Mississippi John Hurt and Fred and John Hammond and [illegible] because my parents [illegible] taught myself to play the guitar so I could follow them."

From the camp, the music and the political movements led to Nashville for a brief period in 1969 "because they didn't have a place, no requirement and no rules to go on at night", and then down to Philadelphia where she worked for the American Friends Service Committee "trying to do good" and finally started singing in her own in any number of bars, "Philly bars and clubs. But other back to Cambridge just in time to get a space from the city's two alternative nooklins and the general enthusiasm of the town's in 1970 and 71.

As I've said, the word on Bonnie was just spreading when we first met. I had never heard her sing so when Jack's finally closed down that first night and everyone party had not its course and we were lonely I drastically invited two women's living room I asked her to play some tunes. Bonnie picked up a guitar which had appeared from nowhere, trembling and stunned at I was to sleep (passed out, really) that night the beautiful echoes of the black South on instrument and controlled by a young white woman of the North.

Then Bonnie was making music for the joy of it. That will not be true relationship be it has totally changed since then. The road and gets paid for the music, in the public, but the emotions of the business had corroded on the joy. The first album ("Bonnie Raitt" on Warner's Label) is every magnetic although it had a certain flatly, made up a bedroom. Bonnie is it "That was one way to do a record," she says now. "But I don't think I'd do it that way again."

The second album and most recent Raitt album, "Give It Up", is more professional and more diverse musically. Bonnie is developing a keen sense for the best in other people's material and she has had hits work on tunes written by Jackson Browne, Eric Kaz and Jesse Winchester and Bonnie Raitt, on the party for these playing the Philadelphia Folk Festival the second Dylan — who was so bad asked Bonnie if he can't play mouth harp with her at the Ann Arbor Blues Festival, scheduled for later in the year. Bonnie was due to play with Reggie Wallace, an aging blues guitar, she thought, about Dylan's artist for a moment and then declined. Bonnie didn't want to take away from who might be Reggie's last day in the sun. It was a Raitt-Raitt decision.

She's Delightful, Delicious, And DeLovely

By E. Cohen

Many people have not as yet heard Bette (pronounced with a hard "t" and a silent "e" Milders first album, "The Divine Miss M.", which has helped catapult her into the role of a celebrity. Those who follow the exploits of this 51'11 bombshell with the frizzy red hair say she is destined for greatness in the pop music field. Her fans call her "regal"-as the royal Guenevere; as beautiful as Cleopatra herself.

A banner headline in the March 3rd issue of the National Observer calls her "Bawdy and Bodacious"- and at the top of page one, too. Part of the reason for this is that Miss Midler is a captivating performer, dazzling and controlling her audiences with her wit and good humor.

She holds herself well for someone who has reached the heights of stardom so quickly. About a year ago she was relatively unknown. However after a limited background in films and theater, she branched into music. (She had been singing for a while, but it took appearances at the Continental Baths of New York for the people at the top to notice her.) Chris Chase of The New York Times writes, "She who hadn't been able to get an agent was suddenly a cult figure- 'I became this freak who sings in the tubs'- and Johnny Carson wanted her and David Frost wanted her and nightclubs all over the country wanted her, and what they got was better than they deserved."

Miss Midler's performance at Boston's Music Hall, February 24, was one in a line of successful concerts, each at a major city of the country. She was magnificent. (She first appeared on stage dressed in a gold lame dress slit neatly up the side.

This concert goer's seat was so far back that it was just barely in the building, but near enough to feel the heat she gave off in her performance.

She tries to warm up her audience; singing "Friends", and joking about Boston, Mayor Kevin White, and Laura Nyro.

She screams,

"I'll give you a good illustration of what 'low-rent retro rock 'n' roll means. . . How many of you have ever seen Laura Nyro work?"

Soon the audience hears a mocking imitation of Miss Nyro, not extremely kind to Laura, but serving it's purpose.

Now completely attentive, the audience gazes as she begins with a 60's type rock 'n' roll number styled after groups of the period.

With each new number comes a new mood and personality, more complex than before, yet relatively simple as to what shall come. Miss M. is extremely versatile. She sings either fast, pulsating rock 'n' roll or slow rhythmic blues with equal familiarity. Her music changes from what she called, "trash with flash" to the bluesy crooning of an Ethel Waters:

". . . .I'm just a woman- a lonely woman. .there was a time I was a lonely one, but right now, right now. . ."

She seems to speak to the audience with a voice that lets everyone know how she feels. "Ethel Waters used to kill me," she told the New York Times, earlier this year. "I love Bessie Smith. I love Aretha Franklin. Gospel is some of the most wonderful music around, you get up and you can't stop, it makes you vibrate. I like torch singers who can make you cry. . .When I first started listening, I heard the stories these women were telling, they were laying incredible stuff down, their lives were fabulous lives, and it was in their voices and their song, and I was fascinated by that. And there were some things I had to say about where I've been and who I've been with, and the pain I know."

Back at the Music Hall, Bette wails, ". . . cause she walks to the station with a suitcase in her hand-she's looking for a mysterious dark haired man. "

But always she snaps back with her ever present wit:

". . . .take your positions girls-same positions, different attitudes."

The audience is breathless except for the heckler who yells, "Take it all off!" The advice came as Miss M was doing a number that mustered all the gusto she could deliver. When she had torn off the second act costume of a shiny red sequined dress, she revealed a provocative skin tight blue outfit underneath.

That was the reaction that Bette wanted from the audience. She wanted everybody to have a good time, and she, her band, and her three backup female vocalists put out as much as they could in the hopes of achieving these results. The silence deafened as she sang, "Do You Want to Dance?", and when she picked up the tempo the audience again vibrated. The audience by this time became a cohesive mass, whose attention was focused entirely on only one person; the Divine Miss M. She absorbed their thunderous applause for "Boogie Woogie Bugle Boy", "We've Only Just Begun", "High and Higher", and "Leader of the Pack". She reached her climax with floor-shaking music that brought the Music Hall to it's feet. By this time her energy reserves were depleted, but still she came back to do another number, amidst more thunderous applause.

Her music covered a span of thirty years, mixing sentiment and smut; reflection and robustness. She reminds one so much of the late Janis Joplin in her audience appeal.

Captain Beefheart And The Magic Band
Larry Coryell And Foreplay
The New York Dolls

At The Orpheum Theater, Boston
Feb. 25

A strange, glittering case of decidedly non-popular music was presented last Sunday at the decaying Orpheum Theater before an appreciative crowd of 2000.

For the true trendies and shallowest of the gay paraders there was a travesty of a group called the New York Dolls. For those more interested in music, Larry Coryell and his band Foreplay were there. And for those interested in music and natural flash, there was the wonder of our times, Captain Beefheart And The Magic Band.

This section of the review is designed to show you how annoying the New York Dolls are, as a musical and cultural phenomenon. That's a somewhat constipated way of expressing the idea that this band sucks. They suck. They suck. They suck, they suck, they suck. There're a joy to write about, they suck so bad – because any Herbert Hamfist can take them apart in many interesting ways. Let's begin. First of all, any junior high drugs and pills band can cut these assholes on licks. That is, they can't play their instruments. Let's take it for granted that they can't write. Very few of us have very much to write about, but god damn it, this group can not play. Anything. They appear to know as many as three patterns on three pitch levels @ three thousand watts, which allows us to compute their Melody Invention Rating, as follows: patterns x pitch levels per watt, times the Originality Factor (O) all equals zero. What comes quacking out of their great Ampegs is nothing but other people's hot air gone stale. It's very bad. It sounds like Alice Cooper playing The Stones playing Lou Reed farting through a wet handkerchief, and it goes ZOOM ZOOM ZOOM ba-bup-bup over and over and over, song after wretched song. Maybe rock is repetition, but the material had better be strong enough to take it. Lines like "TRASH (pickitup) DON'T TAKE MY LOVE AWAY" start out weak, and sink lower and lower until the fourth repetition where the curve flattens out: the ten thousandth time is only as limp as the fifth.

The reason this is pathetic and comical rather than infuriating is that the Dolls try very hard to be real. Someone has a lot of money invested in these turkeys because they're all tricked out in the latest togs (Silk & Leather) and they're carefully coached in contemporary performance. They imitate literally everyone, poorly. But it's a measure of their shallow and sublime foolishness that they wear boots with 8-inch soles (original) that interfere with every rickety dance step (carefully prepared from approved patterns). If I saw a still photo of them, I'd think they were a real rock and roll band, but in action the bassist is an awkward klutz with a two-note vocabulary. One lead guitarist is a shuffling little bee-hive headed Italian who dances like a toy poodle on a string and the other is an ordinary stoned-out clown doing awkward Townshend hand impressions. The singer is a stilted Jagger-Cooper duet in a single spindley amphetamine gang-fighter costume. Finally the drummer belabors his one rhythm like a wind-up Keith Moon, which makes the band's name a little more plausible. Contrast this bunch if you will with Foreplay or The Magic Band and you'll see what a hopeless con-job they're attempting to pull on a nation of robotic teenagers. The crowd that cheered Coryell's expertise and got mowed down and resurrected by Captain Beefheart's fabulous entourage sat almost exclusively stoney-faced through a succession of essays in amplified pablum punctuated with mannered remarks like, "Hang it up, questions. You got any answers?" and "This song is, uh, dedicated to all you tacky teenagers in the audience." But when they announced they were about to do their last number, how we cheered and cheered.

After the New York Dolls left us in blissful ignorance of any musical talent they might have possessed (but kept well-hidden), I took a brief sojourn through the waves upon waves of Boston decadence, lit a cigarette, splashed some Coca Cola all over an usher, and returned to my former sitting position in the hopes that Larry Coryell (Joey Baron, take heed - - there's only one "r" in his last name) and his distinguished troubadours.

Much to my surprise, Coryell appeared in an unnatural state (he was sober and straight), but still succeeded in playing his ass off, I think. Leaping Larry (as one of my friends describes him) often appears ill-at-ease in a crowd like that of the Orpheum Theatre (large), and it appeared to be up to Mike Mandel, flying fool of the piano and sythesizer, to appropriate the necessary amount of weirdness to the crowd. I mean, honestly, how can you follow the New York Dolls? (With a shotgun is how)

Not so surprisingly (since as the man said, Boston is one of his favorite haunts), the audience received Coryell with open arms. Perhaps it was genuine joy, or just relief that the Dolls weren't going to come back on. Whatever the case may be, the group opened with Scotland I, from their "Offering" LP, and succeeded in matching the audience's expectations of fine musicianship. Mandel was in rare form, wrenching fine works from his little braille-en-coded synthesizer, Marcus wailed on the soprano sax, and Harry Wilkinson, the drummer, is improving every time I see him. Ditto for Mervin Bronson on bass. They worked their way from "Scotland I" into a very gentle piece, the name of which eludes me, and then moved that upward in intensity to a quote from Chick Corea's "Entardecendo En Saudade". Finally, Coryell decided to announce a song, which turned out to be Harry Wilkinson's ode to philanthropy, "Offering". Onward and upward, with Coryell breaking into some of the flashiest leads I've ever seen him take. Talk about your speed digit kings of the guitar – eek!!! Away and into "Foreplay" from the "Offering" LP (again), and Mike Mandel began having a few difficulties with the amplifier.

One of the nice things about this group as opposed to the Mahavishnu Orchestra is that they are capable of making a few mistakes, and it adds to the quality of the group. Also chopswise, Coryell is probably a bit faster than McLaughlin. Not that it proves anything, but he does seem to be trying a bit harder (after all, right now he is No. 2 in popularity).

Next, free improvisation for a bit. Then an ineffectual "Sex", and an encore on one of Mandel's compositions. Nice. Phade.

At least Coryell seems to be moving up a bit more (pop star?).

Finally, after sqirming through a certain Chambers Brother's mindless stalling, the Captain arrived, or rather his band took the stage. Last time around they started with an "impossible" bass solo by Rockette, so this time they went to the other extreme and had four guitarists and drummer Marimba begin with an elaborate new "composition" that resembled one of Beefheart's two-man instrumentals such as "One Red Rose That I Mean" done up for bass, drums and three guitars.

The Captain then strutted out and started "Low Yo Yo Stuff", and the new Captain Beefheart show was apparant. Captain has evidently found a clear spot as he danced, shuffled, jumped and pranced about the stage with immaculate, elegant joy. He kicked at Marimba's drums during "Nowadays A Woman's Gotta Hit A Man", he slapped at Rockette's guitar and looked like he was having the time of his life. "A star is born," said The Beamer.

The Magic Band wasn't exactly standing still during all this either.

Rockette Morton has always been one of the prime movers in the guitar set. He opened each set of the Captain's first tour with a display of his fierce, strutting fluidity. Grabbing whole handfuls of strings, bushy beard jutting straight ahead, he strode round and round unleashing a torrent of lownotes from the bass couched snugly in his groin. Once he unhooked his strap to demonstrate his hands-on-the-floor, upside-down technique, other times he raised his instrument to his shoulder and sighted the audience down its neck. And he never stopped prancing. To his left, Alex St. Claire was bobbing like a loon, doing some kind of pony step as he strummed his Fender back-hand like a banjo. To the rear, Ed Marimba attacks his drums with economy and ferocity, a gleam in his eye, his grits in his teeth, squinting around a monocle, barechested in a red vest of strangecut, shaking his green pajama pants and tossing his Taras Bulba hairdo. Sheesh. Zoot Horn Rollo and Orejon are the most static of all. They dance and sway just normal. Over all presides the New Captain, strutting and tooting; pausing to howl a verse or admonish the audience with an up-lifted finger. He played his mike like a second instrument, rubbing wet fingers on it to get percussive pops. He dispensed shocks and blessings to the band, waving the mike like a censer or swinging it zoot-style, dumping a wine bottle on the stage and doing a slow twist in the resulting puddle.

"Abba Zaba" and "Crazy Little Thing" were next, and the high-intensity level that this band constantly puts out is astounding. "Didja dig th' Dolls?" asked the Captain. Boos and shouts from the crowd. "Oh balls!" rhymed Beefheart.

He then stopped to introduce the band. "Rockette Morton on guitar and bassius-o-pneilius." Someone in front didn't clap. "Whatsa matter, dontja like 'im? Dontja like 'im?' asked the Captain as he and Morton peered into the crowd, trying to see the infidel. Next was an old lost Magician, Alex St. Claire on guitar. Alex was an original member, playing on the Safe As Milk, Strictly Personal and Mirror Man albums. Most of the night he was relegated to playing third guitar while he charged about the stage. The biggest hand was for Ed Marimba on drums. He stood and doffed his monicle in formal appreciation. Dressed in black as The Cisco Keed, Orejon was on 1st bass (Rockette switched on and off during the evenining). Zoot Horn Rollo got a good hand and looked more than ever like Long John Baldry.

Next came an excellent instrumental "Sugar And Spikes" from Trout Mask Replica. Without a vocal, you could appreciate the driving force of this tune even more. Marimba shone. Zoot Horn and Rockette then played a beautiful and faithful "Peon". The songs that come out best in live performance are those from Trout Mask and Lick My Decals Off, Baby as the full force and stunning musicianship of these bizarre tunes hits you best when you can actually see them being played.

The band returned and played "I'm Gonna Booglerize Ya" and "Alice In Blunderland". "Winged Eel Fingerling is gone, (he used to play lead guitar on this song) so we have uh different Alice on this song," said th' Captain, gesturing to Zoot Horn Rollo. This song illustrated the only problem that occurred all night long. Rollo's guitar had an unfortunate tendency to become inaudible at times, and since there were two other guitars playing at the same time, it was hard enough to hear his superlative leads anyway.

Then a surprise, "I'm A King Bee". This is the first time I've ever heard the Captain ever do anyone else's song, except for his encores of "More". I'm A King Bee" was pretty basic, and had a great ending as Beefheart waved his arms and cut the song off in mid-chord.

A long version of "Mirror Man", with the Captain actually telling the crowd to get up, get up, was next. After he'd gotten us up, he sat us down. After we sat us down, he told us to get up before our pants fell down. It was an accepted fact that they'd do "Big-Eyed Beans From Venus", and they launched into it straight away. Unfortunately, Zoot Horn's sound system had some trouble finding that long lunar note, so the song didn't blow the Orpheum's roof off, as it should have, but it still wasn't bad.

"Little Golden Birdies" ended the set, with the Captain letting us sing the "webcor, webcor" at the end, since we were all dying to.

"Click Clack" was the encore, and was a fitting cap to a transcendent evening of music.

The catharsis of Don Van Vliet is truly one of the more joyous things to happen in an increasingly cynical world of contemporary music. When I got my first face to face encounter with the intrepid Captain last year in the form of a fourty minute blitzkreig set at the Vancouver Gardens in British Columbia, he fulfilled his enigmatic legend to the hilt. Keeping his eyes hidden behind a floppy fedora and his soprano sax stuffed into the P.A. mike, he pretty much let the Magic Band carry the show biz and the slack-jawed crowd found him gone before they had really comprehended his presence.

Not so this time around though, as an equally bedazzled throng payed loving witess to the unveiling of a consumate showman, the entertainer's entertainer, a cosmic crooner for the amorphous seventies.

Sparks flew from his Fat Theresa shows as the Cap upstaged even that most dashing of hambones, Rockette Morton. Jabbing, leaping, slippin', slidin' and rabbit-hopping into our hearts as reality merged with fantasy from the most frenetic energy source extant in that sleepy Sabbath urban sprawl.

Eyes wide, minds ajive, we shared his glow; he jerked us from our slumbers; he booglerized us. Beefheart.

NINOTCHKA (1939)
A dedicated (but attractive) Soviet commissar, Greta Garbo is sent to Paris to check up on three incompetent emissaries who are supposed to be selling jewels to buy machinery, is deflected from her purpose by romance with an aristocrat. A sophisticated, spirited comedy but one which was also used as political propaganda in 1939-41 (before the Americans entered the war) and later in Europe in 1948-52 during the "heffest" period of the cold war. Even without Garbo, this would be one of Ernst Lubitsch's best films. The script still sparkles and is still irrestibly funny; Lubitsch's sense of timing is as fine as ever. A splendid cast featuring Melvyn Douglas, Peter Lorry and Bela Lugosi. Thompson 104, Thursday, 3/8, 10.

It's the latest in the series of asinine entertainments made popular in recent years, like Airport and Skyjacked. At the start the situations and relationships are contrived; the film picks up once the boat capsizes, but not much. The special effects and the capsize itself would look great on television. On the screen it has the anemic look of a production burdened with a

Hitchcock has said many times in interviews that he considers Shadow of a Doubt his best American film. One can easily agree with him even though this film is often less admired than his other films, which usually sacrifice more to technical effects and black comedy. Its classically effective style is used not only to develop the suspense but also to characterize the world of Charley's small town relatives and to disclose the psychotic tension under Charley's gentle exterior. Joseph Cotten's silences count more than his dialogue in his very effective performance as Charley. The various subtle camera movements seem that much more perfect because they are never [illegible]

What ROTC Is All About

To The Editor:
Mr. Ladd's letter of Friday, February 16, concerning his discovered misconception of ROTC, merits an honorable mention in fiction, but a failure in truth. Either Mr. Ladd has been experiencing nightmares, which might account for the fiction, or he has been reading some extremely misleading material, which would probably account for the lack of truth in his statement.

I am sure that there are many people who either the military for one reason or another. I am also sure that we can all agree that many changes are temporarily needed in the military. Do we attempt to change the military to alternative bureaucrat is hated or do we attempt to make the necessary changes in order to make it more receptive to the needs of those on active duty and the country in general? There are two major ways in which these changes may be initiated, through the elected officials in government and through the individuals that comprise the officer corps and enlisted ranks in the military, that must interact here in the change which must be initiated by the officers who is a graduate of ROTC.

Before commissioning, the ROTC cadet is exposed to continually changing ideas as a result of having his/her detachment located in the classroom environment of the college campus where change and participation in such change is the lifestyle. It would be derogatory to say that the ROTC curriculum did not include an in depth study in military history and defense, but it is hardly overwhelming. ROTC emphasizes both written and oral communication because it is believed that proficiency in both must be being understood, a quality which would benefit all of us to place more emphasis. ROTC also emphasizes concern in social action in the form of volunteer work in the community. With this type of exposure, the ROTC graduate arrives with some how and potential for recognizing the needful change in the military and initiating such change.

ROTC does not claim perfection, but does promise flexibility. Give us a chance to make some flexibly needed changes. Come down and find out firsthand on what ROTC is all about.

What Is DVP?

(Ed. note: This is the first in a series of articles to acquaint the University community with the existence, operation, and mem-

The Distinguished Visitors Program, more commonly known as DVP, is the major student lecture organization on campus. DVP seeks to bring to the University community a schedule of well-known speakers, who are popularly thought to be able and provocative personalities in their area of endeavor and interest.

DVP's program is aimed at providing a diverse, balanced series covering many interests and major viewpoints, in an effort to stimulate intellectual discussion so as to be better able to deal with the issues of today.

DVP is entirely student-run and student-operated. So as to ensure the representation of diversity among the membership of DVP, we encourage the application of all of those who feel that they might bring with them specific and unique information that will make DVP all the more representative of the student body.

DVP is now accepting applications for new members. If you feel you have an interest in DVP, please come by the Reception Desk in the RSO Office (1st level of CC) and pick up an application for membership. They are due on Friday, March 16th.

Goldovsky will be visiting UMass under the auspices of the Fine Arts Council March 4-7. During this time, he will conduct the Goldovsky Grand Opera Theatre in full-staged performances of Benjamin Britten's comic opera "Albert Herring" in Bowker Auditorium at 8:00 p.m. on March 6-7 and will also give an analysis of the Britten opera to music majors and other interested parties in Bowker Auditorium at 11:15 a.m. on Tuesday, March 6th. Practicum Debate Postponed

By SUSAN R. HUBBARD

Debate on the establishment of a one to 15 credit 'practicum' was postponed when the Faculty Senate met yesterday in Herter Hall.

Location and transferral of the Hampshire Inter-Library Center was also discussed as part of the new business originally scheduled for last week's Faculty Senate meeting of Feb. 22.

The Committee on Academic Matters proposed in a special report that a practicum be provided to enable students to gain experience in practical fields, outside of the University. For such work, one to 15 credits towards graduation would be awarded the student, and these credits would not be specified under any major department.

In this manner, students would not be in danger of exceeding the maximum number of credits they may earn in their major fields towards a particular degree.

Since the University Year of Action presently provides a similar working experience for students, the necessity of such a practicum had been questioned. However, certain guidelines of the UYA program as set up by the Federal government through its Action program, require credits earned in UYA work to be granted by a specific academic department.

As proposed, the practicum would allow participants to earn credits in a general, non-departmental field.

The Hampshire Inter-Library Center location was the only other subject of Fac-Sen business, as a motion was presented by Senator Mario S. Depillis protesting the lack of consultation of the faculty on the transferral of this collection.

HILC is currently housed on the second floor of Goodell Library and is a jointly owned research collection, supplementing the resources of the members of the Five Colleges.

Senator Depillis' motion was tabled.

Meditation Class In JQ Adams

Each Thursday night an accredited class is meeting to bring to its participants the science and art of creative meditation of the Masters of the Far East.

The series of nine classes offers an approachable view of the way in which these masters have come to understand the Principle of Creative Life.

Guests will share their coordinated, albeit varied, exposures and experiences in their continuing pursuit of real happiness, peace of self, and psychic awareness (which comes as an added gift of the meditative experience).

All interested students are invited to attend every Thursday night from 7:00 to 9:00 in the conference room John Q. Adams, Southwest Residential College.

Coalition Forming To Fight Abortion

By JOAN FASSNACHT

Stressing their obligation to protect the unborn fetus's rights, the newly-formed Anti-Abortion Coalition is manning a table in the Campus Center Concourse to dispense information and counseling to students.

At their first meeting last night, the Coalition voted to ratify their Constitution and held elections to elect officers. Acting President David Kuzmeski said the Coalition now consists of more than twenty members, although new members are always welcome. By next week, they hope the Student Senate will have voted to recognize them as a Recognized Student Organization.

Kuzmeski founded the Coalition as a reaction against the Supreme Court ruling on the legality of abortion. Said Kuzmeski, "I didn't want to sit back and do nothing, so I spoke with my friends and asked them for help." Accordingly, the table was set up, and literature was donated by Lifeline and the Newman Center. The Coalition emphasized that they were not religiously affiliated.

The Coalition's main objective is to make abortion illegal once again. They hope to accomplish this by circulating petitions to be signed by concerned citizens. These petitions will be sent to the President of the United States and to the Attorney Generals of Massachusetts, Texas, and Georgia. These are the only three states which are trying to appeal the decision before the Supreme Court. Kuzmeski said that there are three ways to go about changing the Supreme Court ruling: by petitioning the Supreme Court to reopen the case; by adding a Constitutional Amendment, or by recognizing the fetus as a human life with rights. Rhode Island is now in the process of adopting the last measure, and Kuzmeski hopes that Massachusetts will follow suit.

The Coalition's second objective is to offer alternatives to abortion. Acting Vice-President Susan Laidig sees abortion as "the scapegoat for social problems. It is the easy way out. I would prefer to see homes for unwed mothers and adoption as more socially acceptable alternatives."

Tentatively, the Coalition has scheduled two speakers to be here on April 6 in SBA 120 at 8:00 p.m. Dr. Mildred F. Jefferson and Joan Hannah Winslow will speak on alternatives to abortion and moral problems associated with abortion.

At this time, the Coalition has no money. They will accept grants and donations, and are planning to sponsor a "Walk for Human Life". Students will be asked to donate money for each mile walked.

Kuzmeski said that he felt compelled to form this group because "We feel that human life is formed at the moment of conception. We cannot sit back and allow 600,000 human beings to be slaughtered each year. We are not here to control women's bodies. But when a new life is formed, it should be protected. Women cannot impose their rights over the child's body.

Your Head

Feels Sorry For Roommate

By DRS. McCASHIN and KLEIN

Q: My roommate with whom I've been pretty close for several years really has me in a bind. Because she feels unable to cope, I feel sorry for her. Yet when I try to be helpful she usually scorns my advice. She is always running herself down and says there is nothing she can do to improve her life. I try to tell her she is not so bad but she always answers that I really don't care about her. I'd really like to tell her how I feel but I'm afraid of hurting her feelings. When I suggest that she seek professional help she becomes very indignant and says how could a therapist really ever be a true friend. What is going on in our relationship?

A: The type of interpersonal relationship you describe is not uncommon. It can develop not only among roommates but in all kinds of interpersonal situations including families and couples. There are many facets to this kind of interaction. Essentially the participants act out roles that are significant to them because of their past experience and psychological development. Each person through different means attempts to control the behavior of the other.

One person is emotionally upset, helpless and demanding while the other attempts to be an all-caring, nurturing "super parent." Generally these interpersonal dynamics lead to a situation that is anxiety and guilt-producing, exceedingly frustrating and ultimately exhausting.

People respond in a naturally helpful way when another appears in need. Yet in this situation as you indicate your helpfulness is rejected. As things intensify the "helper" becomes frustrated and angry but usually does not express this out of fear of "hurting" the helpless person. The helper tries to gain control through more caring in spite of being angry.

Overt forms of manipulation and control are easily recognized. Less obvious is manipulation through helplessness. The helpless person threatens further emotional hurt and upset if certain needs and demands aren't met. This is characterized by considerable melodrama and intensity. One thing that can be said for this kind of interaction is that there is rarely a dull moment.

Perhaps the most important thing to keep in mind is that ultimately each of us can only take responsibility for ourselves.

Senior Committee Needs Quorum To Receive Funds

A meeting of the Senior Committee will be held this Sunday at 6:30 p.m. in Room 805 of the Campus Center. Any member of the senior class is eligible to attend and vote on issues before the committee.

The Student Senate voted last Wednesday night to freeze the budget of the Senior Committee until a quorum of the group has met.

Without senior class funds, there can be no plans made for a Senior Day, allocations for a class gift, etc. All seniors who want the account unfrozen by the Senate in order to decide on these events and issues must attend Sunday's meeting.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

☆—by SYDNEY OMARR—☆

The Sagittarius woman may like the "outdoor type", but she really is fascinated by the man with intellectual interests. It is best to be honest with the Sagittarius woman she can forgive almost anything, but not deception. She loves to read and travel; she is frank and spiritual. She can break the rules but she usually learns them and knows how to work with them. The Sagittarius woman is drawn to the Aries man, often marries Gemini and can make money with Capricorn. She will be having a high time socially in 1973 and September may find her embarking on a journey.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Powerful emotions dominate. Relations with opposite sex are intensified. Nothing happens halfway: know it and don't start something unless you intend to finish it. Capricorn is in picture. Money picture is bright.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Government papers, special tasks are featured. Now you find out where you stand and what to do about it. Best to finish rather than begin project. Maintain self esteem. Refuse to back down from principles.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Express yourself, permit creative juices to flow. Highlight: independence, originality. Deal with Leo. You could receive communication from foreign land. Be receptive to opportunity which involves travel, study.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Obtain hint from Gemini message. Accent now is on teaching and learning. Key is to apply lessons, especially those related to property, legacies, bequests. Concern with hidden matters is emphasized.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Be flexible. Stress versatility. Don't try to push views. Laughter now gains more than threatening grimaces. Accept social invitation. Welcome new contacts. Leave details, fine points for another time.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Pace may appear slow but you are going in direction of goal. Key is to be steady, sensitive and mature. Those who advocate otherwise may be sincere but are misinformed. Be thorough. Be familiar with details. Avoid excess.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Significant changes occur. Curb tendency to be ex travagant. You accomplish mission. Personal magnetism soars. Your ideas are creative and you profit by putting them to use. Co-operate with young persons. Gemini and Virgo are involved.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Home, personal environment, ultimate security—these areas are spotlighted. Take nothing for granted. Prepare and build—deal with Taurus and Libra. What appears a setback is of temporary nature. Know it and ride with the tide.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may be trying to do too much simultaneously. Key is now to be selective. One who makes promises may not be able to fulfill them. Choose quality. Put a halt to relationship which drains financial and emotional resources.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Settle financial matter. Get what's coming to you—be positive, direct and responsible. Special relationship is highlighted. If single, there is talk of marriage. If married, you rediscover mate. Married or single, you can build toward a more secure future.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your humanitarian instincts find constructive outlet. You gain added recognition. Personality is spotlighted. Many persons seek your opinion. Reach beyond current expectations. Get finger on pulse of public.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Light is thrown on previously darkened area. You gain access to privileged information. Lea and Aquarius could play prominent roles. Secret conference is featured. Maintain balance and poise.

Women Host National Gym Champions

The undefeated women's varsity gym team squares off against the defending national champions, Springfield College, Saturday evening at 7:30 p.m. in Boyden auxiliary gym. Due to the level of the meet, each team will put up only four competitors per event with the top three scores per event counting toward team score. Hence, the pressure will be on both teams. In the all-around competition UMass will enter the defending Eastern Regional champion, Margie Combs, and the much improved, Jeannine Burger. Both performers have been consistent this season and should provide a strong backbone to the team's performance.

The four individual events will be highlighted by the best collegiate performers in the East. Last year, UMass and Springfield dominated the regional championships and together swept all the top honors.

The UMass line-up for vaulting will include Candy Gross, Heidi Armstrong, Margie Combs, and Jeannine Burger. The team looks for some fine vaults to get them started on the right foot. The uneven bars, perhaps the most exciting of all the events, will see Margie Combs, Jeannine Burger, Ann Vexler, and Betsy East displaying their talents.

On floor exercise event, the one UMass scored higher in than any other team at the nationals last season, will feature Alicia Goode, Margie Combs, Anne Vexler, and Jeannine Burger. Balance beam, where one's ability to control and execute difficult stants is imperative, will be competed by Thanne Peth, Margie Combs, Jeannine Burger, and Anne Vexler.

Springfield College has not lost a dual meet in at least the past five years and will be a good challenge for a young UMass team. The UMass co-captains believe the team will do very well and establish itself as a national threat.

One wrinkle this week have introduced as the performance property for a great gymnastics/ballet exhibition. Mimi Sherman, recently superstar on the 1973 World University Games coach, who also participates a ballet team, Springfield will be led by Catherine Kalamian and Judith Hackney, both of whom are picture competitors.

ANN VEXLER, an outstanding woman gymnast, will be competing against the nation's best tomorrow night as Springfield College comes to town. (Photo by MDC Staff)

NIT Gets NCAA Leftovers

Ranking independent giants Marquette, Providence and Houston accepted NCAA basketball tournament bids Thursday while the NIT began eating leftovers.

All eight non-conference teams from The Associated Press Top Twenty were locked up by the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

Fifth-ranked Marquette, 22-2, is the highest rated independent. Providence is No. 6 with a 21-2 record and the Houston Cougars eighth with 21-3.

Also going to NCAA are No. 11 Southwestern Louisiana, 22-2; No. 14 Syracuse, 21-4; No. 17 St. John's of New York, 19-5; No. 18 Jacksonville, 21-5; and No. 19 South Carolina, 19-5.

Unranked Oklahoma City, 20-6, also was selected.

When the NCAA finished picking, the National Invitation Tournament got rolling and bagged giant-killer Notre Dame, 14-11; Virginia Tech, 17-5; and little-known American University of Washington, D.C., 21-4.

Most of the remaining 15 spots for the March 17-26 event at Madison Square Garden in New York will be filled by runnersup of conferences whose champions go automatically to the NCAA.

In the NCAA, 16 of the 25 berths go to conference represetatives. Many still must be decided, either through season records or league tournaments.

Aikido Master Here Sunday

On Sunday, March 4th, Kanai Sensai, a sixth degree black belt in Aikido, will give a demonstration and conduct a class in the japanese art of self-defense. The demonstration will be held at the Boyden Auxiliary Gym from 11:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. The public is invited.

Aikido is a martial art like Judo and Karate. But unlike the other two, it is completely non-competitive.

"Some time ago," he wrote, "I have grown to feel that the whole earth is my house and the sun, the moon and the stars are all my things. I had become free from all desire, not only for position, fame and property, but also for the strong. I was able to understand the whispering of the birds, and was clearly aware of the mind of God, the Creator of the universe."

Clinic Tomorrow

Amherst, Mass.—The University of Massachusetts in Amherst will hold its Annual Baseball Clinic on Saturday, March 3, beginning at 9:15 a.m. in Durfee Gym. The clinic is intended for players of high school age and coaches of teams at all levels of baseball.

Gymnasts In Finale With Temple At Cage

By BRENDA RAU

Tonight at 7 p.m. is the last time the UMass men's gymnastics team will be competing at home this year. And it's your last chance ever to see some of the finest performers, the seniors, in competition. Tonight will be the last performances for floor- flash Jack Berner and strongman Dan Spier, who has been very important all season. And competing at home for the last time will be Steve Nelson, of side-horse fame. Finally, we'll see the last of Jay Aronstein who has led the team all year as co-captain and as high scorer. Jay's still ring routines have been spectacular and it should be interesting to see how he does nationally.

At any rate, tonight's meet, held appropriately in Curry Hicks Cage, should be the tightest of this year for the Minutemen. The competition is a very powerful, though somewhat inconsistent, Temple University squadron. Temple has scored as high as 160.8 while UMass' high mark was only 157.7 against Penn State. But Temple's incredible improvement since last year has been noted by all.

Temple has several men scoring in the nine point range as does UMass. But on floor the Minutemen have no consistent nines. Temple has Senior Mel Hill who's been scoring high on floor for two years. Bob Rice, TU, also displays a nice floor set. But UMass, on the other hand, has Jay Thomsen who improves with every meet. (8.9 was his mark against Springfield.) And everybody will want to see Jack Berner in his last tumbling set of his college career. Valuable all- around man, Rich Seikunas, always does well on floor, too. Temple probably will come out on top at this point.

Next, the side horse, of the ugly animal. Side-horse is the most unpredictable of them all. Brian Hassig will be expected to spark the show for UMass. We can also look for good scoring from Steve Nelson, all-around Bruce Scudder and Rich Seikunas. But we'll all wait for Steve Nelson, the new state national horse champ, to be best home meet. Rich Hill has again scored in the nines in this event so has teammate Kulick. UMass will have to hit really well to go anywhere on the event.

Rings should be a different story, however. It should also be one of the most competitive events. Here you can expect a solid mid-nine score from Jay Aronstein (he's scored 9.6 this year with a low of 9.3). Bob Rice of Temple will be one of the toughest men for Jay this year without a doubt. 9.3 or 9.4 is what can be expected of Bob.

Next in line for honors will be Temple's Blitstein pitted against UMass' Spier. Danny has a complicated ring set though and a hard one to beat. Whelan will be up on rings too. UMass will most likely take the event though.

Vaulting should be a fine event to watch. Temple's line-up here are all capable of nines even though only three of them can count. But it is still expected to be much better than UMass can manage. Against Penn, Temple scored a 27.85 out of a possible 30 points. But then too UMass has its new found Jack Fabbricante and trusty, solid junior, Jay Thomsen. No more need be said about the event—UMass must put out the best it has to wrestle this one.

Next event to challenge the gymnasts will be parallel bars, the event that started the ball rolling for UMass against Springfield. Here Gene Whelan will be back after his ankle put him out for some important meets this year. He's back where he's most needed and we'll be looking for great things from him. He could match up nicely with any of the Temple men. Specialist Musy (TU) looks about the best for the opponents. Bill Brouillet and Dan Spier must hit here.

Now then—horizontal bar is last. And if any of you have ever been to a UMass gymnastics meet, you'll know how crucial the final event can be. It's so often this event which decides it all. Marcus expects no different from a tonight. Both Temple and UMass have scored in the 9's. Both teams have some tricky routines. Temple has Bergin and Carlson—UMass probably presents Kaiser and Scudder. Temple spells Rice, UMass has Whelan.

Fordham at Cage On Senior Night

"Senior Night is the highlight of our basketball program. It is a very high class honor for a group of young men who toiled four years for the university. I just can't explain the feeling I get when the seniors are out on the court together getting their ovation. For me this is the most emotional experience of anything at Massachusetts."—Jack Leaman.

By EARLE BARROLL

Coach, You're not alone. The mass of humanity that has reacted to this festive occasion over the years testifies to this emotional orgasm that challenges the foundations of Curry Hicks Cage each basketball season.

It has been said that Julius Erving's senior night—if it took place—would have resulted in the cancellation of the subsequent basketball game. Not even the Boston College-UMass game of two years back. Not even Syracuse-UMass that same season. Yes, not even the UConn-UMass game of this campaign can match the feverish pitch that accompanies this one evening.

And so tomorrow night at the Cage 6,000 (and not the ever present "official figure" of 4200 th·· ' seems to hide what UMass student enthusiasm is all about) will pay their final farewell to captain Tom McLaughlin, Charlie Peters, Tom Austin and Chuck Olsen. Game time is 7:30, but guaranteed it won't start on time.

There is a game and an excellent and important one at that to follow. Fordham, the only sub-.500 team in the history to be considered for the N.I.T. will supply the opposition. Why are they being considered? One, the lack of New York schools that is foreseen by the committee.

Two, they play a rugged schedule. Their record is only 12-14 but the eight previous challengers prior to tomorrow night's game were Syracuse, Maryland, St. John's, Notre Dame, Rutgers, Georgetown, Marquette and South Carolina.

And three, the chairman of the N.I.T. committee is Peter Carlissimo, the athletic director for Fordham. 'Nough said.

As far as UMass' chances are concerned, the latest word is no word. Yesterday afternoon in his office Leaman was sopping wet with sweat anticipating a possible call from the committee that had been predicted by McLaughlin earlier in the morning.

Tom's brother Frank, who was an assistant coach at Fordham and then went to South Bend with Digger Phelps has been in New York with the N.I.T. committee the past two weeks selling Notre Dame. It worked, the Irish are in, but also in the process Frank got word of UMass' possibilities. He told his mother, Mrs. Mac informed Tom and this caused "the toughest afternoon in my life" according to Leaman.

"A win by Fordham," said Leaman "may vault them right back into the picture. I'm just hoping that we'll have a bid prior to the time we go on the floor with the Rams."

Besides Notre Dame, there have been only two other picks, American University and Virginia Tech. Providence as expected accepted an N.C.A.A. at-large berth, but the big news was Syracuse and St. John's also being chosen to the big tourney thus leaving two eastern places open (hopefully for UMass) in the N.I.T. With these two gone the Minutemen are the top independent left in this region. (The Yankee Conference is not recognized at all).

Leaman has said of this year's seniors that ability-wise he'll find replacements, but spiritual- wise he never will. "There's been more leadership from this group of seniors," he said, "than any group I've ever had. I will have more trouble replacing them, not as players, but as the team players and stabilizing factors they were for this year's group.

"They've contributed much more than playing ability to the success of this year's team. I'm just wondering if we'll be able to find this quality for next season's team."

He also had separate words for each of them:

McLaughlin—"I've said it a number of times that we'll find players in the years to come who will be as talented on the court as Tom McLaughlin. But I'll never find another captain who has meant so much to a team with his leadership qualities as Tom's have."

Peters—"Charlie gets more out of what he has than any player I've ever coached. We think so much of him that he's been nominated for the unsung hero award in New England."

Austin—"He's played the last 15 games as brilliantly as we always thought he could play. It's no coincidence that we started winning when he started playing."

Olsen—"C. 'ck is an outstanding young man. He made a great contribution to our program by making other teammates better. I'm proud to have him work in our program next semester with the JV's."

Oh yeah. One last note. Tomorrow night will be the last game of the regular season, that's regular season.

Skaters' Title On Line

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

The UMass hockey squad will open its Division II title defense Saturday afternoon, when they will play host to seventh-seeded Middlebury at Orr Rink. The opening face-off will come at 3:00.

Both teams have been plagued with injuries. Of course, the Minutemen will be without the super goaltending of Chicky Rheault who was hurt in a freak motorcycle accident and is finished for the year. Brian Mulcahy will also be missed Saturday. Brian skated in practice on Wednesday, but was still in pain from his injury received in the Vermont game and Brian will watch the game from the sidelines.

Middlebury, a team which only carries an 8-man squad to begin with, has been hit hard with injuries to key payers. Recently, they have brought up a line from the freshman squad which has fared extremely well in the three games they have performed in.

The Minutemen have looked flat in their last two efforts. They hadn't planned to play things differently with John Kiah in the UMie net, but it just worked out that way.

"We'll have to hit more," cited Coach Jack Caniff, "if we expect to go anywhere in the playoffs." The 11-4-2 Minutemen will take things game-by-game. There are no pushovers when you get to playoff hockey. Every game (if there is more than one) will be do or die for all the teams involved. One loss and your season comes to an abrupt ending.

The last time these two teams met was in Orr Rink, before the semester break (December 8). Sparked by Kevin Connors' two goals, the Minutemen emerged victorious 6-3. Two third period goals iced the victory for UMass.

For seniors Peter Erickson (on his honeymoon, injured), Lonnie Avery, Donald Lowe, Robert Shilalie, Captain Don Riley, Chico Shea, and...John Kiah the last of regular season action in a UMass uniform has passed. Yes, Kiah is separated from the rest of the pack. The pinnacle of his UMass hockey career has not yet occurred. Kiah will be called upon to wear a big, big set of pads, those of Chicky Rheault. The star soccer goalie couldn't be faulted for his performances against Salem State and Yale. A little shakiness I'm sure was expected from Kiah.

Kiah's performance will be important, but Caniff cited, "It will be how well the team plays in front of John that will decide our fate." Heed the words of Coach Jack Caniff, the man who did what many felt was impossible in bringing the UMass hockey program from a total zero just four short years ago to the Division II title last year.

While the Minutemen will be hosting Middlebury, other first round action includes: top-seeded Vermont against St. Anselms; Norwich against Merrimack; and Williams vs. Bowdoin.

The winners in these games will meet on March 7th. The games being played on the ice of the team with the highest seeding

The winners in these games will meet on March 7th, the games being played on the ice of the team with the highest seeding. The Division II championship game is slated for March 10.

Tomorrow afternoon will be the end of the season for one team at Orr Rink. Let's hope it won't be the Minutemen.

A Matter of Politics

Three bids for the National Invitational Tournament (stress the word, invitational) went out yesterday to Notre Dame, Virginia Tech and American University.

There are still thirteen more berths to be granted, but the process of picking involves a little more than just a team's record. It is a matter of politics and the decision which is reached is based on a combination of how many people the team might draw to Madison Square Garden and who they have beaten.

The NIT committee is headed by Pete Carlissimo, the Fordham athletic director, and he is complimented by eight others, mostly from New York area schools. The pressure is intense on these men and they have been bombarded with pleas from almost every dreamer in the country. Such schools as Mercer College in Macon, Ga., and Buffalo State have entered their pitches.

One of the biggest snow jobs so far is that by Digger Phelps, the coach of Notre Dame, and the former coach of Fordham. One week before the Fighting Irish were scheduled to play Fordham in NY City, Phelps was there. Notre Dame lost by one, but Assistant Coach Frank McLaughlin (brother of UMass captain Tom) was in the big city for two weeks prior to the selections.

Phelps came back last weekend and the Irish upset NCAA-bound St. John's. He stayed on two extra days, and he must have been very persuasive.

The basis of Notre Dame's argument was outlined in the NY Times a few days ago. The Irish had a record of 13-11, but the major selling was it's drawing power.

Phelps told the Times that, "We're like a local team in New York. Fifteen-hundred of our 6,500 students are from this area. We have 8,000 active alumni here and maybe as many as 30,000 subway-alumni. What's better than having the Fighting Irish in New York on St. Patrick's Day (March 17) when the NIT opens?" Add this to the fact that Notre Dame games have been televised five times this season. Then, emphasize the wins, such as the upset of St. John's and you have the formula for getting into the NIT.

American University, besides boasting a 19-4 record, have had exposure in the NY Times. The squad from Washington, DC features 6'9 Kermit Washington. Only six others in collegiate history, besides Washington have averaged over 20 points and 20 rebounds in the same season. The honored company includes Julius Erving, Artis Gilmore, Walter Dukes, Wilt Chamberlain, Bill Russell and Paul Silas.

Virginia Tech at 16-5 has wins over South Carolina and Ohio State to its credit.

The Yankee Conference champs are just beginning their sales pitch. Crowds of 7,000 and 5,000 UMies for the past two UMass NIT appearances, along with a victory over NCAA-bound Penn, should be credentials enough. The wait continues.

Trackmen Enter IC4A's

By WALT POWERS

Did the five-week layoff at semester break hurt the performance of the UMass indoor track team?

"You bet!" said Coach Ken O'Brien. "Because of it, our season was really a short one, only five weeks long, and until last week, we never developed the cohesion this team is capable of."

The season ends tomorrow in Princeton, New Jersey, where the Minutemen enter the extremely competitive ICAAAA's. The meet is a big one, extending over two days.

The team that runs tomorrow will be a small one, comprised of the nucleus of this year's indoor and outdoor track squads.

In the dash, they'll go with their co-captain, senior Tony Pendleton, who closes out a long indoor career. The hurdles will feature Jim Hennessey and Curt Stegerwald, who tied the UMass indoor record last week. Stegerwald has improved steadily, and O'Brien attributes it to Errol Prisbee, his genial assistant coach. "I always knew he had the speed, but with Errol's help, he has just about overcome the problems of form and starting that hurt him at the start of the season," said O'Brien.

Co-Captain Steve Levine, freshman Peter Byron, and veteran John Maloney will run the middle distances. Levine, the team's leading scorer, will run the double in the 440 and the distance medley and like Pendleton, this meet closes out his indoor career.

Paul Catano will be the team's lone miler. His 4:12.7 on Dec. 13 is still the fastest of the UMass season. Sophomores Bill Gillin and Randy Thomas and freshman Tom Magure ran the fastest indoor two miles of their lives last week in the New Englands, and they figure to be pushed even harder this time.

Ken O'Brien is realistic about the meet, and he doesn't expect a victory. "We'll focus on individual performances in this meet," O'Brien said, "but the competitive experience our athletes obtain should have a beneficial effect on our entire program."

Lieutenant Governor Donald Dwight spoke in favor of the plan to reorganize Massachusetts' educational system. Cronin, "will decentralize state education to a great degree, and permit freedom of operation within each of the boards." (MDC Photos by Gib Fullerton)

Dwight Promotes 'Reorg' Plan

By MARK VOGLER

Massachusetts Lt. Gov. Donald Dwight said Friday that the reorganization plan of state education is one that "does away with the present monolythic structure in favor of a system that guarantees checks and balances."

Dwight responded to questions pertaining to the reorganization plan during a press conference at the University of Massachusetts—just one of the stopovers of his tour.

The lieutenant-governor also planned to appear in Holyoke, Northampton, Springfield, Westfield, West Springfield and Framingham to discuss issues regarding the educational plan drawn up by Joseph M. Cronin, secretary of educational affairs.

"With the new system, we would still have policy directed at the state level. We are trying to keep policy matters at the central offices," Dwight said.

"But at the same time, we want the operations to be kept as close to the regions as possible. This system will decentralize state education to a great degree, and permit freedom of operation within each of the boards."

The reorganization plan calls for the establishment of two state-wide boards, the Board of Elementary and Secondary Education and the Board of Post Secondary Education, which would set policies and minimum standards for the entire commonwealth.

On the local level, five new Regional Educational Boards have been proposed to set priorities, assess needs, develop budgets and provide assistance to the school districts and colleges in their domains.

In regard to the proposed abolition of the Board of Trustees at the institutions of higher learning, Dwight said, "What we're really doing is taking the trustees out of the institutions and putting in trustees of education."

Asked if he might foresee complications of trying to coordinate the policies of elementary and secondary education with higher education by overlapping the membership on the two central boards, Dwight said that to do otherwise would go against the major premises of the reorganization plan.

"Our proposal sees education as a continuum; a life-long process which people of all ages should be given the right to pursue.

"I think that there's an increasing artificial gap which must be bridged. There has to be some kind of continuity in the system, and I think our plan provides for this," he said.

Dwight said that the governor's influence would be lessened in the area of education since he would make fewer appointments to the board's positions.

"We'll definitely be pulling back on the governor," he said. "Gov. Sargent will appoint fewer than half of the Regional Board members. That's quite an improvement. Right now, the governor is on the UMass Board of Trustees."

The lieutenant-governor said that he's very much pleased with the Plan as it stands, but added, "Just as anything else, it could be improved."

He said that there was a proposal made that there be two of each of the central office established, and that paralleling boards be created for each region.

"We feel that we've reached a stage in the development of education in this state where we've hit a capacity to pour out all our resources. It's evident that we must revamp the system, and I think the reorganizational plan should be considered," Dwight said.

Guerrillas End 60-Hour Takeover Of Arabian Embassy

By HOLGER JENSEN
Associated Press Writer

KHARTOUM, Sudan (AP) — Flashing victory signs with their fingers, eight Palestinian guerrillas filed out of the blood-spattered Saudi Arabian Embassy on Sunday to end a 60-hour takeover that cost the lives of three diplomats.

The bodies of U.S. Ambassador Cleo A. Noel, Jr., U.S. Charge d'Affaires G. Curtis Moore and Belgian Charge d'Affaires Guy Eid were brought out wrapped in burlap.

The Jordanian Charge d'Affaires, Adley el Nasser; the Saudi Arabian ambassador, Abdullah Malhouk, and Mrs. Malhouk were released unharmed by the Black September guerrillas who took over the embassy with machine guns during a reception Thursday evening.

The diplomats were shot Friday night in the embassy basement. The U.S. Embassy here released the text of a brief telephone call from Noel two hours before his death.

"Is there any news?" he asked.

"Are we being overheard?" replied a U.S. Embassy officer.

"Yes," replied Noel.

"A high-ranking American official is due to arrive tonight," said the embassy officer.

"That will be too late," were Noel's last words before the telephone connection was cut off.

A Sudanese army officer who entered the embassy basement Sunday morning saw large pools of blood, spent cartridge cases and a wrist watch lying in the blood.

President Jaafar el Numairi sent a cable to President Nixon indicating the Sudanese government intends to deal firmly with the guerrillas, who are being held at army headquarters in Khartoum.

"What has happened here has grieved me personally as well as my government and countrymen," he said. "We find the killing of these men outrageous."

Another high-ranking member of the Sudanese government privately told diplomats that "the guerrillas are already dead men."

American consular officer Carol Roehl said the bodies were "almost unrecognizable," badly mutilated with multiple bullet wounds. She said it appeared Noel also had been strangled, but the autopsy results were not immediately available.

An official plane dispatched by Nixon arrived in Khartoum with three of the American diplomats' children and two caskets.

John F. Noel, 21; Lucky Anne Moore, 22, and Catherine Jane Moore, 20, joined their mothers at an embassy home.

Embassy staffers who took turns staying with the two women during the ordeal said both were "bearing up well, better than us."

The presidential jet was to leave Khartoum with the caskets and family members Monday morning.

The Sudanese army said the guerrillas were armed with hand grenades, four machine guns, three long-barreled revolvers and about 100 rounds of ammunition.

The Saudi ambassador said the men had rigged explosives on the ground floor of the embassy building, which were removed by Sudanese ordnance experts Sunday morning.

The surrender was negotiated by Vice President Mohammed el Bakir, who gave the guerrillas a dawn deadline with no concessions and ordered up more than 100 paratroopers to back his ultimatum. At midnight Saturday, the guerrillas used a bullhorn to ask for a telephone call.

At 6 a.m. they capitulated. It was a bright sunny morning.

A U.S. Embassy spokesman said: "No deals were made."

"Gen. Bakir conducted himself admirably," he added.

"The U.S. government is very impressed with the Sudanese government's handling of this tragic incident."

One Night With The Amherst Cops

By BILL BALLOU

(Editor's Note: Bill Ballou spent most of Thursday night and early Friday with 'mherst Police Department observing how this towns 18-21 year olds reacted to the first full night of legal liquor.)

It was peaceful in Amherst Thursday night.

No hordes of drunken teenagers running wild in the streets, breaking windows and disturbing the quiet week night activities of the townspeople.

It was, to Patrolman Dave Jankowski of the Amherst Police Department, a little surprising. He didn't expect anything extraordinary, like a riot, but he didn't expect the tranquility that was Amherst Center.

Jankowski, who was on shift from 3 to 11 p.m. had expected things to be a little more lively. He tried to keep the cruiser as close as possible to the center of town, where he figured the trouble would be if there was any.

But there was no trouble, just people. And, as it got later, the type of crowd changed.

Early in the evening, it was a Christmas crowd. Lots of laughter, lots of groups stopping to talk.

A little later, people started putting arms around each other in lubricated brotherhood.

Around 10, Eddie at Barselotti's escorted someone out and people were arm-in-arm

'Oh, Jesus,' A Cop Sighed And He Arrested A Drunk

trying to keep each other on their feet.

By 10:30, North Pleasant Street looked like the Bataan death march, with people in varying degrees of stagger and collapse as they headed back toward home.

Jankowski was happy with the way things went. But he figured it wouldn't last. He said, "Wait until 12:30, when they start hitting the roads. Then things'll start to pop." He seemed worried about what might happen.

Shifts changed at 11, and while we were in the station, four obviously sub-21ers came in and asked for directions to the nearest package store. It was 10:55 and the last packie closed at 11. A man in civilian clothes who had been chatting told them of a packie about two miles away. As they left, the man said, "Don't speed."

From 11 on, I was with Sgt. Dick Buckley and Patrolman Jim Doleva.

They immediately made a check of all the bars downtown.

Most of the bars were quiet, though some were a bit raucous. At Quicksilver, Buckley and Doleva encountered some good-natured ribbing about paying the cover charge and showing an I.D. Doleva carded a sixteenish-looking girl, but she was legal.

At The Pub, a happy above-21er got hold of Buckley's ear and insisted on buying him a drink. Buckley refused, but the guy kept after him. Buckley kept refusing, and finally left.

From downtown, Buckley and Doleva headed out toward Mike's. It was wall-to-wall humanity as usual. 12:30 came and went with no hint of trouble, but at 12:45 the radio cackled out a message for Buckley to get back to the station. He might be needed for a Breathalyzer test.

Back to the station was a UMass cruiser parked out front and Dick Howland, UMass attorney for students, was standing on the sidewalk. It figured to be a UMass student inside.

It was a 19-year-old suspected of hitting some parked cars in F Lot. He looked younger than 19, and appeared to be nervous and not well-coordinated.

Sgt. Buckley led him into a room in the back of the station for the Breathlyzer. He had been informed of his rights, but Buckley went through them again and explained the Breathalyzer test.

He could refuse it, and automatically lose his license for 90 days. Or he could take the test and take his chances with the reading.

Buckley explained how it works and what the machine does. It measures blood alcohol, and registers the percentage on a calibrated card .00-.05 and you're clear of any driving under the influence charges; .05-.10 and any charges must be proven by means other than the Breathalyzer; .10 and up- you've been driving under the influence.

The student opted to take the test. As Buckley set it up, he filled out forms and made small talk. The student tired hard to act calm when talking to Buckley, but most of the time he swiveled nervously in his chair and shook his head in disbelief, saying silently, "No, No."

It took about half an hour to set up the test and, when it came time for the student to blow into the machine, he couldn't get the wind up.

"Come on, you're not blowing," Buckley told him. "Let's go, a little harder, a little more, that's it. Okay."

It took 90 seconds for the machine to analyze the breath sample and register the reading, a time which Buckley told the student would be "the longest 90 seconds in your life". During the 90 seconds, the machine made a clicking noise. When it stopped, the reading was ready. It stopped.

Buckley looked at the card, then the student, then said, "Well, son, you're a winner. It's a .13."

He was under the influence.

As Buckley, the student, and the UMass cop who had arrested him led him out of the room, Doleva shook his head and said, "If you can get the drunken driver off the road before he does any damage, you're alright. Most of them could probably make it home with no trouble, but just one..."

Within five minutes, two more UMass students, both under 21, were brought in for drunken driving. One refused the Breathalyzer and was locked up. The other took it, and registered .08. He had a chance.

Cronin Under Fire From Faculty, Students

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

A small but hostile audience of student and faculty debated statewide education reorganization with Secretary of Education Joseph M. Cronin in the Campus Center Friday.

Cronin at UMass on one leg of a statewide tour to explain his reorganization plan, came under heavy fire, but from only 50 UMass students and faculty.

The turnout for the once postponed meeting was "surprisingly light" according to Vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs Robert Gluckstern. He theorized that the scheduling of the meeting; at 2:00 p.m., was the cause for the light attendance.

Questions concentrated on Cronin's proposal that five regional boards be created to supervise education in the state from elementary to post-secondary levels.

That portion of the plan, Cronin said in an interview after the meeting, has been criticized on many college and university campuses in the state. However, he refused to say whether that part, or any section of the proposed play will be changed when it is presented to the legislature at the end of the month.

In addition to attacks on the creation of the five geographic regional boards, which one faculty member said would, "dismantle the university system," students and faculty took issue with Cronin's claims that reorganization would provide long term educational planning, decentralized decision making and unification of 41 "competing and fragmented" educational agencies and boards.

Faculty also claimed that reorganization would permit lay interference into the running of the university, threaten UMass' fiscal autonomy and centralize power in the Governor's office.

Cronin, cool and unruffled throughout the meeting, said the regional lay boards would not interfere with the "day to day" running of the University; contended that while reorganization would permit some transfer of funds between campuses fiscal atonomy would be left essentially intact and said the statewide system would not "dismantle" the university but provide for better planning, coordinating and use of funds.

In essence, Cronin's plan would create five regional boards to coordinate all education in their geographic regions (UMass is in Region One) and two statewide boards, one for elementary and secondary education and one for post secondary to set policy and minimum standards.

Under the present structure there are separate boards of trustees for UMass, the state and community colleges, Southern Massachusetts University and Lowell Technological Institute.

Cronin also refused to accept one faculty member's argument that the change he was seeking could be achieved by making the present Board of Higher Education more powerful, instead of reorganizing the whole system.

Student Affairs Council:

Function Is Undefined

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

The draft of a proposed council to oversee the work of Student Affairs has been scrapped in a compromise between Vice- Chancellor of Student Affairs Robert Gage and the plan's author, Jim O'Donoghue.

In separate interviews Gage and O'Donoghue acknowledged that while a council will be formed it's specific duties and powers remain to be defined.

The council, reformed after discussions between Gage and O'Donoghue, will meet within two weeks O'Donoghue said.

At that meeting he and Gage will present their cases to the council which will decide what its function will be.

However, there is no guarantee that the council's decision will be accepted by both men. While O'Donoghue says he will abide by any decision, Gage said last week that he will not agree to a council which would take over Student Affairs, but leave him with the responsibility for it's actions.

In an interview last week O'Donoghue said he will press for a council with power over Student Affairs policy. This would probably include budget review and some power over staff hiring and firing.

Gage however, said he would not accept a council with such power. He favors a council with advisory power.

Student Affairs has control over almost all departments on campus which effect students life. These include the resident halls, the infirmary, counseling, and financial aid.

The council, as now constituted, includes representatives from the residential areas, one representative from the Greeks and Commuters, representatives from counseling, health services, financial aid and admissions, public safety and one from the yet to be created Student Affairs Advisory Board.

All of the above will be students. There will also be two faculty members, one grad student and one student appointed by the SGA president.

The council representatives are now being chosen.

O'Donoghue said that he and Gage agreed that students should have a "large amount of input" into the yearly evaluations of Student Affairs personnel. Gage will decide what standards employees will be evaluated under, O'Donoghue said.

The effectiveness of a council with only advisory power would depend upon the vice-chancellor's "good faith" O'Donoghue said. There would be nothing to make Gage "deal with the council" he added.

O'Donoghue admitted that the council would add "one layer of bureaucracy on another" but said the present bureaucracy is centralized in the vice-chancellor's office, while the council would spread the power out among a large committee with different interests.

No matter what kind of council is formed, both Gage and O'Donoghue have agreed it will have to deal with whether or not it is representative of the campus.

While Gage agrees that students "need to take part in the decision making process" he says only in few areas can students be given total decision making power because they are not "accountable."

University facilities have to be held "in trust" for later generations of students Gage said. What might be wanted one year might not be the next he added.

Gage gave as an example the 1970 student strike when, he said, students wanted the career planning office closed because they felt the university should not be a recruiting agency for employers. Now Gage said, it is under heavy demand.

The push for a council did not necessarily mean Student Affairs has failed, Gage said, rather, he saw it as an expression of community control, that "students ought to control everything that has an impact upon them." Gage said it was "simplistic to think that it will work that easily."

Whether or not a "livable compromise" can be developed depends on the "real agenda of the SGA" Gage said; whether it wants input or an issue. If the SGA wants an input a compromise could be worked out he said.

Gage Considers Parking Fee Change

Parking fees will increase if a Tranportation and Parking Council recommendation meets with approval by the administration. The proposal before Vice Chancellor Gage would attempt to eliminate the priority system in favor of a first come-first serve basis.

But this is not a flat rate increase, according to Prof. Paul Shuldiner, chairman of the council. He said "The council has recommended a graduated increase based upon centrality of the lot."

Although Shuldiner would not disclose the amount of increase to affect the choice lots, he did state the council's consideration for the "economy-minded student".

"Very likely, a large number of lots, the peripheral lots, for example: 'V' lot for commuter parking, will not go up. The council has taken the position that certain areas should be set aside for the value-oriented student who couldn't afford the higher fees.

"But students would be the least affected. They constitute the smallest user of central lots in comparison to faculty and university employees," he added.

Along with the increased rates will come increased revenue to the Parking Office. "The monies," said the chairman, "will go toward improving those aspects of transit service that relate most to parking. Also, they can be applied to more effective enforcement of parking regulations and increased security for nighttime lots."

Gerald T. O'Neil, head of the parking office, gave a more specific application of the revenue. He suggested that after the overhead costs of the Parking Office have been met, i.e. clerks,, equipment, telephones, guard booths and the clerk in the Northampton District Court, the remainder could go toward maintenance, lot construction, and elimination of the "quick- sand in lot No. 6". For example: The last fee increase, in September, from $1 to $5, helped to build parking lot No. 14.

The date for the raise in fees is not definite, but Chairman Shuldiner expressed hopes that the proposal would be approved by the vice-chancellor and the Board of Trustees before the end of the semester.

3 Students Charged With Drunk Driving

By BILL DENSMORE

Four arraignments on drunk driving charges including three involving UMass students, were entered at Hampshire County District Court in Northampton Friday morning.

UMass police characterized the weekend as quiet.

And Paul M. Donnelly, 19, of UMass and Hingham suffered two broken legs, broken when he was struck by a car driven by Jay B. Stolberg, 19, of Auburn, also a UMass student, on Stockbridge Road, early Thursday morning.

Donnelly was listed in "satisfactory" condition Friday morning at Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton with fractures of the left femur and right fibula.

The University Infirmary listed Bruce K. Canney, 19, of Neeham, as conscious and in good condition Friday morning after he fell down a set of stairs at Hampshire College.

Stolberg was arraigned with John J. Meighan, 19, of Sag Harbor, N.Y., and Robert E. Beyer, 19, of 10 Vadnais St., Easthampton, and on charges of drunken driving. Beyer, also a UMass student, was charged with operating so as to endanger after the car he was driving left the road and rammed three parked cars in F lot on campus.

Wendall M. Wheeler, 19, of Chestnut Plain, Whately, was charged by state police at Northampton with drunkenness, operating under the influence and operating so as to endanger after his vehicle ran off Elm Street in Hatfield about 10:45 Thursday night.

UMass police characterized the first full night of the new drinking law as "very busy". Sources indicate that a significant amount of malicious destruction occurred but few arrests were made as a result.

Student Attorney Richard M. Howland was on hand outside the Amherst Police Headquarters to aid students as they were brought in on various charges Thursday night. He remained at the station until after 2 a.m.

Bars in the area were filled to capacity, but most package stores reported only a slight increase in beer sales. One owner thought most students "must be drinking in a bar room," adding that it was "too early to tell" if business would increase significantly.

Jerry Jolly, manager of the English Pub, the largest Amherst drinking spot, said that he handled "a lot more 18-21- year-olds than usual Thursday night, though he said it went "very well."

Jolly upped his normal cover charge from 25¢ to $1 and still drew a capacity crowd of over 200.

An 84-year-old former University employe who was having "mostly mixed drinks" sat at the jammed Quicksilver pub and remembered when "a night out meant square dancing to a country band."

On campus, a brief brawl erupted at the Bluewall when a member of "Featherbed", a Springfield rock band, jumped off stage and began fighting. The floor of the Bluewall was littered with scrapped plastic cups, pop corn and straws.

One girl said "I feel like I'm at a playground" because of the many younger people."

Eleven stories above at the more stylish "Top of the Campus", over 100 patrons were served quietly and without incident. The bartender on duty reported that 1,200 gallons of beer were consumed all day Thursday— 1,000 more than usual.

The dining room section of the Top of the Campus was open to card holders as local, live folk talent performed on a makeshift stage. The management of the TOC plans to have "cabaret" theatre in the dining room, and open it several nights a week in response to the more than 2,000 new TOC members.

Saturn Rings May Be Solid

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — The mysterious rings that circle the planet Saturn appear to be composed of large solid chunks, perhaps rocky material, rather than ice crystals or dust, two radar astronomers report. One of the astronomers said this means the rings could endanger spacecraft traveling through or near them.

The new theory of the rings' makeup is based on the first successful radar probing of Saturn, some 700 million miles away, said Dr. Richard M. Goldstein and George A. Morris, Jr., of California Institute of Technology.

"From our radar results, the rings cannot be made up of tiny ice crystals, dust or gas," they said in a statement released Sunday. They said radar beams reflected back from the rings "indicate rough, jagged surfaces, with solid material one meter 3.3 feet in diameter or larger. Possibly much larger."

The large chunks, Goldstein add, "must be considered an extreme hazard to any spacecraft sent into or near the rings."

The scientists, who are affiliated with Caltech's Jet Propulsion Laboratory, used a National Aeronautics and Space Administration radar antenna at Goldstone Station on the Mojave Desert in California. NASA and JPL plan to send a Mariner spacecraft past Jupiter and Saturn in 1977.

The scientists aimed the 400-kilowatt radar beams at the huge planet and its rings a dozen times during last December and January.

Many space scientists have speculated the three rings encircling the planet from 57,000 to 85,000 miles out are made up of small ice crystals, dust particles or gas.

Lord Jeff May Close

An Amherst tradition may die. The Lord Jeffery Inn may close, according to Kurt Hertzfeld, treasurer of Amherst College. The Amherst Record stated that the Inn has been losing $250,000 for the past three years.

Improvements, such as renovations; new manager Harold Durgin; and a change from French to Yankee food, have improved conditions. Mr. Durgin thinks the Inn will probably break even this year.

The Inn was built by Amherst College and named after the commander-in-chief of the royal armies in America. Architect Cox patterned its design after an English hostelry. Its doors opened in 1926.

106 More POWs Freed

By FRANK N. HAWKINS, Jr.
Associated Press Writer

CLARK AIR BASE, Philippines (AP) — American planes sped off to Hanoi again Monday to pick up 34 more prisoners of war being freed by the Viet Cong. At Clark, 106 American POWs and two mysterious Thais released by North Vietnam a day earlier enjoyed their first day of freedom in as long as seven years.

A C130 Hercules transport carrying a 20-man advance party lifted off for Hanoi's Gia Lam Airport soon after dawn to clear the way for a C141 Star-Lifter flying hospital. The C141 was due in Hanoi at about 1 p.m.--midnight Sunday EST--to pick up 30 Americans, two German medical workers and two Filipino employes of the Voice of America.

At the 270-bed base hospital, the men released Sunday by North Vietnam celebrated their first day of freedom with phone calls home, being measured for new uniforms and consuming large amounts of American food. Some attended a special prayer service.

The release of this group of POWs originally had been expected last Tuesday, but was set back nearly a week due to a squabble over implementation of terms of the cease-fire agreement.

The Americans, dressed in gray shirts and jackets and dark trousers provided by their captors, smartly saluted the American flag and waiting U.S. officials as they stepped off the three C141 flying hospital jets that brought them here to Operation Homecoming headquarters.

Their joy at being free after as long as seven years in captivity dominated their release. An information officer said many were "grinning from ear to ear" after getting on the plane at Hanoi's Gia Lam Airport.

"My face is going to bust," he quoted one as saying. "I haven't smiled so much in a long time."

Most of the men had lost weight and some had missing teeth. But they appeared vigorous, in good spirits and showed healthy appetites. There were no litter cases among them.

Among their first stops on the way home was the base hospital's cafeteria. There they wolfed down 60 dozen eggs, 240 tenderloin steaks, corn on the cob, fried chicken, Cornish game hen and ice cream sundaes with nuts, bananas and cherries.

Gov't. Proposes Indian Settlement

By F. RICHARD CICCONE
Associated Press Writer

WOUNDED KNEE, S.D. (AP) — The Justice Department announced Sunday night it has agreed to allow Indians holding Wounded Knee to leave the village without threat of mass arrests, beginning Monday.

The peace proposal stipulates that the Indians surrender their weapons, and that all males identify themselves to federal agents as they leave the village.

The federal authorities will remove the 150 lawmen surrounding Wounded Knee once all nonresidents of the village have departed, said Ralph Erickson, a special assistant to the U.S. attorney general and the senior federal official at the Pine Ridge Reservation.

The proposal meets one of the Indian demands that no mass arrests be made without grand jury indictments. But the Indians also had proposed Saturday night that the federal marshals and FBI agents withdraw prior to the Indian evacuation.

The proposal was immediately submitted to the Indians in Wounded Knee, 17 miles from Pine Ridge where the statement was announced.

At the same time, Indians in Wounded Knee had come up with a peace plan of their own, including a provision that they not abandon the village.

The plan called for AIM members to stay in Wounded Knee. The Indians said they would not negotiate leaving but would negotiate for supplies. They asked that any arraignments on criminal charges be held in Wounded Knee.

Erickson said the Justice Department's proposal was reached between federal authorities and attorneys who entered the dispute at the request of AIM, some of whose leaders spearheaded the takeover.

"No arrests will be made" if everything is peaceful, Erickson said. "No charges will be placed against anyone, pending grand jury action."

The takeover by a group of 200 Indians occurred Tuesday night. Eleven persons were held hostage until noon Thursday, and there was a sporadic but persistent exchange of gunfire from Wednesday until Saturday. There were no reports of injuries.

Erickson's announcement came only a few hours after preliminary peace talks in a teepee erected between the village and federal agents ringing the village dissolved with little success.

Indian leaders Russell Means and Dennis Banks refused to attend the meeting after they learned that Erickson would not be present.

Amont the peace proposals of the 200 Indians, who took over the village Tuesday, was that federal lawmen withdraw.

But the president of the Oglala Sioux, most of whose 13,000 members live on the Pine Ridge Reservation, said he had been told by Justice Department officials that such a withdrawal was impossible. The leader, Richard Wilson, has threatened to lead a force of his supporters to oust the Wounded Knee Indians, whom he says are intruders.

The proposals were drawn up by the Indians, local clergymen and the hostages the Indians held from Tuesday to Thursday.

The plan called for the mutual withdrawal of lawmen and Indians and the restitution by the Indians of damages suffered by the Trading Post in Wounded Knee when the takeover began. In addition, the Indians had said they want no mass arrests and are willing to face charges only if they result from federal grand jury indictments. The Indians also had said that only their leaders should face criminal charges and that those charges should not include kidnaping.

Erickson said early Sunday he had no comment on the proposals.

U.S. Renews Viet Withdrawal

By FRED S. HOFFMAN
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — With the liberation of U.S. war prisoners on track again, the United States Sunday resumed the withdrawal of American troops from South Vietnam and moved a naval minesweeping force back into position off Haiphong.

Both the troop pullout and the clearing of mines from North Vietnam's chief port were suspended last Wednesday after the Communist side delayed the freeing of another batch of American prisoners.

For the North Vietnamese, perhaps the most visible sign of U.S. displeasure was the abrupt halt in the clearing of explosives from the Haiphong ship channel after it had barely begun.

On orders from Washington, the mine-clearing force pulled up anchor last Wednesday and sailed out into the Gulf of Tonkin.

It was led by the helicopter carrier New Orleans, serving as flagship.

Several hours after 106 American POWs were freed in Hanoi, Pentagon officials reported that 15 U.S. naval vessels had returned to an anchorage off Haiphong.

The Pentagon said that "aerial mine clearance in Haiphong waters will resume after four radar sets are recalibrated and after necessary consultation with the Democratic Republic of Vietnam."

This suggested that the actual mine-clearing by helicopter-towed equipment might not begin again until 30 more Americans--held for years by the Viet Cong in South Vietnam--are released Monday in Hanoi, as agreed.

A team of U.S. naval experts, who flew back to the task force from Haiphong last Wednesday, is expected to return there for the consultation.s

A team of U.S. naval experts, who flew back to the task force from Haiphong last Wednesday, is expected to return there for the consultations.

The four radar beacons referred to by Pentagon officials are needed for precise navigation by helicopters during their mine-clearing operations.

The clearing of mines from the Haiphong ship channel is the beginning of an operation which may take months. The Vietnam cease-fire agreement commits the United States to remove all mines planted in seven North Vietnamese ports and other waterways starting last May when President Nixon ordered a step-up in the war against North Vietnam.

In announcing in Saigon that the U.S. troop withdrawal had resumed, American military officials reported the level was down to 10,787 men. This is fewer than half of the 23,500 American troops who were in South Vietnam when the cease-fire agreement was signed on Jan. 27. The repatriation of U.S. war prisoners is about at the halfway mark.

Meany Accuses Nixon Of Trying To Manage News

WASHINGTON (AP) — AFL-CIO President George Meany accused the Nixon administration Sunday of trying to manage the news by giving only its own interpretation of the Cost of Living Council advisory board's poposed economic policies.

Meany said administration officials interpreted the advisory group's report for newsmen but left out the council's recommendation that "no single standard should apply" to wage increases under President Nixon's Phase 3 economic controls.

Meany, a member of the advisory board, said on the NBC broadcast "Meet the Press" that none of the council members was present at the briefing.

"This is another case of trying to manage the news," Meany said.

He said administration officials had led him to believe that last year's 5.5 per cent wage hike guideline would be relaxed under Phase 3, but now he's not sure.

Terrorists' Trial Poses Dilemna

By DENNIS NEELD
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — If Black September runs true to form, the guerrilla killers of three foreign diplomats in Khartoum have a better than even chance of escaping punishment.

In a statement published in Beirut, the Black September organization said their eight-man Khartoum squad surrendered to Sudanese authorities "because of the high esteem we hold" for President Jaafar el Numairi of Sudan.

"We leave them in trust in his hands," the statement said. "We are confident they will be treated as true revolutionary fighters."

While expecting that the killers of U.S. Ambassador Cleo A. Noel, Jr., U.S. Charge d'Affaires G. Curtis Moore and Belgian diplomat Guy Eid might go on trial in Sudan, Palestinian sources believe the courts will be lenient.

Numairi has condemned the slayings as a "vile deed", but the guerrillas' surrender poses an ugly dilemma for him.

Common Market Moves To Ease Monetary Crisis

By CARL HARTMAN
Associated Press Writer

BRUSSELS (AP)—Common Market finance ministers decided Sunday night to close their money exchanges all week and call a meeting of major trading nations in Paris to plan a solution of the monetary crisis.

Closing foreign exchanges took the pressure off European central banks that were forced to support the dollar last week by buying up billions at the newly devalued rate.

The moves also gave Common Market nations additional time to solve the crisis without formally floating their currencies— cutting them loose from the official exchange rates in effect since President Nixon devalued the dollar Feb. 12 by 10 per cent.

A communique from the minister's Sunday emergency session made no mention of floating the currencies.

French Finance Minister Valery Giscard D'Estaing will preside over the Paris meeting. He told newsmen after Sunday's closed-door session, "We are eager to defend the present set of parities . . . we do not want to let the European currencies float upward as this would affect our competitiveness."

The communique said the nine Common Market countries scheduled another meeting for next Thursday to adopt a common stand for talks Friday in Paris with finance ministers of the world's other major trading nations. The nine plan to meet again in Brussels next Sunday.

Britain: Gas Rationed And Hospitals On Strike

By PETER EBERT
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP)—Half a million British families were told Sunday to stop using gas as supplies fell to a "critical" level because of strikes by gas workers.

"Pressures are being reduced to the absolute minimum compatible with safety," reported a spokesman for the state-owned industry in the industrial Midlands. He said housewives must exercise "the most stringent economy" and stagger their dinners.

At the same time, another series of strikes, by nonmedical hospital staff, was biting hard. Twelve hospitals in the London area were under "red alert," meaning they can admit emergency cases only and doctors warned of serious consequences to patients.

The Gas Board spokesman said families "must confine heating to one room and then at the lowest comfort level. Cooking must be restricted to simple dishes and hot water severely rationed."

For 50,000 Midlands families there were no hot meals at all. Their gas supplies already have been cut off.

It was the worst day yet in a three-week campaign of strikes and go-slows by 47,000 gasmen that has reduced gas pressures in four million homes and cut off about 4,000 industrial users entirely.

The gasmen, like the hospital workers and the train drivers, civil servants, auto workers and teachers who struck last week, are seeking to breach the government's ceiling, limiting all wage raises to one pound—about $2.50—a week, plus 4 per cent of basic weekly pay.

Revenue-Sharing Measure: "No Strings Attached"

By FRANK CORMIER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Nixon Sunday urged enactment of a $2.3 billion Better Communities Act to replace urban programs that he said had failed.

In a radio speech previewing a special message to Congress on community development, Nixon said of his proposed special revenue-sharing measure:

"This aid will have no strings attached as long as it is used for community development. Your local leaders can go on spending it the way Washington was spending it if they like. But they would also be free to work out better plans without having to get Washington's approval."

The President also recommended that state and local governments "be given the right to use a designated portion of the highway trust fund for capital improvements in urban public transportation, including improvements in bus and rapid rail system."

Tapping highway funds for such purposes failed to win congressional approval last year but Nixon said doing so "should be one of the top items on our national agenda."

Other presidential recommendations:

—Creation of a new Department of Community Development to "pull together programs which are now scattered among different departments or agencies."

This proposal has been pending for two years.

Allotment of $110 million "to help state and local governments build up their administrative skills and planning expertise."

—Development of new low-income housing policies.

"In the field of housing," he said "we must stop programs that have been turning the federal government into a nationwide slumlord. One of my highest domestic priorities this year will be the development of new policies that eliminate waste and target aid to genuinely needy families."

Nixon said the new federal budget would eliminate seven urban development programs he described as outmoded and suspend four housing programs he labeled ineffective.

He said:

"We are not pulling the rug out from under anyone who has already been promised assistance. Under commitments already made, we will subsidize an estimated 300,000 housing starts this year and will provide housing assistance to more than two million low-and moderate-income families.

North Vietnamese Rebuild Country

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP)—North Vietnam reported Sunday it is making a speedy postwar recovery from the devastation of American bombing and is rebuilding bridges, shipyards and factories during the cease-fire.

The biggest accomplishment to date, a Radio Hanoi broadcast reported, has been reactivation of the mile-long Paul Doumer bridge, the most important in North Vietnam. Supplies from China destined for Hanoi move across the bridge. U.S. Air Force bombers knocked it out in raids last May 10-11 and again last Sept. 10. Radio Hanoi said the bridge was rebuilt "after 41 days and nights of intensive repair work."

Also reported reopened was the 7,513-foot Long Vien bridge—North Vietnam's longest-which spans the Red River and carries a railroad, a motor road and tracks for pedestrians.

North Vietnam's official Communist party newspaper Nhan Dan reported that many docks, jetties and berths have been restored at the Bach Dang shipbuilding yard in Haiphong, "in preparation for new ships to sail out."

North Vietnam said many plants are producing while rebuilding. In South Vietnam, the shooting continued.

The Saigon command reported that Communist troops shot down a South Vietnamese helicopter on a resupply mission northeast of Tay Ninh, a city about 60 miles from Saigon, killing all six government troops aboard.

Lt. Col. Le Trung Hien, spokesman for the Saigon command, said the helicopter was hit with a Soviet-built, hand-fired Strela missile. Hien said several other helicopters have been shot down since the cease-fire went into effect Jan. 28, but he did not have a specific number.

The Saigon command claimed 128 more violations of the cease-fire during the 24-hour period ended at 6 a.m. Sunday. It reported a total of 5,668 alleged violations in the 36 days the cease-fire has been in effect. Despite this high number, U.S. officials say the intensity of the fighting has generally decreased in the past two weeks, with no major battles.

The Viet Cong's Giai Phong agency charged the Saigon government with thousands of cease-fire violations and accused it of attempting to delay the release of Vietnamese civilian and military personnel while it "continued to liquidate them."

30 Prelates Elevated To College Of Cardinals

By HILMI TOROS
Associated Press Writer

VATICAN CITY (AP)—Pope Paul VI elevates 30 prelates from 17 countries to the College of Cardinals on Monday, injecting younger men and more nations into the body which elects Popes.

The prelates, including three Americans, will be elevated to the purple in two ceremonies.

"The consistory," Pope Paul told tens of thousands in St. Peter's Square on Sunday, "means joy and hope because it manifests the continuing vitality of the Church."

The consistory, the fourth in Pope Paul's 10-year reign, increases the membership of the College of Cardinals, the senate of the Roman Catholic Church, to 144, the largest number in history.

It also makes the college younger and more international. The average age of the new princes of the church is 60, compared to 68 at Pope Paul's last consistory, in April 1969.

And for the first time, Pakistan, Kenya, the Pacific Islands, Puerto Rico and the Congo will have cardinals.

The two consistories will take place Monday, the first a secret one in the Consistory Hall of the Apostolic Palace and then a public one in the modern Audience Hall. In the past they were held on different days with more pomp and pageantry.

In past consistories, the Pope had eliminated sword bearers and gentlemen in waiting, bread-rimmed galero hats

In past consistories, the Pope had eliminated sword bearers and gentlemen in waiting, broad-brimmed galero hats, red shoes, silver buckles and the ermine-lined great cape.

This time he even dropped the traditional consent of the college in the secret consistory. Instead of asking: "Quid vobis videtur?"—"How does it seem to you"—he will just read off the list of 30 names and the chance to say "placet"—"It pleases."

Gaullists Defeated In First Round Of French Elections

By HARVEY HUDSON
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP) — French voters apparently brought an end Sunday to the era of absolute Gaullist rule over parliament in the first national election since the death of Gen. Charles de Gaulle.

But a Communist-Socialist drive to capture a majority in the new National Assembly was falling short of its mark.

Gaullist forces fared badly in the percentage of total votes and in the number of deputies elected in the first round of voting for 490 places in the assembly.

It was likely that centrists, who have been in opposition, would have to be called into the goverment coalition-meaning a softening of some Gaullist doctrines.

Incomplete results covering 26 million of the 30 million registered voters gave the political groups in the government coalition 38.1 per cent of the total vote, down from the 44 per cent they got in the first round of the 1968 legislative elections.

Under the French system, candidates getting a first round absolute majority were declared elected. Where no candidate got a majority, a second vote will be held next Sunday with the seat going to the top man.

The incomplete returns covering 469 of the 490 districts showed the government parties had captured only 46 seats, compared to 144 in the first round in 1968.

The Communists received 20.8 per cent of the total vote and the Socialists 19.7 per cent. Out of the first 469 districts reported, the Communists had elected eight deputies on the first round and the socialists one.

Premier Pierre Messmer was an exception among the Gaullists in increasing by 2,000 his vote total over 1968 in his home district in eastern France. And Finance Defense Minister Michel Debre and Finance Minister Valery Giscard D'Estaing were re-elected to the Assembly, but their vote totals dropped from 1968.

Roberta Flack And Her Song Take Top Grammy Awards

By MARY CAMPBELL
AP Music Writer

NEW YORK (AP)—Former Washington, D. C. schoolteacher Roberta Flack and "The First Time Ever I Saw Your Face" were the big winners Saturday night at the 15th annual presentation of Grammy Awards, the recording industry's equivalent of the Oscars.

"The First Time Ever I Saw Your Face" by Miss Flack won the big prize, record of the year, and the song won the best song of the year award for its writer, Ewan McCol. Miss Flack won again, in the best pop vocal performance by a duo or group category, with Donny Hathaway for "Where Is The Love?"

Hathaway accepted the record of the year Grammy for Miss Flack during the hour and a half television show from Nashville during which 11 of the 47 Grammys were presented and some of the nominated songs were performed.

"The Concert for Bangla Desh," an album recorded live at Madison Square Garden in August 1971, was named album of the year. Heard on it are George Harrison and friends including Ravi Shankar, Bob Dylan, Leon Russell, Ringo Starr, Billy Preston, Eric Clapton, Klaus Voormann and Badfinger. The album was released during the period from Oct. 16, 1971 through Oct. 15, 1972 to be eligible for this year's Grammys.

Awards are made on the basis of voting by members of the National Academy of Recording Arts and The object is to choose the best recordings of the previous year, not necessarily those which have sold the most copies. Voting is traditionally more conservative—that is ballad and easy-listening oriented—than the general run of hit records.

Helen Reddy won in the category of best female pop vocal performance for the first women's lib song to become popular, "I Am Woman." She wrote it. Harry Nilsson also won with a song he wrote, "Without You," as best male vocal performance.

America, a three-man group who met in England because their American servicemen fathers were stationed there, were named best new artists of the past year. Their first record out, "A Horse with No Name," was a giant hit last spring.

Mail Favors Nixon's Amnesty Stand

By TOM SEPPY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Mail has been running four to one in favor of President Nixon's stand against giving amnesty to those who fled the country rather than serve in Vietnam, the White House said Sunday.

Several thousands of the letters and telegrams have been received at the White House since the Jan. 31 pronouncement by Nixon that "amnesty means forgiveness. We cannot provide forgiveness for them."

Even more communications are expected because of the President's news conference Friday in which he said "I do not intend to change my position."

The White House released a position paper in which it said there have been 34 separate incidents of amnesty in U.S. history, dating back to George Washington's 1795 pardon of those participants in the Whiskey Rebellion who agreed to obey the law.

Walpole Inmates End Work Strike

WALPOLE, Mass. (AP)—Inmates at the state prison here say they are ending a work strike, although officials say the focus of their disruptions—Superintendent Raymond E. Porelle—is still on the job.

Reports earlier indicated that Porelle had resigned, but Correction Commissioner John O. Boone said Saturday that he is only taking a short leave of absence for rest.

The last 10 days at the prison have been marked by inmate work stoppages, littering of the prison and the presentation of a number of demands.

Saturday, both inmates and guards held press conferences. The inmates announced an end to their work strike "in response to the departure of Superintendent Raymond Porelle and assurances that there will be immediate, systematic review and hearings of all the cases of men who have been in 24-hour lockup in Blocks 9 and 10 since Dec. 29, 1972."

The inmates said they would "enter into good-faith negotiations" with Boone or his representative about changes in the prison.

Allende Remains In Power After Chilean Elections

By WILLIAM F. NICHOLSON
Associated Press Writer

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — A massive turnout of Chilean voters Sunday left the opposition in control of Congress but without enough clout to threaten Marxist President Salvador Allende with impeachment.

Allende said in a broadcast speech Sunday night his Popular Unity coalition was doing extremely well at the polls after two years in office. Chilean voter support for the government in power traditionally erodes.

The opposition had hoped for a two-thirds majority in the Senate—the necessary margin for impeachment--as a lever to force Allende's government toward more moderate economic policies.

With 35 per cent of the vote counted, opposition candidates had a percentage lead of 53.62 to 44.49 in the lower House of Deputies and 56.79 to 41.50 in the Senate.

The other percentage points were accounted for by a small party of the far left and by spoiled ballots.

The women's vote, which traditionally goes against leftist candidates, was slow to come in. Allende predicted that, when the counting was finished, government-sponsored candidates would have 40 per cent of the vote.

As Allende spoke, supporters of the Christian Democrats and other opposition parties paraded in the streets, claiming victory.

All 150 seats in the lower House and half the 50 places in the Senate were at stake.

Balloting was carried out peacefully under a brassy late summer sun as the armed forces, in charge of public order on election day, posted armed sentries at polling places. Helmeted police in riot gear patrolled the streets.

The 4.5 million registered voters, half of Chile's population, had a clear ideological choice when they marked their paper ballots.

There was a single list of candidates from the half dozen parties in Allende's coalition Popular Unity government who pledged to continue supporting his two-year-old experiment to lead

Daily Exercise Helped POW In South

By SPENCER DAVIS

WASHINGTON(AP)-Douglas Kent Ramsey who survived seven years in Viet Cong prison campus in South Vietnam and Cambodia, says he pulled through the ordeal only because he had a compulsion to do daily exercise and forced himself to eat.

The 37-year-old foreign service officer from Boulder City, Nev., still pale, shaky and walking with a limp as the result of malaria and beriberi, took leave from Walter Reed Army Hospital last week to talk with newsmen. He was captured near Cu Chi, northeast of Saigon on Jan. 17, 1966, while on a rice-delivery mission for the Agency for International Development.

Some 70 pounds or more under his normal weight of 190 pounds, he was released with the first group of civilians to be sent home this month.

"How did I survive?" he asked. "I developed a compulsory neurosis for physical exercise. And my nausea disappeared after I recovered from malaria and I was able to eat. I forced myself to eat."

Ramsey said the cages in which he was held were large enough for him to stand up and jog in place. He also was able to do push-ups to maintain muscular strength.

Ramsey said the prisoners he saw in seven different camps did not eat as well as their captors. But "we ate man's closest relatives, the monkeys swinging from trees, and man's best friend, his dog, and we enjoyed it," he said. They also ate an old bear once, but the bear far sickened everyone, Ramsey said.

"They attempted to maintain the fiction that we got the same rations that they did," he said, but the prisoners didn't get as much protein or vegetables. There were times when peanuts, a source of protein, were wasted by the Viet Cong while the Americans were getting a fourth to a third of a full day's ration. "People who were supposed to be distributing meat did not do so," Ramsey said.

The foreign service officer was cautious in telling newsmen about coersion used by the Viet Cong to obtain propaganda statements. But he indicated that special medical treatment, including vitamins and antibiotics depended a lot on the willingness of the prisoners to make statements.

He said that he had made several statements later broadcast by Radio Hanoi or the clandestine Liberation Radio. But his remarks sometimes infuriated his captors, who said he was trying to make propaganda and slip out messages.

In one recorded broadcast, he said, he read outlandish cliches in a high tremulo, "and I am pretty sure it could not be used."

International Poetry Beginning Today

An International Poetry Festival begins today and will run through Thursday. This festival is presented under the auspices of the Distinguished Visitors Program. The series consists of readings and lectures by internationally known poets. Participating poets come from various backgrounds with their poetry tying them together.

Tonight at 7:30 in Room 231 of Herter, Robert Marquez and Seamus Heaney will give reading.

Marquez will present a lecture, "Poetry in the Caribbean". He is assistant professor of Hispanic-American literature at Hampshire College. A Puerto Rican born and raised in Spanish Harlem, he has traveled, lived, studied and worked in various parts of Spain, South America and the Caribbean, including Cuba. Marquez received his B.A. from Brandeis University. In 1967, he was a Fulbright Scholar in Peru, where he began his work as a translator of Latin American authors. He holds an M.A. from Harvard, where is is at work on his Ph.D. thesis.

Poetry of Northern Ireland is the topic for the poetry reading by Heaney. He grew up in Northern Ireland was was teaching until recently at Queen's University, Belfast. Two years ago he was a guest professor at the University of California at Berkeley. This past year, he has takena cottage in County Wicklow and is free-lancing, with some teaching at University College in Dublin. One of Heaney's first major awards was the Cheltenham Poetry Prize in 1966. Since then his two books of poetry nave been widely acclaimed: (Death of a Naturalist, Door Into the Dark). A film of his life and poetry in Northern Ireland has been made and was shown here a year ago.

MED SCHOOL ADMISSION PROBLEMS?

Euromed may offer RX via overseas training.

For the session starting Fall, 1973, the European Medical Students Placement Service, Inc. will assist qualified American students in gaining admission to recognized overseas medical schools.

And that's just the beginning.

Since the language barrier constitutes the preponderate difficulty in succeeding at a foreign school, the Euromed program also includes an intensive 8-12 week medical and conversational language course, mandatory for all students. Five hours daily, the course is given in the country where the student will attend medical school.

In addition, the European Meoical Students Placement Service provides students with an 8-12 week intensive cultural orientation course, with American students now studying medicine in that particular country serving as counselors.

Senior or graduate students currently enrolled in an American university are eligible to participate in the Euromed program.

Perhaps most important, the Euromed Program helps the student attain his career goal in the medical profession.

*"I would like to thank you for providing me with the opportunity to fulfill my goal of becoming a doctor . . . I believe that your program holds a great deal of hope for the future . . . in opening doors for many young Americans . . . and in aiding the U.S. in its critical shortage of doctors."

from a letter from a Euromed participant*

We have helped place a number of qualified students from the U.S.A. in recognized medical schools overseas.

Voluntarism

The faculty at Amherst College voted last week to drop the language requirement.

The reasons cited for dropping the language requirement at Amherst College should be taken into consideration, for they are applicable to UMass as well.

"We don't see the existence of the language requirement as being justified at this time," said the Chairman of the Committee on Educational Policy at Amherst College, citing the need for flexibility in a time of curricular innovation and inherent failures of the current requirement.

One viewpoint in discussing the Amherst language requirement was the "principle of voluntarism", articulated by a member of their Language Review Board: "an enterprise entered by free choice is more likely to be successful than one entered by compulsion." A student member of the Amherst College Committee on Educational Policy echoed this viewpoint: "Students feel that learning a language should be up to the individual."

These are only a few of the many arguments in favor of dropping the language requirement, both at Amherst College and here at UMass. The faculty at Amherst dropped the language requirement there; the faculty at UMass should follow suit.

The Zahraies' Case

Siamak Zahraie, an Iranian graduate student at UMass, and his brother Babak, have been asked to leave the country because of their political acitivities.

Babak and Siamak, students at the University of Washington last year, worked on the Foreign Student Council, the International (an FSC newspaper), and were active spokesmen against the government of Iran and U.S. foreign policy.

"Immigration and Naturalization is giving Babak and I trouble because Iran and the United States are putting pressure on; they don't want foreign students to get involved in these activities," said Siamak.

Babak, who was president of the Foreign Student Council and editor of the International, was ordered deported by the Seattle Immigration office on March 14, 1972.

The INS grounds for deportation were that Zahraie was in technical violation of Immigration law when he made a trip to and from Canada without his visa to re-enter the U.S. At that time (Nov. 1971) the INS of Seattle was holding his visa pending a review for renewal.

In February 1972, Zahraie was arrested by Immigration officers who entered and searched his home. He was taken to a hearing, asked about his political beliefs, and threatened by such statements as "we're going to hand you over to the Iranian government to take care of you." Later, INS called for Zahraie's immediate exclusion from the U.S. on three grounds: 1) he was not a bona fide student; 2) he made the Canadian trip without the proper papers; 3) he was a subversive.

A report in the Christian Science Monitor of Jan. 22, 1973 said, "Legally, the INS does not have authority to delve into political opinions; it can only check on alien's immigration status and violations of the law-failure to report a change of address, or working without a permit."

Recently, Siamak was asked to leave after failing to transfer his records to the Boston Immigration prior to his arrival at UMass this year. He reported his address after coming to Amherst.

In a related incident, Bahram Atai, the national secretary of the Committee to Defend Babak Zahraie, received deportation orders. Both Siamak Zahraie and Atai were among the original organizers of the defense committee.

According to a pamphlet distributed by the Committee to Defend Babak Zahraie, "foreign students have no civil liberties and are to be treated in a harsh arbitrary manner. The vast discretionary powers held by INS officials are used to harass, intimidate, and victimize foreign students who are politically outspoken."

William C. Patillo, INS District Director in Portland, Oregon, stated publicly in relation to these cases, "A foreign student can be deported from the U.S. on a technical violation of the Immigration law if he or she is involved in activities which the U.S. government considers aggravating."

The central issue of the Zahraie case is whether foreign students have the right to civil liberties granted to citizens of the U.S.

The extra-legal nature of the grounds for their deportation points out that Siamak and Babak were not asked to leave for technical violations, but for political reasons. The attempted deportation of the Zahraie brothers and Bahram Atai, indicate the absence of civil liberties for foreign students. The actions of INS say that foreign students may come to school in the U.S., but may not engage in activities which U.S. students take part in. It says the first amendment does not apply to foreigners in the U.S.

Babak and Siamak, who are both married to American citizens, have applied for a status of permanent residency. Siamak's application deferred the processing of his deportation, while Babak's application will be ruled on in the near future. Anyone concerned with the Zahraies' case should write to either the Boston or Seattle Immigration offices.

(Editor's note: Babak Zahraie will speak on campus, March 20).

Nightmare In Sudan

Terrorism overcame rationality in Sudan Friday night, when Black September guerrillas assassinated two American diplomats in the Saudi Arabian Embassy. The fates of Ambassador C. Noel Jr., and American charge d'affaires G. Curtis Moore were sealed with two bursts of machine gun fire after being held as hostages for 26 hours. The Black September organization was also responsible for the deaths of eleven Israeli sportsmen at the Olympics last year, the mailing of letter bombs to Israeli officials, and various other terrorist activities over the past two and one half years. Their demands this time included the release of Sirhan B. Sirhan and several gang members being held prisoners in Jordan, Israel and Germany. It has been suggested that Friday night's slaughter may have been linked to the recent downing of a Libyan airliner by Israeli jet fighters.

The United States is virtually helpless in events of this sort, as technically we have no jurisdiction outside of American soil. President Nixon reflected the feelings of the country, for once, when he stated that "this tragic event underscores the need of all nations to take a firm stand against the menace of international terrorism". But herein lies the ironic realization that the nations of the world are at the mercy of a group of international assassins. I stand by the view that a country cannot afford to give in to the demands of terrorists, but that belief does not lessen the feeling of helplessness to protect the lives of our Foreign Service personnel.

Must nations, then, be at the beckon call of terrorists, and representatives of countries be used as pawns in their crazed game? Is there no other recourse besides expressions of national sorrow? And where, for God sake, is the United Nations? It is obvious that the world does not possess the capability of forming a united front to combat acts of terrorism on an international scale. And the U.N. has proved itself, once again, helpless to control acts senseless hostility in emergency situations. I am not under the naive impression that a magic formula is available, but there is obviously something wrong when an effort to formulate some sort of resistance to this menace is not forthcoming.

Instead of talking about the need for a "firm stand", it is way past time for President Nixon and the world leaders to form a joint international effort to arrive at a settlement to the Middle East problem, thereby lessening the chance of future terrorist activities and clearly defining the responsibilities of each country for the acts of its own citizens. Perhaps it would be more conducive to world peace if the United States would stop selling jet fighters and start selling the principles of negotiation. The war in the Middle East is the obvious force behind Friday night's massacre, and until we stop promoting this war the future is likely to hold even more bloodshed. Simply because we have no American troops in the Middle East does not mean that we can wash our hands of any responsibility for the conflict, no more than can the Soviet Union. If our dedication to peace is really all that strong, then let us begin to demonstrate that we desire an end to hostilities by having as little as possible to do with the war effort.

The Black September terrorists must be brought to justice and be held responsible for the brutal murders they have committed. But we must not be so blind as to believe that our logistic and diplomatic support of the Middle East War is not prolonging the possibility of an end to international terrorism, and until we assume our responsibility as a world power, how are we to expect other nations to assume theirs. In this time of grieving for our two slain diplomats, we should arrive at the realization that a change in our policy toward the Middle East is both needed, and welcome.

Be Kind To Janitors Week

By CHRIS WEST

There comes a moment in history when it is time to give credit where credit is due; this is especially so in the case of the unsung heroes of the university–the janitors.

The mere thought of what this school would be like without them is mind staggering. Think about having to clean the lounge after the Saturday night party...all that beautiful, sticky beer all over the furniture, the magnificent mounds of glass that people among you felt the urge to break and for decoration the popcorn and chips that are strewn all around the place.

Consider the possibility of keeping your bathroom as well as the rest of your floor in top condition. Because it is doubtful that you could convince all of the people that they had to stop being sloppy and learn to keep everything clean, it is quite possible that at the beginning of each semester, the floor counselors would have students draw lots to see which day would be theirs to be janitor. With this system, the school could conceivably stay open for an entire month before the Board of Health would have to close it due to unsanitary conditions.

Leaving the dorms aside, reflect on the dilemma of Whitmore, the Campus Center and the Student Union, which would also have to close within a month due to the lack of janitors. Whitmore would be clogged with paper, the CC hotel would be useless with its unmade beds (unless the management could convince guests to make up the beds and clean the rooms before they leave) and the Student Union would be wrecked just from the amount of student traffic it handles every day.

Therefore, in honor of the overworked, underpaid people who are janitors of one sort or another I advocate a Be Kind to Janitors Week, March 4-10.

Be a sport–take a janitor to lunch. After all, if it weren't for the entire janitorial crew this University would stop functioning at the grass roots level.

Letters To The Editor

The Unwanted Are Threatened

To The Editor:

In a 1972 decision on capital punishment, the United States Supreme Court ruled that a state may no longer take the life even of a deliberate, willful murderer, who was tried, convicted and sentenced by full due process of law. But that same court has now ruled that the right of privacy, whether it be founded in the Fourteenth Amendment's concept of personal liberty and restrictions on state action, or in the Ninth Amendment's reservation of rights to the people (the Court does not seem to care which) is broad enough to encompass a woman's decision to "terminate" her pregnancy by killing her unborn child.

This Court has also ruled that a state may not regulate abortion during the first three months and may only regulate abortion, to the extent that the operation is made safer for the mother during the second three months of pregnancy. Or in other words now, thanks to the Roe vs. Wade decision, the law is that though a state may determine if and when its citizens may kill ducks, deer, or fish, the same state does not have "sufficient interest" to make the same kind of decision with respect to unborn human beings.

Throughout history pregnant women who for one crime or another were sentenced to die, were given a stay of execution until after the delivery of the child; it being the contention of these civilized courts that one could not punish the innocent child for the crime of the mother.

How long will we have to wait before such legislation as was proposed in Hawaii in 1970 becomes a federal mandate? I refer to Hawaii's 1421-70, the operative clause of which consisted of this one stark, sentence: "Every physician attending a woman resident of this State at the time she is giving birth in the State shall, if the woman has two or more living children, perform such medical technique or operation as will render the woman sterile."

When the German physicians subordinated their ethics to the plan of Hitler they became as, Dr. Andrew C. Ivy stated at Nuremburg, "servants of the state and healers on the one hand, respected murderers on the other." It was this loss of principle by the medical profession which subsequently prompted the Geneva Declaration of the World Health Organization which states, "I will maintain the utmost respect for human life from the time of conception even under threat I will not use my medical knowledge contrary to the laws of humanity."

In October 1972 American Party presidential candidate former congressman John Schmitz stated: "By the end of last year, 225,000 unborn children had been killed in New York alone, for the single 'crime' of existing. Many good Americans still think of abortion as involving a woman's freedom rather than a baby's life. The usual abortion techniques pull the living baby apart, cut him in pieces or pickle him alive in a salt solution. Each of these procedures means a horrible, agaonizing death. Medical science has proved that these babies feel pain as they die. Very few Americans, knowing these things, would favor legalizing abortion.

"If unborn children are to be eliminated because they are unwanted, then the unwanted old will be next on the list. Once government has allowed the killing of the unwanted to begin, none of us–young or old, Left or Right, rich or poor–is safe any more."

Nobody Wins

To The Editor:

Unless I am mistaken, I believe Bob Estelle could, if he so desired, take a poll among the Vietnam war veterans of this campus and find that they would not be opposed to granting amnesty to draft dodgers as he states on page 12 of Wednesday's Collegian.

Who am I to say such a thing and why do I say this? Like Mr. Estelle, I did, at one time echo the right-wing propaganda of the John Birch Society. No more. I went to Vietnam and witnessed the results of a no-WIN policy. A good many of the people with whom I associate here, Mr. Estelle, are Vietnam veterans. We know.

We know what war does. And it's not WINNING and LOSING. Nobody WINS.

You wanted the good old U.S.A. to WIN it? WIN what? Those oil deposits off the coast of South Vietnam? The Vietnamese people had a choice way back when, did you know that? The only trouble is that Ho Chi Minh would have won, and the Vietnamese people would have won. Unfortunately we wouldn't have WON. No choice. Nobody WINS.

Tell me then, what do POWs, MIAs, and KIAs WIN? What do I WIN? What do you WIN, by telling men, 'No, you can't go home to your brothers and sisters, you wouldn't shoot off the arms and legs of your brothers and sisters overseas?

A. Michael Arcian

Amnesty, Treason

To The Editor:

Bob Estelle, you're really something. I'd like to commend you for your consistence in type of approach to the Amnesty question. First of all, you have again referred to "liberals." Really now, how can you attempt to classify a group of people as if they have always agreed on every controversial issue or matter of public concern. It seems like a childish way of lashing out at something that isn't even there.

I'd like to bring up a more important point, though. If, as you say, the Vietnam war was "just a plan to divide the people of this country," and you further claim that those who fought didn't realize this, isn't it feasible that those who didn't fight actually did realize it. Personally, I think these men realized that we were slaughtering people for no apparent cause and couldn't quite bring themselves to do the same.

I'd like you to recall a letter directed to you last semester by a "hero" who had been in Vietnam. That man made no claim to being a hero and humbled himself in the recollection of a screaming Vietnamese mother carrying her dead child. He asked you to try to put yourself on the battlefield and think of death and destruction and the shattered hopes and dreams of people like you and me. Well, that man related his viewpoint after being in Vietnam. Some men chose not to partake in such horrible atrocities. They REALIZED, man. And you, you sit at your desk and talk of the treason of men who followed a humane conscience and chose not to partake in a war that you lightly call "unethical." I don't know where the hell your values are. I just ask that you reflect back on what that veteran had to say about the reality of war. Step down from your judges bench and look at the destruction that you or any other man who might have gone to Vietnam could have brought upon fellow human beings. After you think a great deal about it, then you tell me about the treason of a conscientious objector.

Recreational 'Visility'

To The Editor:

The other day, while passing through the Hatch, I happened to catch a glimpse of a paper with the title, "Notice." Being the curious, intellectually minded student that I am, I proceeded to read the bulletin.

To my astonishment I came across a couple of words that were entirely new to my vocabulary. As soon as I got back to my room, I looked up the words "visility" and "immediantly" in The American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language and to my surprise the words were not listed.

Well, by now you must be wondering about the context that these precious words were extracted from during my reading. The "Notice" was merely a plea from an individual who wants support for a bill that would reopen the UMass rifle range to undergraduates for the purposes of target practice and the development of skills related to guns.

We all know that good marksmen have keen eyesight. My question is, how can this rifle enthusiast possibly use the phrase "recreational visility", then use the word "visility" again along with the world "immediantly"? Sharp eyes, especially those of a rifleman should definitely pick up this fault.

I propose that all individuals interested in reopening the rifle range be required to take eye examinations and remedial English grammar respectively.

Able Administration

To The Editor:

I would like to address myself to the article which appeared in Thursday's Collegian regarding the Summer Counseling Program. I have been a counselor in the program for the past two summers. I read the report of the Student Senate Academic Affairs Committee, and found it contained many interesting proposals and suggestions. Some of them are at present goals of the program, and others deserve serious consideration and possible implementation.

However, Mr. Apostola's remarks about Ms. Salle Hamilton, the director of the Summer Counseling Program, in that article, were rude, insensitive and indefensible. After working with Ms. Hamilton for two summers, I regard her as an extremely able administrator who is sincerely and genuinely interested in helping new students cope with this, at times nightmarish University. Although we, too, have often had our differences, I have always found her willing to listen and seriously entertain any suggestion for improving the quality of the program. Ms. Hamilton has taken a program which was a shambles when she inherited it, and for all of its shortcomings and financial limitations, turned it into a program which seriously addresses itself to the needs of new students and has taken significant strides toward meeting those needs. Of course, there is always room for improvement, and Ms. Hamilton has always sought student input in the planning and evaluation of the program. Most importantly, perhaps, is Ms. Hamilton's energy and sensitivity toward people as whole, complex individuals, a very rare quality in both students and faculty at this University, and Mr. Apostola might well attempt to adept the same quality in his interactions with people who may not agree entirely with his positions. There is no place in responsible student leadership for smugness and ad hominem attacks against the personal integrity of sincere and committed people. Those who are legitimately concerned with improving student life at this University should get on with the task of addressing ourselves to the solution of problems, and abandon personal vendetta. I think the vituperative remarks of Mr. Apostola about Ms. Hamilton were not constructive, were ill-advised, and most importantly, were clearly inappropriate.

Divorce: Some Questions And Answers

By DOCK HOWLAND

Recently many married students have discussed two aspects of their relationship with me. As there seems to be considerable misunderstanding about the subjects of wills and divorce, the following is an attempt to answer some of the nagging questions.

DIVORCE

In Massachusetts a divorce may be decreed for:

1. Adultery (sexual relations outside of the marriage);
2. Impotency (inability to have sexual relations);
3. Utter desertion for two years;
4. Alcoholism or drug addiction;
5. Non-support of the wife by the husband when able; and
6. Cruel and Abusive treatment. (Ch 208 Sec. 1)

"Cruel and abusive treatment" is the most common ground. Some unique or repeated act, which need not be necessarily physically abusive or injurious which gives rise to mental anguish as evidenced, for instance, by loss of weight, nervousness, hospitalization, psychiatric consultation and the like, is usually sufficient.

In addition to the grounds for the divorce, the spouse filing suit (the "libellant") must have lived in Massachusetts for two years* if the grounds occurred outside the state, but if the cause occurred in Massachusetts and the libellant is a resident of Massachusetts no durational time limit is required. A person may not move to Massachusetts solely for the purpose of obtaining a divorce. It is a necessary element of a divorce proceeding that the parties lived together as husband and wife at some time in the Commonwealth.

Massachusetts still subscribes to the notion of fault in divorce and as a consequence there is really no secure way of proceeding without the assistance of at least a lawyer for the libellant.

The things that the lawyer must attend to besides the court papers, hearing and decree even in a consensual divorce are:

1. Distribution of assets;
2. Support and custody of children (if any);
3. Conveyance of real property and motor vehicles;
4. Alimony, if any; and
5. The technical grounds.

These matters are generally taken care of by agreement before the proceedings are over and are time consuming.

Before papers can be filed the parties must physically live apart for thirty (30) days. Persons contemplating divorce are urged to discuss the matter with appropriate psychological or marriage counsellors, together or separately both before and during the divorce proceedings.

The wife may assume her maiden name at the time the divorce is granted if she petitions to do so. In some courts, however, the judge may refuse to grant alimony if the wife resumes her maiden name. This does not affect support. Ask your lawyer about this.

*About one week ago, the federal court in Boston declared the jurisdictional time limit unconstitutional. Under these circumstances it would appear that the libellant need only be a bona fide resident of Massachusetts in order to file for a divorce.

WILLS AND INTESTACY

The purpose of a will is to determine and control who will inherit your real and personal property after your death. Wills may apply to all property of the decedent except jointly-owned property, life insurance in which there is a beneficiary other than the estate and certain kinds of trust and appointive rights or property in which the decedent is a beneficiary. A Will can also provide for the guardianship of children and the appointment of the Executor-the people who are to carry out the decendent's wishes. The disposition of the body after death may also be covered, but since probate takes time, any such disposition should be taken care of outside any Will even if included in it. The great advantage of a Will is that you can decide who will get what property and name the persons to carry out the instructions.

If you do not leave a Will, then the intestacy laws of the state where you die or where the property is will probably apply.

In Massachusetts, if you do not have a Will, what happens?

If You Leave:	This Will Happen:
a. Husband or wife and child or children*	1/3 to the surviving spouse 2/3 to the child or children
b. Husband or wife, no children* but next of kin (parent(s) brother, sister, nephew, niece, grandparent(s) uncle, aunt, cousin, etc.)	If estate is less than $50,000, all to the surviving spouse. If estate is more than $50,000, the first $50,000, plus 1/2 of everything over that amount will go to the surviving spouse. The remaining 1/2 will go to next-of-kin in the following order: 1. Father and mother equally, or all to the survivor of them. 2. Brothers and sisters. 3. Nieces and Nephews 4. Grandparents 5. Uncles and aunts 6. Cousins
c. Husband or wife, no children, no next-of-kin	All to the surviving spouse
d. No husband or wife, one or more children*	All to child or children*
e. No husband or wife, no children*, but next-of-kin	Next-of-kin take all as in Section b. 1-6 above.
f. No husband or wife, no children*, and no other next-of-kin	All to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts

*Adopted children are treated exactly the same as natural children.

Children of deceased children (grandchildren) divide their parents' share. If the parent and his or her brothers and sisters are deceased, the grandchildren share equally.

Children of deceased nephews and nieces (grandnephews and grandnieces) divide their parents' share. If all nephews and nieces are deceased, their children share equally.

With a Will you direct the distribution except that you may not completely disinherit a spouse by use of a Will.

Jointly-owned Property

Most residential property owned by married people is in a "tenancy by the entirety" and many bank accounts and other property is owned "jointly". The use of the word "joint" (or "entirety") means that during their lives the property is owned by both (or all) parties but that if one dies the property is immediately owned outright by the survivor(s). Therefore, at the instant of death, there is no property that the decedent controls if it is jointly owned.

Life Insurance

Life insurance follows the insurance laws and goes to the beneficiary named in the policy. It is not part of the estate unless the estate is the beneficiary by name or operation of law.

If you want to make a Will or discuss the advisability of a Will, see a lawyer who practices probate law. The cost of preparing a Will is very low.

Registrar's Office Closed Wednesdays

Due to the extremely heavy volume of grade corrections, transcript requests, and course schedule changes, the Undergraduate Registrar's Office (Room 213 Whitmore) will be closed to "walk-in" as well as telephone inquiries and consultation all day on Wednesdays, commencing March 7 through April 11 inclusive. The purpose of this closing is to restore files to working order so that proper service may be rendered the other days of the week. A service table will be in operation outside the office only for distribution and collection of various forms.

Student Special

Why Europe's Trains are special for students.

If ever you've wanted a mind of freedom: go where you like, when you like. If you like Europe's trains are for you. Clear, uncluttered, and rack is power. You can speed from the heart of one city to the next sometimes at over 100 mph, or meander through sleepy villages, wherever hunches and musical moods or your heart's content. Our trains are clean, modern, punctual and inexpensive. Cafeteria-style Dining Cars are excellent, cheap meals. And overnight a comfortable Couchette compartment with 6 bunks is a good night's sleep. You'll see more, travel more and meet more people on Europe's trains.

But the best part is the price! Our Student-Railpass gives you two months of unlimited Second Class travel for $135. Similarly in Britain the BritRail Youth Pass gives you 15 days of unlimited rail travel for $45, or 1 month for $85. See your Travel Agent first though, because these Passes are NOT available in Europe. You must buy them in the USA before you go. Signature the coupon and we'll send you our free brochure "The Trains of Europe" it gives all the facts you'll need.

Index Extends Date For Portrait Sittings

Index '73 this week reported a record turnout from the UMass Seniors for portrait sittings. "There were so many," according to Index Editor-In-Chief Colleen You, "that three extra nights and two extra days had to be added into the final session."

Originally scheduled to last from February 26 through March 1, during the daytime, sessions at night were scheduled for Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of last week. Also, a special Saturday session on March 3, and a special session on Monday, March 5 were added.

According to Jack Koch, Graduate Advisor to the yearbook, this will reflect a greater income to both Index and the portrait photographers, Root Photographers of Chicago. "Root," explained Koch, "turns over the $3.50 sitting fee charged each senior who comes in to the yearbook. In addition, they pay to Index $3.00 per sitting for the privilege of being 'Official Senior Portrait Photographer.'"

As of Thursday, a total near 1500 seniors had their portraits taken, according to Ms. You. With three days and an evening to go, the figure was expected to reach almost 3000. Ms. You said that Root had been only expecting a little over 1000.

Reflecting on nationwide trend of doing away with yearbooks, Ms. You stated that the large number of portraits was not expected. "Especially," she added, "after the previous two sessions which did not do as well."

That comment was in reference to the portrait sessions held one week in November and two weeks at the end of January and beginning of February.

Ms. You added that this was the last year that the book would be a part of the Student Activities Tax. That is, all students at UMass who paid the tax levied by the Student Senate received a yearbook. Starting next year, separate bills will be sent for the Index, and only those who pay for it will receive it.

WITH TWA IT PAYS TO BE YOUNG.

Charles Learoyd, a Computer Systems Engineering student from Marblehead, spent yesterday with his assistant, Kathy Monts, in the Student Union Ballroom, flying an extremely light plane of his own design. He and about twenty other model plane enthusiasts, some from as far away as Boston, were testing their aircraft for indoor free flight. This plane, weighing in at a hefty .08 ounce has flown in the Ballroom for as long as 9 minutes, and under more ideal conditions for as long as 20 minutes.

The members of the Informal Model Airplane Club, whose main interests are with rubber-powered planes, meet about four times a semester, in the Ballroom. The next two meetings are on April 22, and May 13. Those interested are welcome to call Charlie at 584-3650. "Before the sky, there are no fences facing." (MDC Photo by George Withers.)

Big Weekend For Minutemen

NIT Hopes High As Fordham Falls

By EARLE BARROLL

Granting that Fordham made its way back to the Bronx after being the featured guest at another roasting at the Cage (e.g. 72-59 drubbing by the Minutemen) UMass should be receiving and accepting a third invitation in the past four years to the N.I.T. sometime today.

Why? "Because they should have been invited prior to this (the UMass-Fordham) game," explained P. J. Carlisimo, the son of Peter Carlisimo (Fordham A. D. and chairman of the N.I.T. committee) and assistant Ram coach after witnessing the wrath of a beyond description Cage of rallied UMies who have asked for justice in the courts of New York City.

"I haven't talked to my father in the past week, being that I was in Washington, D. C. recruiting," Carlisimo added, "but they're in regardless of this game. Unless of course if we had embarrassed them."

To the contrary Fordham suffered the embarrassment as the Minutemen parlayed an impregnable defense and a senior night mob of 5500-6000 raving, maniacal fans at ballooned filled, boogaloo accented Curry Hicks Cage into an all-out rout of the N.I.T. hopeful, now defunct Rams.

In affixing themselves to the caption "pick us or else", the Minutemen so denied Fordham access to the basket that Ram coach Dr. Hal Wissel lauded after the game, "This is the best defense that I've seen this year in the country. I'd rate Louisville (top 20 and N.I.T. bound) second."

"This is the best team we've faced in the last three weeks," he went on to say (this includes the likes of Marquette, South Carolina and Notre Dame). "They completely outplayed us. There's no way they shouldn't be picked for the N.I.T. Actually they should have been in before this game."

They weren't, but Leaman went a step further in saying, "With this win over Fordham and a streak of 12 wins, we should not only be picked for the N.I.T., but this should get us votes for the top 20 in the country. This team is that good."

The defense that so inserted itself into the senior night festivities (honoring Tom McLaughlin, Chuck Olsen, Charlie Peters and Tom Austin) limited the Rams to 18 points—yes, 18— in the first half while also containing Ken Charles, the Ram gunner (27 ppg) to the tune of 14 for the entire game.

In ending their regular season at 19-6 the Minutemen forced the Rams (12-15 with one to play) into forced shots, incoherent offensive sets, manic depression on inbounds passes and a total array of misfit basketball. This was defense with a capital "D", the type that doesn't make the play books at Oral Roberts, Jacksonville and Southwest Louisiana.

"I have to be pretty proud of these guys," said Leaman. "Endicott (Bill) and Skinner (Al) did a great job on Charles. Tom Austin took Darryl Brown right out of the game. He gave him only five shots and just a week earlier Brown single-handedly defeated Notre Dame."

INTO THE BIG GUY . . . Charlie Peters (54) gathers in a pass as Chuck Olsen (20) looks on in the final minutes of Saturday's slashing of Fordham at the Cage. (Photo by Emmette Schmarsow)

In the meantime, while Fordham was trying to solve UMass' defensive troika—traps, man-to-man and Jim Burke—the Minuteman offense gathered enough times around its hoop to open up leads of 32-18 (at the half) and 68-49 (with just under four minutes left) in easily handling a ready-to-play and extremely good Bronx quintet.

Skinner and company gave a prelude to things to come immediately after the opening tap when they spurted to a quick 9-2 lead before the Rams could regroup. After Austin hit a baseline jumper, Dr. A followed with a steal and a deal (from a Rick Pitino defensive gem off the trap), an offensive rebound, (again off the trap) and two charity tosses.

Fordham closed to within seven (43-27) on a nine point run and eight (32-44) in the second half, but the combined forces of the above mentioned plus John Murphy and Tom McLaughlin saw to it that the only sub-.500 team in the history to be considered for the N.I.T. remained just that—sub-.500 with one less hitch—out of the N.I.T.

In anticipation of today's announcement Leaman said, "These guys have worked too hard to be left out of the N.I.T. They worked to get in, they weren't given it. If they don't get the bid I just might leave the coaching ranks for there will be no justice in leaving them out."

Almost forgot. McLaughlin went to the bench for his last time at the Cage with 2:34 to go. Austin at 1:27. Peters was forced out at :42 on five fouls. And Chuck Olsen made his final entrance at 1:40.

Skaters Rout Mid'bury 10-2; Bowdoin Next

By ROY LYONS

Scoring at least three times in every period, the UMass Minutemen overwhelmed Middlebury College, 10-2, Saturday at Orr Rink and advanced to the ECAC Division II semifinals.

Don Riley bagged a hat trick and Chico Shea notched a pair as UMass unleashed 63 times on Middlebury netminder Larry Perlman before a lively matinee crowd that included a large portion of Middlebury rooters.

This wasn't the same team that played dead at the Civic Center Wednesday night against Yale. If being in the playoffs wasn't enough to get them up, they had that one to think about. Whatever the reason, one thing's for sure—they really went after it. They began to take control midway through the first period and simply outskated, outhit, and outshot the Panthers the rest of the way.

Shea scored the opening goal at 4:08 when he pounced on Riley's rebound and backhanded it past Perlman, a Montreal native. Mike Ellis headmanned it alertly through center ice to set up Riley's bid.

Don Lowe was whistled off for elbowing moments later, and Middlebury made the most of it. Chris Burr let go a sizzler that was really labelled, but goalie John Kiah gloved it beautifully.

He wasn't so fortunate a few minutes later when Middlebury tied it up at 9:12 on a freak goal. Robie McCallum nabbed one that slid through a maze of players and went right between Kiah's legs. He never saw it.

Riley put UMass ahead again at 12:26 when he broke a check at the blue line and whipped a low drive past Perlman. He had two more good bids on successive drives, but Perlman kicked them out.

Tim Silver tied it at 16:50 when he flipped a rebound past Kiah after he'd made a fine stop on the first drive.

UMass turned a tie into a 4-2 lead in the last couple minutes of the period. Lonnie Avery set up Pat Keenan in front of the crease, and Pat doesn't miss from there. It was the eventual game winner and it came at 18:03 with Rick Simonetti off for hauling down Billy Harris on a breakaway. Then Riley tallied for a second time a minute later. UMass got a shot away on the faceoff and Riley, trailing the play nicely, picked up the rebound and beat Perlman.

The second period was the most one-sided of the game, although Middlebury came close to cutting the lead to one in the early going. Tom Hallman faced nothing but twin when he picked up a rebound, but Bob Shilalie banged the puck off his stick to prevent a sure goal.

The Harris-Keenan-Avery line got things going again for UMass at 5:33. (They each had a goal on the afternoon.) Avery set it up beautifully when he broke in off the wing and forced Perlman to make the save. Harris snagged the rebound and flipped it home.

Jim Lynch made it 6-2, twelve minutes into the period when he finished off the prettiest rush of the afternoon. Scott Stuart muscled it ahead brilliantly to Jim Coleman who broke in on goal. Coleman drive Perlman over and slid the puck across the crease to

Women Gymnasts Lose Squeaker

Amid the maximum legal, allowable crowd in the Boyden auxiliary gymnasium Saturday night, the women's varsity gym team lost an early lead, and the meet to Springfield College. The final meet score was Springfield 102.6 points, UMass 101.1. In spite of the loss, it was a great meet and both teams truly thrilled the large audience.

To Springfield's surprise UMass jumped off to an early lead on the vaulting event. UMass' Jeannine Burger scored a 9.1 and tied Kathy Kolemaisen, of Springfield, for first place. UMass co-captain Margie Combs (9.05) was second and Springfield's Kim Andrews was third. At the end of the vaulting event the score was UMass 35.8 and Springfield 35.7.

But the concentration score in Springfield as the uneven bars. All the UMass participants swung especially well and put their touch another point in the bag. Here it was Margie Combs displaying a solid 8.8 routine and receiving an outstanding appraisal from the judges viewed Cathy Barkley of Springfield was second (8.7) and Jeannine Burger was third (8.6). UMass' Anne Trailer looked good and finished in fifth place. Betsy East finished behind Anne, in sixth. At the intermission the score was UMass 51.6 to Springfield's 49.95.

Then disaster. Of the four UMass competitors on balance beam, all but Combs, had a fall and many bobbles. Springfield swept the top three spots with good routines and it was Margie Combs placing highest for UMass in the fourth spot. Barkley of Springfield led all scorers with an 8.80. Balance beam has been haunting UMass gymnastics for quite some time and it continued to on Saturday. At the conclusion of the event the running meet score was UMass 76.85 and Springfield 76.85. Springfield had the bid and it did the meet.

The concluding event was floor exercise and both teams displayed high level broke and flawed routines. The UMass girls gave a good effort but just couldn't muster enough points to top the victory. Kolemaisen of Springfield was first place with a 9.35. Anne Trailer and Cathy Barkley tied for second in 9.3, and Margie Combs was third with a 9.05. The final meet score found

NIT or No Leaman

By JERRY BARBERO
Springfield Republican Staff

"If this doesn't put us on the NIT, then I won't be coaching at UMass next year, I'll quit."

That was coach Jack Leaman's first observation after the University of Massachusetts team convincingly conquered Fordham, 72-59 on Saturday night before a raucously crowd of more than 4,500 in the Curry Hicks Cage.

Scuderi Hits As Gymnasts Trip Temple

On Friday night before a large crowd of about 2000 fans at the Cage, the UMass Varsity defeated a powerful Temple team 157.75-157.3. In what was undoubtedly one of the finest performances ever achieved, all of the members of the team combined for a great win.

As was expected, the Temple squad began with very strong Floor Exercise to take an early one point lead. From the beginning the Owls were considered the favorites to win. But, with dependable performances by the Floor Ex team UMass was able to keep within range of the opposition.

Pommel side horse was also decidedly in Temple's favor. But the UMass gymnasts, despite losing three leaders and their between, came through with solid performances to keep UMass in the running.

Still-rings proved to be one of the highlights of the meet. With almost a ten point deficit to make up the Minutemen scored well in one of the strongest events and put UMass in striking distance of Temple. With performances like those of Dan Spier (9.0) and Jay Scuderi (9.0), the home crowd gave a standing ovation for the outstanding achievements of these two gymnasts. The score at the half was now Temple 78.4, UMass 76.9.

The stage was now set for the second half. Long Horse Vaulting and Parallel Bars were very dependable and kept chipping at the Temple lead. In addition a nice surprise came when UMass unexpectedly beat Temple in Vaulting.

The real clincher of the meet came at High Bar as any spectator can attest to. UMass was down 1.4 of a point at the beginning of "pipe". This performances turned in by Dan Spier and Steve Scuderi were just wonderful. With having scores from Jay Johnson and Gene Wielen, Dan Spier went up to hit one of his best high bar sets but a fall. But to be sudden concept there Scuderi mounted as usually, as a rule is not up to more to UMass. There was turmoil all the time in the team in triumph. UMass had achieved one of its most satisfying wins ever. Dedicated and conditioned home teams and needed them. Advice for the Eastern this week.

UMass NIT Bound

By EARLE BARROLL

For the third time in the last four years the UMass basketball team has received and accepted a bid to the 36th annual National invitational Tournament to be played the week of March 17-25 at Madison Square Garden in New York City.

Athletic Director Frank McInerney confirmed the invitation at 1 p.m. yesterday at his office in the Boyden Building, thus ending a weekend-long guessing game as to runners last week that UMass had already been picked and the committee was just waiting until Monday to make it official.

"I'm very pleased that we finally got the bid," said the first year A.D. "Everyone told us that it was coming. I was just getting uneasy at people telling me that it was a shoe-in."

The Minutemen, who charged into the N.I.T. picture with a season ending 12-game win skein and an overall 19-6 record and outright Yankee Conference title, were the fourth team to be named to the field joining Notre Dame, American University and Virginia Tech, all chosen last week.

Later in the afternoon UMass became part of the busiest day in the history of N.I.T. selections when nine more teams were added bringing the day's count to 16 and the complete total to 13. It is expected that the final three slots will be filled by the runners-up in the Big Ten, the Atlantic Coast and the Southeastern Conferences.

Aslo invited to the mid-March classic were Missouri, Oral Roberts, Louisville, Southern California, New Mexico, Marshall, Fairfield, Manhattan and Rutgers. Of these teams, Missouri, which will be making it's second straight N.I.T. appearance, has the highest ranking in the country at 13th.

For head coach Jack Leaman "this bid gives us the opportunity to make our next major step in the UMass basketball program—going down to New York and winning a game." In two previous appearances the then Redmen lost to the eventual tournament champions in the opening round, Marquette (62-55) in 1970 and North Carolina (90-49) the following year.

The biggest thing that pleases Leaman is that UMass will be going to a national tournament without Julius Erving. "Since the first two N.I.T. teams," Leaman explained, "all I've heard is that we had a team of four guys named 'Joe' and Erving.

"This trip to New York will be the second most important N.I.T. Of course the first one with Julius was a big thrill for us. But this one, without Julius has to be a big boost to our program and the young men who take part in it."

McInerney chided to reporters that "I should quit while I'm ahead. I'm absolutely delighted at the basketball team's selection. It is fast becoming apparent that 1972-73 will be one of those years that will go down in the history of UMass sports as one of the greatest of all time.

"The football team went to the Boardwalk Bowl, the wrestlers are New England champions, the hockey team is contending for their divisional championship. We've had a number of Yankee Conference championships. And now this, a trip to the N.I.T."

McInerney also went on to say, "The athletic program at a university is one of its most visible dimensions of the overall picture. An event of this nature has to help UMass in all its dimensions."

Pairings for the N.I.T. have not been announced as haven't the seedings being the field is not complete. But Saturday night after the Fordham massacre Leaman told a large gathering at a social at Memorial Hall, "Wouldn't it be something to play Notre Dame, in the featured attraction on March 17th, St. Patrick's Day."

Fiscal Bill Would Raise Amherst Tax

By ED FIGARTE

Amherst's share of the county tax would go up under the present Fiscal Year Bill, according to Allen Torrey, Amherst Town Manager, at the Amherst Board of Selectmen Meeting last night.

Torrey added that the present Fiscal Bill is on the Governor's desk awaiting his signature, and that it is his serious opinion that will have a disastrous effect on Amherst.

Section 9 would have Amherst evaluated under the latest state evaluation. At present Amherst pays approximately [illegible] in county taxes.

Torrey said Amherst's share of the county tax would go up, while Northampton's tax would go down.

House Bill 9[illegible] would cause the Town to lose $[illegible] per year, according to Torrey. The bill seeks to change the method of valuing state-owned land. Under the bill some state land not now under taxation would be assessed.

The Board of Selectmen voted to send a telegram to the Town's representatives and Senators telling them of the bill.

Kenny Kelly, Selectman, introduced a resolution to co-sponsor the Board's stand on political signs.

Lee Shepherd, Selectman, quickly urged that the resolution include all signs in general, including questions of location and type of signs to be allowed in Amherst.

Selectman Harris H. Brown agreed, adding that the "aluminum poles in town are covered with orange signs."

The Board voted unanimously to request the Citizen's Advisory Committee to investigate the Town's by-laws regarding signs on public property.

The Board also voted to accept the terms of the transfer of the Junior School Complex to the Amherst Redevelopment Authority (ARA).

The ARA is in charge of the Redevelopment Project, a plan for redevelop the Town of Amherst.

Mr. Wurlitz of the ARA said that his agency would establish a relocation authority to aid the people to be evacuated by the project. The ARA is required by law to establish this relocation authority.

The Junior School Complex will come under the authority of the ARA on July 1, 1973.

In order to begin construction of the secondary treatment plant, the Board would hold a special meeting this Tue., March 13, at 8 p.m.

At that meeting the Board will hear the recommendations of the Technical Advisory Committee in regard to selection of a consultant firm for the project.

Harvey argued that the Board were wrong in getting a consultant firm. Amherst is behind schedule in planning the sewage plant, and the present plant is inadequate.

When asked how much the consultant firm thought most likely to be recommended would cost Torrey said, "I think you will pay for all their time."

The Board also voted to accept 1.86 acres of land on S. Pleasant Street from a State as where to build a fire station.

Michael Garvey, Selectman, argued against the Board supporting article 38 of the Town Warrant.

Article 38 asks the town to raise "a sum of money" to implement the ECAC (Select Committee On Youth Report.)

Blacks Still Seeking Cops' Disarmament

By LARRY CHAPMAN

Black faculty members at UMass have not given up in their attempt to have the campus police disarmed.

After interviews with two faculty members who last strongly urged the situation existed last week that there have been meaningful recent attempts to deal with the campus police on the matter, but there are plans for future discussion.

An MDC survey of its area colleges, universities, and community colleges found that only three campus police are armed: UMass, Amherst, and the University of Hartford, has weapons. The Amherst police force has not actively carried at arsenal of eight guns.

Richard Pharaoh, director of Afro-American Studies at UMass and previously active in a community group to discuss the campus police, said in an interview, "police should not carry guns on their hips" but refuse to be "targets of the police wars."

Carrying guns, Pharaoh said, "creates an aggressive response." He stated as an example an all-black party had harassed at which police appeared with their guns on their hips. Pharaoh suggested that police officers should request from their superiors permission to enter a situation armed. "The way black students would act here armed policemen."

Archie Gregg, instructor of two African studies courses on campus, said in the same interview that "guns create a violence syndrome," and they are "dangerous to democratic freedoms." Gregg said so he was glad not carrying a sidearm in "tradition and habit rather than objective considerations." Many professors can be armed without guns. Guns are a symbol of violence," he said, citing the killings at Jackson State and Kent State.

As a black faculty member Gregg said he is aware that UMass police look upon black faculty as "a threatening group."

A spokesman for the University of Hartford police said that the police are now unarmed and that there are no plans in the future to arm them. An official of the University of Connecticut said the police have been armed "for several years" and mentioned that there was a move to disarm the police in 1969 with no results.

The UMass police were contacted but were not in an interview was not granted.

Phys. Ed. Requirement May Go

By DON GLICKSTEIN

(Editor's note: The following is the first of a series of articles about the Athletic Department and athletics on campus.)

Two motions that could ultimately end the physical education requirement and reduce the $30 student athletic fee more than 75% will be introduced in the Athletic Council Monday.

The motions, co-sponsored by Council members Gail Vittori ('76) and Student Senate President Larry Ladd request that the Provost intensively review the physical education requirement, and that the athletic director develop a plan that would end the financing of intercollegiate sports by the athletic fee.

Requirement Studies

University students, with few exceptions, are required currently to take 2 credits of gym. The rationale for the requirement, according to a phys. ed. publication, is to provide an opportunity to develop "competencies" that are required for students to meet "present and future needs for self-realization through activity."

Any change in the requirement would have to be approved by the Faculty Senate. An Athletic Council endorsement although legally irrelevant, would have some influence.

The Vittori-Ladd motion urges the Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs, Provost Robert W. Gluckstern, to study the requirement's "long-range and short-range effects on the attitudes of students towards athletics", as well as the effects on their general physical well-being.

The motion also requests that "alternatives to the requirement" be studied and what effects the requirement's abolishment would have.

A more general study on all physical education programs, including the requirement, is currently being conducted by a committee of physical education faculty. This committee, formed last fall by Dean David C. Bishchoff, is expected to report its findings by the end of the spring.

P.E. Requirement

According to Harold J. VanderZwaag, Men's P.E. Department Head and an ex-officio member of the committee, a future change being debated is the removal of the gym requirement and the combination of general phys. ed., intramurals, and club sports into a new Department of Sports Instruction and Services.

"I'm not in favor of the P.E. requirement at all," VanderZwaag said, "I think the whole gym class idea is a very bad idea."

If the requirement were done away with, VanderZwaag does not feel that there would be a reduction in personnel, such as teaching assistants.

Participation in general phys. ed. courses beyond the requirement has risen in recent years, according to Ethel Purnell, head of the general phys. ed. program. If the committee recommends the removal of the gym requirement, and if the Faculty Senate concurs, she believes that there will be a rise in sports participation.

"It would be a whole new ballgame", observed Assistant Director of Intramurals, Peter J. Graham. He said that other schools which have dropped required phys. ed. had an initial drop in skills courses enrollment, but "that soon rises to a greater number than that found in required courses."

If the requirement were abolished, Graham feels that it would benefit the intramural program, whose three biggest problems currently are a lack of indoor facilities, personnel and money. This past winter and fall, there were 106 touch football teams, 268 volleyball teams, and hundreds of other teams in other sports.

Athletic Fee

The athletic fee, topic of the other Vittori-Ladd motion, contributed more than $506,000 in fiscal 1972 towards varsity sports programs. One-fifth of that sum, $100,000 or about $6 per student, went to the Alumni Stadium's amortization fund. Conceivably, this is the minimum amount that the fee could be reduced to.

The motion does not imply a halt to inter-collegiate varsity sports, but rather, a different approach to their financing. If the motion passes, Athletic Director Frank P. McInerney must present a preliminary outline to phase out Athletic fee financing of the programs at the April 9 Athletic Council meeting. A finalized plan would be presented at the first regular fall meeting, when, presumably, the Council would vote on it. Intercollegiate games of sports clubs and intramurals would not be affected.

'Opera Is Not Just Singing'

By KERRY MELLO

Boris Goldovsky, a widely known opera authority, will conduct and stage Benjamin Britten's opera "Albert Herring" at UMass. on March 6-7 at 8:00 in Bowker Auditorium.

Tickets may be obtained through the University's Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hill, telephone 545-0202. They are priced $2 for UMass. undergraduates and $4 for others. Mr. Goldovsky also will give a talk explaining the opera on March 6th, at 11:15 A.M. in Bowker Auditorium.

In an MDC interview, Mr. Goldovsky stressed the fact that "opera is often very entertaining." The conductor has long been involved in explaining the nature of opera so it is understandable to the average viewer, and acquired the title "Mr. Opera" for his numberous intermission appearances at the New York Metropolitan.

Music has always been a part of Goldovsky's life. At the age of thirteen he made his first musical appearance as a pianist at the Berlin Philharmonic. He later studied under opera conductor Fritz Reiner, and has since staged and conducted operas throughout the world.

Goldovsky headed "Opera Tanglewood", in Lennox, Massachusetts, for twenty years. Out of this involvement grew an operatic touring group, based on Goldovsky's theory of "theatrical opera."

The conductor explained this term, stating, "opera is not just singing, it should be done as good theatre." He pointed out that staging an opera involves a delicate combination of theatrical, vocal and orchestral factors, "a combination of several languages."

The purpose of the touring group, Goldovsky explained, is twofold: first, to bring opera to areas which are otherwise seldom exposed to the art; and secondly to provide young beginning singers with a chance to experience some of the great roles of opera. All performances of the group are in English.

In addition to his conducting and speaking appearances, Mr. Goldovsky has written several books explaining opera. His latest, entitled Bringing Arias to Life, covers twenty eight great arias in detail.

Pulse Conducts Student Surveys

By STEVE FERNANDEZ

Project Pulse, the public opinion-sampling organization for the university, is looking for work. The organization, which exists to increase decision-making capability on campus, is willing to conduct surveys.

Pulse has openings for several surveys this semester. "There is no red tape involved," said Larry Benedict, the director. Organizations filling the requirements for selection and needing public opinion should give him a call at Project Pulse.

"We are a sort of min-Gallup poll," said Benedict, who designed the sytem "to rapidly and reliably collect student opinion." He said the completion rate on most jobs is a week or two, but that emergency issues can be done in three or four days.

The system is simple. Jobs are selected on the basis of timeliness and applicability to people on campus. All data collected is made public, available to anyone wanting it.

Sneiors: Wise Up

By ROBERTA MARTONE

Frustration is the key word, right now, in the Records Office in Whitmore, because many students are incorrectly filling out their senior information forms.

Helen Perry, spokesman for the Records Office, said the main problem was that students failed to correct mistakes made by the computer concerning degree dates. Ms. Perry said that the problem arises when students fail to report extra credits which may up-date their graduating day. If the Records Office is not informed of these changes, the up-date will not be processed, she said.

Ms. Perry said that many complaints have been voiced by students who find they are not registered to graduate. She explained that the student will not be considered for graduation prior to the registered date, regardless of the number of credits they have obtained. It is the student's responsibility to see that the graduation date is correct.

"With 17,000 students, we can't do anything humanly anymore. Due to the fact that there are more than 4,500 people graduating every year, everything has to be done by computer processing."

Another problem concerned the student's name as it should appear on the diploma. Ms. Perry said, "The students merely ignored the entire line."

Many students also forget to notify the office of a change in major. This year 17 senior students have not declared a major. It is impossible to graduate without a major, Ms. Perry explained.

The Records Office also asked students to notify them of a change of address to ease the excess of return mail.

In an attempt to prevent this mix-up from reoccurring, the Records Office is sending out a ditto sheet emphasizing the importance of filling out these forms correctly with the pre-registration form. Ms. Perry said, "They are hoping for a better response from the class of '74."

Some people will believe anything...Contrary to popular belief, the stadium and the new library are NOT sinking. Or so the UMass Planning Office assures us. Only time will tell. (MDC photo by Cindy Gonet)

28, 27, 26, 25...

By UNIVERSITY NEWSBUREAU

Memo to some newspaper reporters, members of the general public, and some state legislators: the 28-story library and the 17,000-seat football stadium at UMass are not sinking. Repeat: not.

To put it another way, you've been had. For the past several days it's been April Fool's in March.

That's the word from several UMass offices which have been contacted lately with "Is it true that...?" questions.

It all started about a week ago when the Collegian began running what the staff considered humorous comments in a column titled "Editorial Points". But, it seems there's a humor-gap between the editors and some of their readers.

"Collegian" Executive Editor Jerald H. Lazar wrote these editorial points in three editions of the daily newspaper:

"The Alumni Stadium is sinking at the rate of 11.2 inches per year. And when they put books in the new library, who knows how fast that will go down."

"A wire service called us yesterday to find out if the Alumni Stadium and the new library tower were really sinking. Some people will believe anything."

"It's not that the Alumni Stadium and the new library tower are sinking--it's just that the rest of the campus is rising. At the rate of 11.2 inches a year."

About the numerous phone calls on the veracity of those statements, Lazar said later, "It's the kind of story you'd almost like to believe."

And some, apparently, did.

But the UMass Planning Office squelched the rumor with these facts:

Test borings of the sub-surface soils had the load-bearing characteristics required to support a high-rise building, so the 28-story library was approved. Occupancy of the library has been postponed until summer because library officials want to move the books when students will not be needing them.

As for the stadium, the ground upon which it is built is indeed a glacial lake bed which would not ordinarily bear heavy loads. So, Alumni Stadium "floats" upon a six-to-10 foot hard crust of that glacial bed. "Steel-reinforced concrete spread footings" act as a "raft" to support the concrete spectator stands of the stadium. During construction, workmen accidently disturbed the hard crust. Since this would have resulted in sinking, they retreated and waited until the ground resettled, then began again. There has been no sinking of the eight-year-old structure.

It's been the kind of rumor which could give UMass officials a sinking feeling.

'Aching Adenoids' At Hatch

VITA is sponsoring a benefit 1950's Record Hop with Arnie "Woo-Woo" Ginsberg, one of the original D.J.'s from the "Old" WMEX in Boston. The record hop will be in the Hatch from 8:30 p.m.-1 a.m. Friday and there will be an admission charge of 75 cents.

"The program hopes that there will be a large crowd so that we can help its volunteers meet some of their costs," Geoffrey Stewart said.

The Volunteer Income Tax Assistance Program (VITA), in existence on this campus and area communities for the past four weeks, has helped more than 500 university students. They have done this by filling out federal and state income tax forms and answering questions that they have had about these forms.

Also, VITA have been assisting people in the low-income areas of Springfield, Chicopee, Holyoke, Belchertown, Ware and the Hamptons, with over 400 helped in these towns. However, many people in the program have been driving their automobiles to and from these communities without any compensation for the gas that they have been using.

The VITA program here at the University has decided to try and give these people a hand with the costs, as the program will be running until April 15th.

Plans Finalized For Women's Day

By JOAN FASSNACHT

Plans for the International Women's Day to be held March 8 were finalized at the Senate Women's Committee Meeting held last night in the Campus Center.

Committee member Ellen Caracciolo termed the event, "more of a celebration, although we hope it will also be an educational experience. It will be a get-together for women to share ideas and to exchange information.

The celebration will begin in the Campus Center Auditorium at 1:00 p.m. where a women's rock band, Deadly Nightshade, will provide entertainment until 1:45. Refreshments will be available at a bar which will be set up in the auditorium.

At 1:45, Chairperson Cathy Corbett will officially open International Women's Day with a speech concerning women in academia and in the job market. Ruth Getts from the Boston Women's Law Collective and Kathy Allen from the Boston Women's Abortion Action Coalition will also speak. Tables in the Campus Center Auditorium will be manned by Women's Centers' Representatives to dispense information from 1:00 p.m. until 5:00 p.m.

From 6:00 p.m. until 8:00 p.m. on the Noah Webster Lounge, Marnie Resner will speak and show slides on Women in China. All University members are invited to attend and are urged to bring food for a communal dinner.

Wednesday's Daily Collegian will print a definite schedule of Thursday's events. On Thursday, the Collegian will provide a special four-page pullout section on International Women's Day. P-10 Presents 'Corridor Living'

Project 10, the campus "experimental college", will present tonight a speaker reporting on current research into the dynamics of corridor living and community development.

Jim Gilbert, an interdisciplinary doctoral candidate and staff member for community development in Project 10, will discuss his work this past month which includes participation in a corridor in Pierpont as decisions are made on the use of space and on other developments leading to what is called "corridor consciousness."

The corridor has recently built a massage table (see PR 3/2) and created a massage lounge, and has blossomed into mural colors on the walls and in the bathroom.

Gilbert's presentation, which is another in the series of Tuesday and Thursday evening speakers sponsored by the Project, will be at 7:30 p.m. in the Main Lounge of Cance House (Southwest). All interested people are invited.

Speaking on Tuesday, March 13, is David Roberts, a Hampshire College professor and author of two books on his climbing experiences in Alaska and Canada. He will use a slide show to illustrate his expeditions in the Alaskan Revelation Range and the Cathedral Spires.

In The Nation And The World

34 POWs Reach Phillippines

By JOHN BREWER
Associated Press Writer

CLARK AIR BASE, Philippines (AP)-Thirty-four cautiously smiling war prisoners, including a German nurse, arrived to a cheering welcome here Monday after being released by the Viet Cong in Hanoi.

Another 106 American POWs freed Sunday by North Vietnam were speeding through medical checks heading howard a possible Wednesday flight home to the United States.

The chalky-faced prisoners released by the Viet Cong were in noticeably poorer shape. One was hauled in a litter from the plane that ferried them in from Hanoi. Another hobbled off on crutches. The left arm of a third appeared to dangle limply at his side.

But their joy was evident as they joined those released Sunday in enjoying the small pleasures of life denied them in prison. They gobbled down steak and eggs, telephoned their families back home and tinkered with their hospital television sets.

They were to begin thorough medical examinations Tuesday. Air Force Brig, Gen. Russell Ogan, 49, of Reading Pa., said the Viet Cong told the U.S. pickup party in Hanoi that none of the men had an injury "that couldn't be fixed."

The 106 Americans who were released from North Vietnamese camps Sunday already were well along the checkup and debriefing routine. Hospital sources said they expected a number of them to fly home Wednesday.

The senior military men on Monday's flight, Army Capt. Stephen R. Leopold, 28, of Milwaukee, Wis., spoke for the group of 34 on their arrival at Clark.

"My God, you don't know how good it is to be free, how good it is to be home," he said.

Army S.Sgt. Bill Allen Baired, 24, of Wooster, Ohio, painstakingly hobbled down the exit ramp from the C141 on crutches, helped by two attendants.

Military spokesmen said Baird had been offered a litter but refused.

The latest POWs included 27 Marine and Army men, 3 U.S. civilians, a German nurse and medical student captured at a charity mission and two Filipino employes of the Voice of America.

All were captured by guerrillas in South Vietnam and this was believed to account for the difference in their condition.

N. Viets Say Saigon Witholding Prisoners

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP)—An impasse in the exchange of Vietnamese war prisoners threatens to delay the peacekeeping efforts of the four-party Joint Military Commission before it expires in less than a month.

A spokesman for the U.S. delegation said there was no immediate indication that future release of American prisoners would be affected by a threatened boycott Monday of the military commission by the Communist delegations.

The U.S. spokesman said that the North Vietnamese foreign minister, Nguyen Duy Trinh, had assured Secretary of State William P. Rogers in Paris last week that all American prisoners would be released by the specified deadline, March 28.

He said there need not be formal meetings of the commission to arrange for the release of the 286 American prisoners still in Communist hands. North Vietnam and the Viet Cong have released 299 American prisoners in the first two batches, and there are two more scheduled.

Earlier, the senior U.S. representative, Maj. Gen. Gilbert H. Woodward, told the military commission that the repatriation should be completed by March 28.

The Communist side maintains that the Saigon government is unwilling to release a fourth of the prisoners it still holds.

The military commission—the United States, South Vietnam, North Vietnam and the Viet Cong-was set up to bring the Jan. 28 cease-fire into effect.

It had been hoped that the commission might speed up its mission in the last 30 days of its 60-day term established in the Jan. 28 peace agreement, before it gives way to the two-party Joint Military Commission made up of representatives of the Saigon government and the Viet Cong.

But on Monday, the Communist delegations walked out of a meeting and threatened to boycott future meetings until Saigon ups the number of prisoners it will release in the second phase of prisoner exchanges, already a week behind schedule.

The walkout by the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong delegations pushed back on the agenda a proposal by the United States for a renewed joint appeal to field commanders to stop continued fighting, and discussion of surface-to-air missile batteries the United States and South Vietnamese say the North Vietnamese installed after the cease-fire.

The international commission reached unanimous agreement on its first two investigations, and the Canadian delegation pressed for an investigation of the alleged missile sites for a third time.

Bodies Of Diplomats Arrive Home

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-The bodies of two murdered American diplomats were returned Monday to a rainswept capitol aboard a presidential jet that carried them from Khartoum.

A military honor guard and a 19-gun salute lent high drama to the brief ceremony attended by Secretary of State William P. Rogers and about 500 state department colleagues.

The diplomats, Ambassador Cleo A. Noel Jr., 54, and his deputy, G. Curtis Moore, 50, were slain Friday by Black September Palestinian guerrillas in the Saudi Arabian Embassy in Khartoum, the Sudanese capitol.

The assassins are in the hands of Sudanese authorities, with their ultimate fate still to be resolved.

Noel and Moore will be buried in side-by-side graves Wednesday at Arlington National Cemetery.

The plane also carried home their widows, Noel's son John, 21, and Moore's daughters, Lucy Anne, 22, and Catherine, 20. With them was the Sudanese Minister of Reform Abdal-Rahman Abdulla.

Earlier, another U.S. plane flew the body of Belgian Charge D'Affaires Guy Eid, who was slain with the two Americans, to Cairo for burial there.

At Khartoum, a band softly played Auld Lang Syne as the coffins of the two diplomats were lifted aboard the plane.

President Jaafar el Numairi assigned the minister of reform to accompany the two American bodies to Washington. The president was not present for the departure, made without ceremony under a Sudanese flag hanging over the airport at half staff.

Numairi has indicated the guerrillas will be dealt with severely. But reluctance to break Arab solidarity against Israel may pose problems in handling their case.

Wounded Knee Still Occupied

ON GUARD—Oscar Bear Runner guards the area as Indians set up a teepee on the Pine Ridge Reservation where negotiations between the Indians' attorney and the justice department were held. (AP Wirephoto)

By F. RICHARD CICCONE
Associated Press Writer

WOUNDED KNEE, S. D. (AP)—The Indians holding Wounded Knee ignored a government offer to evacuate the village Monday, but said they were "holding the offer in abeyance."

A scheduled parley in a Sioux tepee near Wounded Knee was delayed several hours while the Indians, who took over the village last Tuesday, drew up new counterproposals.

Attorney William Kunstler, who is working with American Indian Movement leaders in Wounded Knee, said the new demands included an option to purchase the 40-acre site of a historic battle in 1890.

AIM leaders also amended their previous demand that the scores of federal agents surrounding the village withdraw before the Indians leave. The Indians said the marshals and FBI men may stay or leave, but the Indians want protection from Richard Wilson, president of the 13,000-member Oglala Sioux tribe, most of whom reside in the Pine Ridge Reservation. Wounded Knee is located on the reservation.

AIM leaders and Wilson have been political foes for several months and Wilson denounced Sunday's offer to the Indians by the Justice Department as one of total amnesty.

A second meeting was held in the tepee later Monday, at which the Justice Department agreed to an Indian demand that food and supplies be sent into the village. Another meeting was scheduled for noon EST Tuesday.

Among those participating in the talks was Charles Soller, assistant general counsel of the U.S. Department of Interior. The Indians had said earlier they wanted an Interior Department representative at the scene.

Soller said he would take AIM's request for a referendum at the reservation, on whether to elect a new tribal president, back to Washington Monday night. He said he would have some word from the Interior Department on the AIM proposals when he returned Tuesday.

The federal offer provided that Indians quit the village without their weapons, the males identifying themselves as they passed through federal lines, but that no mass arrests would be made until a special grand jury investigation. The Indians burned the written offer late Sunday.

Carter Camp, an AIM leader, said the Indians would not consider abandoning Wounded Knee until negotiations were settled on their allegations of corruption in Wilson's administration, the Bureau of Indian Affairs and fiscal affairs at Pine Ridge.

For the first time since the takeover, newsmen were granted free access to the village by the Justice Department from 4 p.m. to 6:30 p.m. EST Monday. They also will have access from noon to 6:30 p.m. EST Tuesday.

Means was asked about the continuing federal report that the Indians have an M-60 machine gun in the village. "I wish we had," he replied. "We would mount it right up there at the church on a hill and intimidate them like they intimidate us."

Camp said the Indians wanted to talk with federal officials who can implement their demands. "We want Secretary of Interior Rogers Morton, or a top aide would be acceptable." Camp added, "We dealt with some White House aides in Washington during the Trail of Broken Treaties, but they had no power. We would like to see presidential aide Henry Kissinger or John Erhlichman out here."

Death Penalty Reconsidered

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Legislatures in almost two-thirds of the 50 states are considering measures to reinstate the death penalty and lawmakers in four other states already have passed bills bringing back capital punishment.

The Supreme Court ruled last July, in cases involving Georgia and Texas, that the death penalty, as imposed in most states, was unconstitutional. The 5-4 court ruling left the way open for legislatures to reimpose the death penalty, providing it was applied uniformly.

An Associated Press survey showed that the question of capital punishment was in issue in almost every state. Most of the proposals provided execution as the punishment for killing a policeman or fireman, for airplane hijacking and for various types of murder, including murder committed during the course of another crime.

"Our interpretation is that the Supreme Court is not barring the death penalty if it is mandatory," said Sheldon Beychok, chairman of a special Louisiana commission on capital punishment. "That is," he added, "the penalty must be imposed on both the rich man and the poor man." No action has been taken on the commission report.

Supporters of capital punishment cite the death penalty as a potential deterrent to crime and complain about the coddling of felons.

"Some people are out to protect the blood-thirsty animals that go out and rape people and kill them. but not me," said South Dakota State Rep. Bernie Kopecky, chief sponsor of a bill to make the death penalty mandatory for certain crimes. The bill passed the House by a narrow margin and is pending in the state Senate.

Ohio, Wyoming, and Florida already have reinstated executions; the Georgia general assembly has passed a measure to restore the death penalty and Gov. Jimmy Carter has said he will sign it.

The Ohio measure, enacted last December as part of a revision of the state's criminal laws, is typical. It defines capital murder—that for which a death penalty may be imposed—as premeditated murder, murder by concealed weapons and felony murder.

Among the states where restoration of the death penalty is pending are— Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Delaware, Hawaii, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, West Virginia and Wisconsin.

There are several bills pending in many states.

Jets Collide, 68 Killed

By JOHN VINOCUR
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP)—Two Spanish jetliners, flying over western France during an air controllers' strike, collided in "fine, clear weather" Monday. One crashed, killing all 68 aboard and the other made a safe emergency landing.

Most of the victims were believed to have been Britons.

The collision between the Iberia Airlines DC9 and the Coronado 990 of the Spantax charter company was blamed by the French Defense Ministry on pilot error or misinterpretation. The ministry has been in charge of France's air planes since the strike began.

Medeiros Made Cardinal

By VICTOR L. SIMPSON
Associated Press Writer

VATICAN CITY (AP)—Pope Paul VI elevated 30 prelates to the College of Cardinals Monday. Three are Americans and this gives the United States the second largest contingent among the princes of the Roman Catholic Church.

Italy still has the largest.

The new American cardinals are Archbishops Humberto Medeiros, 57, of Boston; Timothy Manning, 63, of Los Angeles, and Luis Aponte Martinez, 50 of Puerto Rico.

In a streamlined but surprise-filled consistory, Pope Paul also revealed the identities of two prelates, a Romanian and a Czechoslovak, he had named cardinals in 1969 "in pectore"—in his breast. He kept their names secret because at the time relations were tense between the Vatican and the governments of the two Communist countries. The Romanian died in 1970 after being held under confinement by the government.

The 75-year-old pontiff put a red biretta, symbol of loyalty, on the heads of the 29 new cardinals present in the Hall of Audiences.

On the basis of national numbers, an American has the second best chance of being elected the next Pope. The last non- Italian Pope was Adrian VI, who reigned briefly in the 16th century. He was Dutch.

Room To Move

We 'Deliver' Our Services

Room To Move today released this statement:

Last semester, the educational team of Room To Move divided its energies between two groups. We felt that it was dysfunctional to spread the work over two semester. The first group was composed of counselors and heads of residence and received highest priority. The second group consisted of student groups, student colloquia and to some extent the formal classroom, usually in the fields of psychology, public health, education and sociology. We enjoyed doing this work very much but there were times we were so busy we had to turn away a few groups.

This semester we would like to work exclusively with interested students, student-run colloquia and the classrooms. Perhaps it would make some sense to describe the type of workshops which we have been doing. The initial workshop, often requested, is a free-flowing question and answer discussion session. This is an informal session where we try to deal with whatever people are interested in. Usually this workshop gives people a broad overview of what some of the issues are. We frequently talk about Room to Move, how to deal with a bad trip and what our drug analyzation service results have been. Often initial workshop stimulates interest in some of our more structured workshops.

Two of our workshops are on psychedelics; one seeks an understanding of the phenomenon involved and the other teaches skills for caring for someone on a bad trip.

We also have a workshop on heroin, which is part informational and part experiential. Workshops on barbituates, amphetamines and alcohol are also available.

We have developed a second set of workshops which are designed to help people get in touch with their consciousness and creativity. These include introductions to Kundalini yoga, chanting and meditation, Bioenergetics, altered states of consciousness, yoga and psychedelics, fantasy, movement and body awareness, music therapy, and also some media presentations.

The education team is made up of Rose Davis, Lynda McIntyre, E.T. Mellor and Larry Ruhf. We will also be using special people for particular workshops: Chris Kilham in Kundalini and chanting, Sharon Rand in altered states and chanting, Gene Silver in bioenergetics, Ron Harvey and Al Comeau in altered states, Rich Cohen in yoga and psychedelics and John Barbaro and Linda Rosen in alcohol.

All of the workshops are designed to be fun as well as educational.

If you would like us to visit your dorm, or your colloq, or just have interested group of students, please feel free to contact E.T. Miller at 545-0400 on Wednesday or Thursday afternoons to make arrangements. If you feel we could connect in anyway, please get in touch with us at Room to Move.

Athletic Fee May Be Reduced

and other teams comes from state funds. This includes coaches salaries and most field and building maintenance.

In addition to the stadium debt, the athletic fee pays for team meals, lodging and travel, equipment, official's salaries, recruitment, rentals of facilities like Orr Rink, awards, films, medical aid, printing, publicity, and other items.

Intramural sports are not financed by the athletic fee, but by a $20 physical education fee that all freshmen pay ($10 for transfer students). This fee also supports intramurals, general phys. ed., and free play. Operational funds come from the state, and there is Federal work-study money available for student officials and workers.

In addition to the athletic and phys. ed. fees, lab fees support phys. ed. courses. In fiscal 1972, these budgeted out to $32,900, the second highest for any school or college in the University. The Division of Natural Sciences and Mathematics was the highest.

The $208,770 worth of Barber athletic scholarships dispersed in 1971-2 came chiefly from ticket and concession sales, the New England Patriots for their summer training camp, and from vending machines throughout campus and in the dorms. The first $50,000 earned by the vending machines is automatically given to the Barber scholarship fund, as this was a project originally begun by the Athletic Department. The remainder of the vending money goes to area Cultural Enrichment Funds.

No Formal Study

No formal study has ever been undertaken by the University to compare methods of athletic funding at other colleges, according to Patricia Bourke of the Office of Institutional Studies and Aloysius N. Rufe, Athletic Department Financial Manager.

Rufe doesn't believe that the athletic fee could be eliminated unless the state picked up more of the financing or there were program cutbacks. Rufe said that the present athletic fee financing has given UMass a "broad variety of programs and the finest of equipment". He noted that Boston University and the University of Buffalo had dropped fee financing, and that the sports programs in those schools have "gone down from what they used to be". Buffalo has no varsity football program.

James E. Mulcahy, former 3-term president of the sports booster Varsity M Club, disagrees about athletic fee financing.

The Varsity M Club, if "properly honed", he said, "can be the galvanizer of a half-million dollars per year for the Athletic Department."

The Club has made many gifts and contributions in the past to athletic groups.

Funding By Tickets

Mulcahy said that the Athletic Department should be funded from sales of tickets, contributions, and from additional promotions.

Because most of the seats at athletic contests must be reserved for students, "we can't hussle season's tickets", he observed. If there were no athletic fee, promotional efforts would be more successful, and groups like the Varsity M Club would be able to sell upwards of 5,000 football tickets, Mulcahy said.

Mulcahy noted that several coaches had formed contributors clubs, such as football's 400 Club which is open to $100 per year donors. He said that every sport should have such clubs, and that each club should be coordinated so as not to compete to the detriment of each other.

Mulcahy said that any new financing plan for athletics should be phased in over a period of years.

Former football coach Vic Fusia, who is now working with sports promotion at UMass, is puzzled over a "decided decrease since 1968" in football season's tickets. He said that this decrease is evident even in the Ivy League schools. "Many schools have taken this path" of no athletic fee," Fusia said.

The Athleti Council, which will vote on the alternative financing study, will take place at 4 p.m. Monday in the Boyden Conference Room (223).

Acting Superintendent Named At Walpole Prison

BOSTON (AP)-Kenneth Bishop, administrative assistant to state Corrections Commissioner John O. Boone, Monday was named acting superintendent at Walpole state prison in the absence of embattled Supt. Raymond E. Porelle.

"I have the utmost confidence in Kenneth Bishop as he assumes his new duties at Walpole," Boone said in a statement read by his public relations aide.

"With assistance from key members of my staff, I am confident that we can now open lines of communication between inmates and staff at Walpole and begin programs in keeping with the philosophy of rehabilitation and community reintegration," Boone said.

Bishop has been director of treatment within the corrections department and an acting superintendent at Framingham Women's Reformatory.

Porelle resigned Friday night in a telephone call to Boone.

Boone said he tried to talk Porelle into staying on in the job and believed he was successful. Boone has said Porelle is only on temporary leave from his job.

Porelle has been unavailable to the press since Friday night, and a spokesman for the corrections department said Boone has not heard from him since the Friday telephone call.

Porelle quit on the ninth day of an inmate work strike at Walpole aimed at getting him to resign.

On Saturday, the inmates held a news conference and said that in the light of Porelle's "departure" they would end the work strike by resuming their duties in the kitchen and by cleaning up the littered prison.

The prison became littered with food, broken furniture and other debris thrown about by the inmates as part of their protest against Porelle.

The turmoil at the state's maximum security prison has brought Boone under intense criticism. There were reports Monday that Gov. Francis W. Sargent was looking for a way to get rid of him "gracefully."

Firecrackers

Spring is coming once again to the UMass campus, bringing with it many fine things; lazy afternoons studying--or relaxing from studying--in the warm sun, football games in the Quad, sunbathing by the pond.

But it also brings with it some more dangerous and inconsiderate forms of outdoor entertainment, when a mild night leads people to open their windows and aim obscene comments, stereo speakers, and firecrackers out the windows.

Music and shouted obscenities thrown out of a dorm window may do nothing else except keep a lot of students up a few hours, but a firecracker can do a lot more damage. In the past, several students have come very close to being injured by exploding firecrackers.

For whatever reason a person might be inspired to throw a firecracker out the window, it probably has little to do with an innocent bystander walking by outside. And it's almost certain that it has even less to do with trying to seriously injure or kill that person.

The administration has said that it will deal strictly with persons convicted of throwing firecrackers or other objects out of dorm windows. Keep yourself out of trouble and your fellow students out of the hospital-don't throw that firecracker.

Elect Your Own Pres.

"The UMass Student Government has taken on all of the worst aspects of a bureaucracy and few of the good aspects." This statement was made by Lawrence Ladd, current President of the UMass Student Government Association, in reference to the upcoming student referendum concerning methods of electing next year's president.

The referendum, which will be coming up tomorrow, will list three possible methods to be used in electing the S.G.A. President. They will be as follows:

A.) To elect the Student Government Association President by an electoral college of the following composition;

Southwest Assembly	9 electoral votes
Commuter Assembly
Executive Council	9 electoral votes
Central Area	6 electoral votes
Orchard Hill Area	6 electoral votes
Northeast Area	6 electoral votes
Sylvan Area	6 electoral votes
Greek Council	6 electoral votes
Student Senate	48 electoral votes

B.) The current system, whereby the Student Senate members elect a president.

C.) To allow for the election of the S.G.A. President by a direct popular election.

In an interview held yesterday, current President Ladd stated that he had earlier been opposed to a direct popular election because, "the person will be elected not by what he or she says, but by his or her ability to run an election campaign." However, Ladd now feels, "the Senate suffocates people who want to make any intense changes." He further stated, "The Senate is likely to elect a mediocre person...based on petty bureaucratic reasons."

Of the three choices, the least feasible seems to be the current system, whereby petty politics and friendship seem to play more of a part than the issues themselves. But the electoral college process doesn't seem much better. Perhaps if this choice put more weight on the area governments, it would be more worthwhile, but as it stands now, it is a compromise between half of the old system and half of a slightly better system.

This leaves us with the one choice that advocates of the Old Politics shirk at-a direct popular election. The basic idea behind an electoral college process is that the voters (in this case, UMass undergrads) are not responsible enough to choose their own leader and that it will become somewhat of a popularity contest. However, in an age of the eighteen-year-old vote and the New Politics, this excuse doesn't hold water. If students are irresponsible, then what are they doing in college? If we are to judge all students by the acts of some then we are being totally unrepresentative. The student body should have a president that will be representative of that body. Therefore, who else is better qualified to elect a president than the people that president represents. Put your confidence in yourself and vote tomorrow for the right to elect your own president.

A Show Of Decadence

Confession of a dam keeper.

It was a flood. A flood of smells of sights and sounds that produced something not real, but so thoroughly touchable that it left the minds of other dam keepers somewhere in the frazzles of walking delirium that came somehow via cynicism and the trappings of a time clock.

It was three nights of tending bar at the Blue Wall, the first three nights when eighteen-year-olds could get legally wound up on booze and show the world they were to become a part of how little they knew.

The older people stayed away in droves, perhaps to get high or think about what it was like to be eighteen again, when they were forced to fake their age, or resign themselves to dope smoking or Saturday Night at the Movies on NBC.

But the young were there. Full force, legions of eager drinkers hailing hitler with empty cups demanding that they drink more freedom that night. Freedom did not ring however; the only bells heard was a bartenders mind listening to a funeral toll being sounded for his happiness in a job.

People puked and came back for more booze, reminiscent of the days of Henry VIII and his feasts. And location was not important to the pukers. Some even chose the convenience of their shirts or skirts.

There were muggings. Not muggings for the wallet, but muggings for sex. The battering and weaponry used was not a zip gun or switchblade, but the smooth instrument of a well-oiled tongue jabbing away at years of religious and parental dictates about what to do when approached by a young man or woman whose ideas are unknown. But this is college! The citadel of free thinking and harbor of individuality. Who would think that someone would hustle a young person with pure white thoughts of love when the only white in mind was made of percale? There were a few muggings.

And there were others. A few John L. Sullivans showed up, thinking they too could lick any man in the world. Their training, like his, consisted of roadwork and beer. Their roadwork all took place within the confines of a half-working brains, when through the dim regions of queer street they felt the kind of omnipotence that always lives within the minds of a two beer commando. The people know about spring, know very well because many of them are impersonating black-eyed Susans this week.

And lastly, there were the soda fountains who drank without knowing what they swallowed. Collins, sombreros, sours. What about the taste of liquor? With the exception of those who drank Old Mr. Boston Tequila (made from water out of the Charles River) very few learned things like Scotch is salient, whiskey is not. But who cares?

The dam keepers held back the tide. The new drinkers laughed and loved and cried and passed out and put on a show of decadence that may never be seen again. Hail Volstead, hurray beer. And thank god for last call.

The World's Shortest Library?!?!

Down she goes.

Some people will believe anything. Some people will believe anything they see in print; some people will believe anything they hear or overhear, and repeat it to their friends as gospel truth. Tell them Paul McCartney is dead, and they'll concoct "clues" to prove it's true. Tell them there will be 65 kegs of free beer at the Bluewall on March 1, and they'll be on hand to drink it.

Rumors are easy to start, and once they get going, they're tough to stop. Besides, squelching a good rumor is like telling a little kid there's no Santa Claus. Sometimes, though, rumors can get out of hand, especially when the wrong people become gullible.

I wrote a seemingly innocuous Editorial Point which appeared in the Collegian about a week ago: "The Alumni Stadium is sinking at the rate of 11.2 inches per year. And when they put books in the new library, who knows how fast that will go down?"

Why did I say the Alumni Stadium is sinking? To tell you the truth, I heard it from a guy on our sports staff who, in turn, heard it from a friend, who heard it from his father, who is a geology professor at Amherst College. Obviously, there was a communication gap in there, somewhere. As for the library going down, I made it up. Notice, I never said the library was sinking; I only suggested that it might sink.

Since then, practically every newspaper and wire service in the state has called the Collegian, the Physical Plant, and the University News Bureau to find out what the story is. Plus, I've heard that some of our state legislators began to get a little concerned.

So the University News Bureau issued an official release, announcing that "the 28-story library and the 17,000-seat football stadium...are not sinking."

(The full story, complete with details, is in today's Collegian on page three. Check it out.) The local radio stations have also been giving it a lot of play.

It's ironic that, on the same day the controversial Editorial Point appeared, the Collegian printed a news story which said that, despite rumors to the contrary, the library will structurally be able to support 28 floors of books. Apparently, more people read Editorial Points than news stories. Besides, fact isn't nearly as colorful as fiction.

One of our reporters has since talked with Leo Liberman, project engineer for the new library, and an employee at the physical plant building. According to our reporter, Leo was more than willing to react in the spirit of the situation. Leo said that if the library was really sinking, the contractor would probably want to "change the building to classrooms so all the hot air that's generated in the classrooms will busy up the building."

People get fooled easily (witness the last Presidential election), but not many will admit to getting fooled. There's hardly a soul alive who will admit to believing that Paul McCartney was dead. It made a good story, and good stories are told and retold. Oddly, the best rumors, for some psychological reason unknown to me, are those that are pessimistic in nature. And what can be more pessimistic than the world's tallest library potentially becoming the world's shortest library?

Letters To The Editor

Get It Together And Vote For 'Buck'

To Orchard Hillers:

On Wednesday, March 7th there will be an important election held at Orchard Hill for the office of presidency for Orchard Hill Area Government (OHAG). I would like, at this time, to familiarize all Orchard Hill residents with the campaign of Gleeroy "Buck" Bucheeen for this office. Without a doubt, his campaign, specifically his platform, warrants our undivided attention.

Buck's intent, once president, is to initiate a viable change in attitude and response from the Orchard Hill community. He will seek to bring Orchard Hill together as a single unit instead of separate factions that disrupt the educational process of that which would make a cohesive learning environment. It is his firm belief that Orchard Hill Area Government can and must work more on behalf of students' interests.

He has been an active participant in many Orchard Hill affairs and is very much aware of student needs. He has been a counselor on the 2nd floor in Grayson, volunteer summer orientation counselor, student advocate in the J. O. E. program, member of the Academic Policy Committee and advisor on the Advisory Committee to East Area Business Manager. He also has been an interested non-voting member of Orchard Hill Area Government.

With the input that Buck has received from students on these committees and from Orchard Hill students at large, coupled with his knowledge of the operation of OHAG and his sincere interest in student needs, I feel he is the most qualified candidate to effectively initiate and administer positive change as president of OHAG for the betterment of the Orchard Hill community.

So . . .

Jump on the bandwagon,
Jump on the truck
Let's get it together,
And vote for "Buck".

What Alternatives?

To The Editor:

Lately, a light flood of letters protesting the Supreme Court decision on abortion have appeared in the Collegian. Their major concern is the right of the fetus. They choose to call abortion murder because the fetus is said to be life. That this theory is relatively new, if examined historically, is apparently of no concern to these people. Dismissing the history of abortion (which extends back to Rome, b.c.) they go on to say, "Why abort when alternatives are available?"

I, for one, would like to know what these people are talking about. Adoption, they say. Oh, really? What about the fact that only 37% of white women and only 25% of non-white women who are willing to give the child up for adoption are accepted for interviews with public agencies? And once accepted for an interview, there is no guarantee that the child will be accepted for placement. Four options are available to those women who are turned down: 1) keep the child; 2) go to a private adoption agency (which is more restrictive than a public agency and treats women as baby machines) 3) go to another city and attempt to find an agency willing and capable of assisting them; and 4) carry the child full-term and then abandon it. Fine options, right?

Women who do not see adoption as a suitable alternative are told that society is changing its attitudes towards the unwed mother. What about the interim? (and the fact that most women who obtain abortions are married???) For the unwed mother there are groups who will offer support. But for how long and how good is the support? But, if emotional and psychological support is offered and is enough, what do you do about taking care of the child and getting the mother back into school or into a job if she so desires? Day care has to be provided and the woman is not really free to pursue her interests because she is fully responsible for the child and its well-being. Where is the hell is the father? What is his responsibility? Typically, the anti-abortion groups speak only in general terms (i.e. society's responsibility) with regard to the father.

The alternatives the anti-abortionists speak of are not alternatives at all. Women are still being dictated to by men and the State (one and the same.) A woman has the right to determine what she will do with her life and if she chooses to have children, when she will have them. Control over reproduction is a woman's right.

Libby Rich

Rational Approach

To The Editor:

This letter is prompted by, although not directly in response to the letter from Margaret Melloy printed in February 27's Collegian. I am really getting annoyed by the abortion issue, especially as people seem to be handling it now. How long do we have to go on listening to anti-abortionists call abortions murderers and the other call the one woman-suppressors and sexists? It is time for someone to deal with the issue on a more rational level, apart from the name-calling, indignation and, in cases, out and out intolerance.

The issue is a moral one, not one to which there is an objectively true answer, a point of which both parties seem to be unaware. To anyone with even a rudimentary knowledge of philosophy, the issue is familiar. Plato, through his dialogues and principal character, Socrates, spent his entire life searching for an absolutely true standard on which to base all moral beliefs. And, as any student of philosophy can tell you, he never succeeded. The point he missed was that it is silly to ask whether a moral judgment is right or wrong. The only question one can apply to moral judgments with any hope of getting a satisfactory answer is whether or not the final decision is fair.

I don't believe any of us would doubt that abortion is a moral issue, and therefore, we must apply this principle to it. If a state legislature decrees that abortion is immoral and shall not be available to anyone, what of the people who have made the decision for themselves that it is not immoral? The decision by the legislature is unfair to them in the same sense that it would be unfair to anyone who was morally opposed to abortion to force her to submit to one.

I realize that one of the crucial aspects of this debate concerns whether or not the fetus, before twelve weeks is a living human being, and what are, if there are, the rights of the unborn. Even science cannot define when life starts, so who are layman to arbitrarily pick either twelve weeks after conception or conception itself as the defining point? It would seem senseless then to argue for the rights of the unborn, and we are therefore still left with the fact that everyone should be able to decide for himself where he morally stands on this issue. State legislatures themselves implicitly admit that there is some difference between human beings and fetuses by the mere fact that penalties for murder and abortion are so drastically different. (In most state, murder is punishable by life imprisonment or, until the recent Supreme Court decision, death, whereas an abortion conviction generally only carries a fine or short imprisonment.)

I am not interested here in expounding my own views on the issue, but would only like to point out that there is no clear answer either way, except each individual's own personal answer. Why can't we all try then to get the issue off the emotional level and back to a more rational approach which is the only place a truly fair solution will be found.

Mary Farnell

Editorial Points

First they lower the drinking age, and everybody on campus goes out and gets bombed. Then they started advertising X-rated movies on campus, and everybody went to see them. What's become of this place? Where has morality gone? Next thing you know, they'll be legalizing marijuana or something.

What if they gave an election and nobody voted?

Referendum Question

To The Editor:

A most important student referendum will be held tomorrow. You will be asked to decide the best method for electing a new president of the Student Government Association. Since our constitution was modified drastically last year, making the new president not just leader of the Senate, but of the whole student body as a whole, many felt a change in the election procedure was also in order.

There are three possible election methods. The first one would leave the decision to the Student Senate. This is the current procedure. It is a responsible assembly and obviously had the right, in the past, to pick its own President but now the President is leader of us all. To reflect the new constituency, some people feel the President should be elected by direct popular vote. This is very appealing at first glance, being the most democratic, but there are many undesirable factors to it, when studied more closely.

First, campaigning would become campus wide. That takes money. Money would be raised by campaign contribution just as it is in any state or national campaign. Obviously, political indebtedness to a few contributors is not desirable. Secondly, we should not force candidates already busy with campus concerns (most of the candidates I have seen work a 40 hour week on student problems) into a time consuming campaign. We are students first, and politicians second.

But most importantly, we have no right to urge direct popular vote unless we are willing at the same time to take on the responsibility of that decision. As it stands now student apathy is King here. We cannot elect him to the Presidency as well.

A third alternative has been worked out by Barry Cohen, chairperson of Governmental Affairs Committee. He would have delegates chosen both by the Student Senate and by the Area Governments make the decision. This seems to eliminate the weaknesses of the other two proposals while keeping their strengths at the same time.

No Personal Accusations

To The Editor:

The Collegian's inaccurate reporting has created another "non-issue." In Wednesday's edition, the chairperson of the Student Senate Academic Affairs Committee was misquoted in such a way as to misrepresent his opinions about the Director of the Summer Counseling Program. In Friday's edition, a loyal member of the summer counseling staff responded angrily to the article without bothering to check the article's authenticity. If he had done so, the staff member would have found that no personal accusations were made.

The issues relating to the Summer Counseling Program should not be lost in fictional, personal feuds. The Academic Affairs Committee has issued an exciting report that deserves our careful attention. Let's focus on the merits of the report.

Larry Ladd, President
Student Government Association

Inaccurately Quoted

To The Editor:

It is obvious that what had been my wish is no longer possible; there have been too many reactions to my alleged comments quoted in the Collegian of February 28. I found my quoted comments in reference to Ms. Hamilton in rather bad taste myself, but I happen to know that the words were inaccurately quoted and taken quite out of context. It had been my hope that those words would be overlooked by most and that no further mention would be made of them saving everyone from embarrassment. It is for this reason that I did not seek a retraction from the Collegian nor write a letter of explanation.

It had been my opinion that the best course to follow would be a letter to Ms. Hamilton pointing out the inaccuracies in the article and then to carry on with the real issue which is the condition of summer counseling and the manner in which it can be improved. If either Mr. Glickstein or Mr. LaMacchia had endeavored to verify the quote with me, then possibly their fears would have been allayed and we could all get onto the most substantive matters addressed in the Academic Affairs Report on summer counseling.

It is unfortunate that Ms. Hamilton's good name has had to have been thrown around the newspaper like this, and for that I am truly sorry.

2 BUDWEISER CAN HUG . . . most empty Buds cans which contestant hugs next to his person. Cans can't touch ground or any other kind of support. Record 38.

3 BUDWEISER CAN TOTE . . . most empty Bud cans balanced atop one another and toted without mishap for 25 feet. Record to beat is 4 (don't laugh till you try it).

BUDWEISER® ANNOUNCES 5 KINDS OF HORSEPLAY IN WHICH YOU CAN BE A WORLD CHAMPION

1 BUDWEISER CAN CRUNCH . . . most empty Bud cans crunched with one hand in span of 15 seconds. You get ½ credit for aluminum cans. Current record is 5 (the sixth can turned out to be full).

4 BUDWEISER CAN TOSS . . . most consecutive completed tosses between two or more people, each 20 feet apart. Record is 7 (hard to concentrate).

YOU CAN EARN THIS SWELL 7"x6" PATCH!

Sad but true: There's a big shortage of champions in the world. To prove it, count how many you personally know. See? . . . To ease this shortage, Budweiser is sanctioning five foolish events in which bonafide World Championships can be earned. They are described above . . . The swell Budweiser World Champion Patch is your prize . . . These may not be the ultimate sporting activities on campus. But they are the only ones in which we'll recognize record-breaking performances . . . Sure, it's easy to get a patch by claiming a fictitious record. But then you wouldn't be able to inscribe your specialty beneath the words "World Champion." (Or would you?) . . . Where do you get all the empty Budweiser cans you'll need to win a World Championship? Really, now!

5 BUDWEISER CAN PITCH-IN . . . most consecutive successful lobs of empty Bud cans into regular trash can from distance of 10'. Record is 72 (only had three cases to start with). This event gets rid of the empties from all the others.

(Maybe you've detected that this is not an official, rigid-rules "contest." But it is a lot of fun, even if you can't break the records. You can, though, can't you?)

How To (Hak, Cough)...

Influenza, or the flu, is a fairly brief illness that is very contagious. It is caused by one of a family of viruses. Anyone can get the flu-especially when it is widespread in a community-but it is usually especially serious for those with a chronic disease, for the elderly, and for pregnant women.

Though the flu seems to come on suddenly, it actually takes one to three days to develop. Some of the flu symptoms are headache, chills, fever, aching muscles all over, and lack of appetite. Other common discomforts include a head cold, sore throat, dry cough, weakness, pain or burning in the eyes, sensitivity to light and nausea.

If you find that you have flu symptoms, you should:

1. Go to bed and stay there for at least 24 hours after the fever is gone. Bed rest is very important. If you have a humidifier, use it. If you don't, you may purchase one from the pharmacy, though their supply runs out quickly.

2. Keep warm and drink plenty of fluids. A cool damp washcloth on your forehead may relieve the feverish feeling. Solid foods may be taken as your appetite desires.

3. Take two aspirins (if not allergic to it) every four hours to relieve aching and lower your temperature. Do not take other medication unless prescribed by a physician or nurse.

4. Avoid exposure to other illnesses. Flu lowers your resistence.

As your fever begins to go away, your nose will probably become stuffy and your cough may get worse. The discharges from your nose and throat may contain pus. When you're at this stage, you may find nasal sprays, saline gargles and simple cough syrups helpful, and you'll probably feel better soon.

Usually, the flu is an unpleasant illness that comes and goes. It is not necessary to see a physician unless you are very uncomfortable or if symptoms persist for more than four days. Pencillin and other antibiotics are not useful against the flu as it is caused by a virus, not bacteria. However, you should be aware of some of the complications that may result. These include bronchitis, sinus trouble, ear infections. Your doctor may prescribe antibiotics if a complication seems to be present. To help avoid complications, take care of yourself.

Q. What constitutes an emergency or urgent problem?

A. Remember that the Health Services is not fully staffed on weekends. There are sufficient staff for urgent problems only. If you come into the Health Services with a relatively minor problem that could be seen later in the week by appointment, you may have a long wait. You are also adding extra pressure to the staff and perhaps delaying medical care to a student who has a serious, immediate medical need.

Q. What can I do to ease the load on weekends?

A. First of all, use common sense in defining what is a medical emergency for you. If you are unsure whether your problem is urgent, why not pick up the phone and ask for advice. This could save you a trip to the Health Services and unnecessary waiting. Also, if you do have a problem that could wait till the following week, it would be to your advantage to make an appointment. This can be done by calling 545-0057. (The appointment desk is open Monday-Thursday from 8:30 a.m. to 7 p.m. and Friday 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.). This way you will also have the opportunity to see the physician of your choice. This is your Health Services, organized to help you.

If you have any questions, comments, complaints, and praises, too, let the Health Services Student Advisory Board know. Notices of their meetings are listed periodically in the Collegian.

Vets' Job Bank Working

Since creation of the Veterans' Job Bank in late November, more than 200 veterans have applied for part-time work.

The Veterans' Affairs Staff at UMass has sought employment for veterans in many areas. It has succeeded in finding jobs in somewhat technical areas such as bookkeeping, electricians work, and auditing. They have also found many openings in service areas such as restaurant work, gas stations, and security agencies.

Having spoken to over 60 area employers, the Veterans' staff has found the concept of a Veterans' Job Bank well received and many have cooperated in using this placement service.

The Job Bank is averaging one placement per day and responses from employers indicate that many more placements will soon become a reality.

Currently, the Job Bank is seeking veterans interested in summer work as well as continuing to locate part-time jobs during the school year. For information regarding school year and/or summer work, veterans should apply to Veterans' Affairs Office, Room 239D, Whitmore Administration Building, and ask for John Petell or John Ramey.

Johnetta Cole To Speak On Cuba

On Wednesday, March 7, at 7:30 p.m., Dr. Johnetta Cole will speak on her impressions of Cuba, using slides, records, and tapes.

Ms. Cole and a delegation of Afro-Americans were guests of the Institute for Friendship among the people of Cuba.

Ms. Cole is a member of the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies at UMass.

During their nineteen day visit the delegation was able to observe and participate in the on-going Cuban revolution: cutting sugar cane, and visiting housing projects, hospitals, schools and a popular tribunal.

The program will be held in Hasbrouck 20. The Amherst College-UMass chapter of the New American Movement is sponsoring the presentation.

Dr. Johnetta Cole, of the UMass Afro-American Studies Department will give her impression of her recent Cuban trip with the help of visual aids. The program will be held tomorrow night in Hasbrouck 20.

Example: "I was having lunch the other day with author Jess Stearn. Suddenly, I had a vision of packages in front of my door and no one was home. I told Jess to get me home and I told him about the packages. That's right. When we got home, the packages were there, just as I had described."

Skinner Tabbed Coaches' All N.E.

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

UMass's Al Skinner joined Providence's duo of 6'8 Marvin Barnes and 6'0 Ernie DiGregorio, along with Gene Doyle of Holy Cross and Steve Rowell of Rhode Island on the Coaches' All New England team.

Skinner, who started the season as a guard, switched to forward to lead the Minutemen in scoring with 15.1 points/game and in rebounding with 9.1 rebounds/game. An unselfish player, Skinner, at 6'3-1/2 should be a guard, but because of his fantastic leaping ability, played where he was needed and led the hoopsters in rebounding two years running.

The confusion continued with the coaches and he was named to the team for his high percentage shooting (53.5%) from the floor and he was considered a guard. The junior from West Hempstead, N.Y., averaged in double figures in scoring for seventeen consecutive games and 22 of 25 games.

More than statistics, Al Skinner has been much more to UMass basketball. Defensively, his quick hands have harassed the opponent. His steals from the press and zone have become commonplace and are expected, especially in the Cage.

One-on-one, Skinner's moves are very hard to describe, but phrases such as anti-gravity moves have been tried. Many a referee has been baffled by his Long Island style and in disbelief called him for walking (when in reality Al was flying towards the hoop). Constantly going against the bigger men, Skinner had relied on his agility, which at times resembles a modern dance number with his moves and counter-moves before his bucket, to excel.

Skinner was unavailable for comment last night, but his roommate on the road, Tom McLaughlin had this to say about him. "Al's being named is really tremendous, since he didn't score very much." McLaughlin had only praise for his teammate by saying that someone with his ability usually flaunted it, but Mac called him "very shy and quiet."

Commenting on Skinner's performance, as improving to coincide with the team's 12 game win streak McLaughlin said, "He still doesn't realize how great he really is."

Coach Jack Leaman could probably write a book on what Al Skinner has done already for the Minutemen. Leaman said this, "Al has finally come into his own as a basketball player. It was an awful tough job, as people expected that he would be another Julius Erving. It is a tribute to him that he kept his head, doing the things he does very well and did not try to become anyone but Al Skinner. While this is a team in every sense of the word, Skinner is the one man who can make the spectacular play to ignite the fans and to ignite his teammates."

"His performance makes a great difference to this team. I see a lot in Al Skinner of what I saw of Walt Frazier when he led Southern Illinois to the NIT title. With a lot of work, Skinner can be a great pro basketball player."

Majoring in Business Administration, Skinner in his quiet and unassuming way mixes his studies with his ball playing for a winning combination.

The second team, is lead by George Groom, from NIT-bound Fairfield and also includes James Brown and Tony Jenkins of Harvard, James Garvin of Boston University, and Peter Gavett of Maine.

The third team was comprised of Kevin Stacom of Providence, BU's Ken Boyd, UConn's Cal Chapman and James Brown and Billy Raynor of Dartmouth.

In regard to the fact that UMass had only one representative on the team, Leaman said, "We're probably an underrated team all the way around. We don't have anyone up there in the statistics and we snuck up on everyone."

Blanked At IC4A's

By WALT POWERS

The track at Princeton's Jadwin Gymnasium is fast and wide. Saturday and Sunday it played host to the 52nd annual ICAAAA indoor track meet, and before a big, overflow crowd the best trackmen in the East set six new ICAAAA records.

UMass failed to score in this meet, their last of the indoor season, but they did come close, clipping a whopping 44 seconds off the old school record en route to a seventh place finish in the distance medley.

Manhattan won the meet. Fielding a team composed primarily of underclassmen, they scored 45 points to take their first ICAAAA title in seventeen years. Navy, on the strength of some impressive performances in the weight events, was second with 24 points, Harvard was the top New England scorer, finishing in tenth place with 8-1/2 points.

The Minutemen got solid performances in several events, but the team was a small one, and they were facing their toughest competition of the year. Co-captain Tony Pendleton closed out his indoor career by advancing to the finals of the sixty yard dash eventuaay won ay iwew England and Yankee Conference champion Ford Dennis of B.U. Curt Stegerwals was nipped at the tape in his bid to make the semifinals of the hurdles.

Paul Catano ran well in the early part of the mile covering the first six laps in 3:11. He seemed to lack the conditioning of before, though, and faded toward the end. Tom Maguire ran another strong race in the two mile, finishing hard in 9:16.

The strongest Minuteman performance of the meet came in the distance medley, and for a while it appeared that UMass might finish as high as third. Peter Byron made record-breaking a habit on the leadoff 880 leg, setting a new freshman record with a time of 1:56. Last week he set the freshman record in the 1,000. Steve Levine, running in his second race of the meet, ran a blistering :49 in the 440, and Bill Gillin ran his 1320 leg in 3:03. At this point UMass was holding third in a bunched up pack, but the pack opened up on the mile leg: Randy Thomases 4:18 wasn't enough, and UMass had to settle for seventh place and the New school record.

Bring Back The Blarney Rock

33rd Street—He wears tattered clothes and usually tops off his act with a withered baseball cap. Probably he's Irish but his father many times was Italian and the life style from which he stems flounders in the decadence of the Apple's finest tenements. His hands aren't dirty; they're charcoal burned. But everyday, rain, hail, or shine, you'll find him on the corner of 33rd Street selling his smoky pretzels . . . He'll be in his prime for the start of the 36th annual National Invitational Tournament. So will the Minutemen . . .

As you stroll slowly towards the Garden from McCann's Bar watching your every step, you know why the city is so expensive. But it's less expensive than it is fattening. For $.35 you get the home spun Italian touch with slices straight out of the oven. Adjacent to the pizza parlors are barbecue dives that specialize in teasing you mind and bodily with their products that make a mockery out of your wallet as well as your waistline . . .

But as you look deeply into the storefront windows, you see the placid expressions from the faces of Ken Charles (Fordham), James Brown (Harvard), Steve Rowell (Rhode Island), Phil Rankinson (Pennsylvania) . . . Faces of those who won't dress for this year's National Invitational Tournament. And there's no tear in your beer as you stagger to find out just how your ticket stub really reads.

The Big Apple, NIT time, is a romance with emotion. You have an identity all your own in the city . . . You think you own it. You don't hunt for friends they find you. Whether in the Blarney Rock Bar or McCann's, your peers have no names. They have one thing in common—they're here for the Minutemen. And they should be some 5,000 strong once again. For the third time in four years the block surrounding the Garden will cater to the whims of Minuteman followers.

Although nearly two weeks away the Irish owners of the Blarney Rock are now counting their NIT coins. They make a killing. The big question they face is just how will they handle the rowdy SAE's who obviously will be at full strength for the March classic. As a tribute to departing seniors Charlie Peters and Tom Austin, every single resident of SAE was there to harass the Rams of Fordham. So was your friend and mine who danced to the tune of his own music on all the endlines.

The NIT is a family affair. It's a weekend for you; a weekend for I . . . If you saw but one, two, three, or the whole season, you might want to send St. Patrick's Day drunk in the city with the Minutemen and yes the 10,000 (I'm not kidding) Notre Dame fans who'll set weekend property damage in the Apple back a decade.

They'll come from Southern Cal, from Missouri, from New Brunswick, N.J., (Rutgers) and as Metropolitan as Manhattan itself. You'll argue who's better but in the end instead of fisticuffs, you'll simply exchange rounds. You'll sleep 8 in a room at the McAlpin Hotel and after the Minutemen stop Indiana Sunday night (just guessing) the manager will put up with you for another night. And even at that you're trying his patience. . .

Your rendezvous with insanity is still a couple of weeks away . . . But remember . . . 7-6 . . . was just yesterday . . . For many diehards, the NIT is an emotional Renaissance that seems to better explain why a crazy band of UMies did go to Oreno. There was faith. It was shown at the Palestra, at Oreno by 50 some odd, and now the Hail to the Chief serenade across the Harlem River to the gates of Madison Square Garden.

Yeah, the NIT is a time to get rah, rah . . . If you haven't yet, go to the Apple and visit those Irish bartenders at the Rock with their short hair, rolled up white shirts, and their redneck responses on "why they don't have barbers in Amherst". And if you really get on their ass they may even card you just on principle.

Now you've got time to think. The regular season is ever and for the third time in four years we're back in New York. What did it all mean to you. Was it real? Of all the uncertainty there's something very definite . . . On the corner of 33rd street, the pretzel man stands alone . . . If you're in the city . . . You're welcome to step and chat . . .

Westover Cases May Be Dismissed

Students demonstrated last spring at Westover Air Force against the Vietnam War. The trials of the more than twelve-hundred persons arrested at that time have now been dismissed. (MDC Photo by Gib Fullerton)

By CINDY GONET

Trials still pending in regard to demonstrations held last spring at Westover Air Force Base "now may be dismissed" Judge James Landers of Chicopee said Tuesday.

Landers said that those defendants will receive a letter before Friday of this week offering three positions. The individual may (1) appear in court to request dismissal, (2) autherize William Norris, an attorney who represented demonstrators without cost last spring, to appear in court, or (3) appear for trial.

Those persons arrested have to only check one of the three positions and mail it to Chicopee. Dates for hearings in court have been set for the five Tuesdays in May.

According to Judge Landers, there were 1,263 defendants, 7 arrested juveniles, and 5 persons sent to Hampton County House of Correction in Springfield.

Paid were 148 $10 fines and 538 $10 nolo contendre fines. This leaves about 540 persons which the letter/dismissal can apply to.

Landers told MDC that the main reason for the reappraisal of the demonstrators' situation was due to the overall expense to the town of Chicopee. He explained, "The whole process of granting trials to the demonstrators could cost us more than $50,000."

Landers continued, saying, "We have made a complete reevaluation of the situation, and agree that the demonstrators cases be dismissed. We fully recognize the depth and sentitivity of the demonstrators' feelings and have weighed this with the expense to the town of Chicopee."

Speaking for the town, Norris and himself, Landers said, "We philosophically sympathize with them and want an end to this war, which it seems we have. Withdrawal of troops and prisoners and the peace talks seem to indicate a time of peace between North and South Vietnam and the United States."

Most of the demonstrators were UMass faculty and students. The protestors sat in two circles leading to the Chicopee base to show their objection to the continuance of the war in Vietnam.

Charges against the defendants included breach of peace, disorderly conduct and preventing persons from reaching their place of employment.

The non-violent civil disobedience at Westover came as a result of the addition of men and planes to Vietnam from the base. Demonstrations lasted over three weeks.

Special Ed. Students

Students Ask Recognition

By CHERYL WALSH

Some 14 students responding to an emergency call to organize special students and other disaffected graduate students met Tuesday afternoon to formulate demands and organize policies which they intend to bring before the School of Education this week.

Ellen Murray, spokeswoman for the Special Student Organization, said the main purpose was "to have the University recognize we exist." Special students are allowed to take up to 12 credits or two courses a semester, the end of which, if they have not been selected for a degree program, their course of study ends.

Many of the special students who attended the meeting voiced the opinion that they came to the University with "unwritten assurances" of entering a degree program. The UMass master's degree program has been cut from 600 to 128 slots. An alternative for special students, the Continuing Education Program, in which a special student can take additional courses, has also been cut.

Peggy Sablove, co-ordinator of the Women's Caucus and not a special student, proposed that the group formulate a specific demand to be brought before Dwight Allen, Dean of the School of Education. This would include a definite criteria for admission to the degree program and admittance of the present special students to the degree program. Ms. Sablove stated that "wild card" admittance practices have been reported and such a policy could be used to admit the special students.

The group as a whole, dissatisfied with their "unequal status" and claiming to be unable to reach responsible sources individually, united, hoping to be recognized in the spring re-organization of the School of Education.

If the School of Ed. has no power to meet their demands the group plans to direct their grievances at the administration.

The next general meeting to further formulate plans for all interested special students will be held Wednesday, March 14 at 3 o'clock in room 22 of the School of Education.

SGA President Referendum Today

By THOMAS R. BORKOWSKI

A referendum is being held today to determine the means by which the President of the Student Government Association will be elected this spring.

The three alternatives include election by: 1) an electoral college (of the Area Governments and the Student Senate); 2) the Student Senate (as is presently done); or 3) direct vote of the students.

The proposed electoral college would allocate its votes as follows: 9 votes each to the Southwest Assembly and the Commuter Assembly Executive Council; 6 votes each to the Central, Northeast, Orchard Hill, and Sylvan Area Governments and the Greek Council; and 48 votes to the Student Senate. The S.G.A. President would be the candidate receiving a majority of the votes cast by the electoral college.

With the Student Senate electing the president, each senator would be given a vote, and the candidate receiving a majority of the votes cast would become the S.G.A. President.

The third proposal would elect as president the candidate who receives a majority of the votes cast by the undergraduate students of the University.

According to Tom Meriuzzi, the member of the Student Senate Governmental Affairs Committee who is in charge of the referendum, the following polling hours are in effect: 6:00 to 9:00 p.m. for dormitory residents and the Greeks in their respective houses, and 9:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. for the Commuters in the Dukes Room of the Student Union. He also noted that 25% of the students (about 4500) must cast votes for the referendum to be binding on the Senate.

Where There's Smoke...

By MDC STAFF

It was an average day in the Student Union. The normal activities of the afternoon were hardly disturbed by a small fire in the projection room of the Student Union Ballroom at about 4 o'clock this afternoon. Most studentr went about their usual business of drifting in and out to classes, reading the Collegian, and buying candy at the Lobby counter, unaware of the heavy smoke that filled a portion of the Union for about half an hour.

The fire was attributed to a shorted ventilator motor fan.

There is no damage estimate at present, nor were any injuries reported.

Athletic Department

Discipline Rules Illegal?

By DON GLICKSTEIN

(Editor's note: This is the second in a series of articles about the Athletic Department and athletics on campus.)

The Athletic Department's discipline policy, under certain circumstances, is illegal and may result in the violation of athletes' constitutional rights.

The policy, approved on November 17, 1969 by the Athletic Council, states that the Athletic Director may suspend an athlete from participating in intercollegiate or intramural sports if he or she has student judicial or civil action pending, or if the athlete brought "unfavorable publicity to the University".

"That language is incredibly vague," said assistant law professor Samuel Goldman in an interview Monday. Under the policy, the Athletic Director can act as a "super-court", Goldman said, and impose a penalty irregardless of what action the student judicial or civil court system takes.

He noted that the policy permits two penalties for the "same basic offense".

Attorney for Students, Richard Howland, said that the Athletic Department could legally only regulate a student's behavior if that behavior was directly related to his or her performance as an athlete. Thus, an athlete could not be suspended for drinking, but he or she could be suspended for getting drunk and affecting the athletic performance.

"Publicity is not the business of college athletics," Howland said.

Since the policy was promulgated, "not a one" student has been suspended from sports under it, according to Assistant Athletic Director Robert W. O'Connell.

The policy was adopted by the Athletic Council after two students had been suspended from the football team by former Dean Warren McGuirk and former coach Vic Fusia. The suspension resulted because the students were involved in a civil action which, according to Athletic Council minutes, "also brought unfavorable publicity to the Department of Athletics".

During the Council debate on the proposed discipline policy, Dean of Students William Field argued for an amendment which would state the rights and freedoms of students. However, the policy was approved without such a statement, but, recorded the minutes, "with the understanding that a later date a footnote may be added to the policy which would spell out these rights and freedoms of students."

No student bill of rights has been adopted in the ensuing 3-1/2 years.

Court action that could conceivably result from the discipline policy would be similar to cases involving Muhammad Ali and pitcher Jim Bouton.

Ali's boxing license had been revoked by the New York State Athletic Commission when Ali refused induction into the military on religious and moral grounds. The Commission had argued that Ali's conduct was "detrimental to the best interests of boxing."

A 1970 Federal Appeals Court decision ruled that the Commission's action was "arbitrary and unreasonable", and that 90 convicted felons, including Rocky Graziano and Sonny Liston, had been allowed to fight.

The Bouton case never reached the courts.

Bouton had written a spicy book, Ball Four, that portrayed baseball as a sport of fun-loving, pill-popping, "beaver-shooting" (girl-watching) men.

According to Bouton, baseball commissioner Bowie Kuhn advised him of his (Kuhn's) "displeasure with these writings". Kuhn could not legally suspend Bouton, however, because, Marvin Miller from the Major League Players Association advised, "You can't subject someone to future penalties on such vague criteria."

There is no written appeals procedure for the athletic discipline policy, according to Dean Field, but he "presumed" that appeals would go from the Athletic Director to the Athletic Council to the Chancellor.

Discipline Policy

Exemplary conduct, both on and off the field, is expected of students who engage in intercollegiate athletics. Any conduct of such nature that it may result in civil action, or action by the student judiciary, or bring unfavorable publicity to the University, shall be investigated by the Director of Athletics, who shall, if he considers this appropriate impose a suspension from intercollegiate athletics participation.

This penalty shall be exclusive of attendant civil action or University judicial procedures. The Director of Athletics shall similarly investigate and impose suitable participation penalties against students who are in violation of acceptable standards of conduct during Intramural Program events.

Potential Fire Hazards Investigated

By MARY MULLOY

The Amherst Fire Department and the UMass Environmental Health and Safety Department are currently working together to remedy potential fire hazards in high-rise buildings on campus.

Robert Gleason, Director of the Environmental Health and Safety Dept., said that the situation is a "complex problem requiring quite a bit of study, as there has been much misinformation circulating concerning fires occurring in the past."

He said that Chief John T. Doherty of the Amherst Fire Dept. and other members involved are still in the "process of thinking", and need to know "a lot of different viewpoints."

Chief Doherty declines any comment at the moment. He said, however, that he is working on the problem and will probably comment by March 8, at the earliest.

The initial inquiries were made by Professor Howard O. Brogan of the UMass English Dept. approximately eight months ago at a Faculty Senate meeting. Professor Brogan said that at the time he didn't speak from knowledge, but rather from apprehension stemming from a report delivered by Vice Chancellor Robert W. Gage to the Faculty Senate.

According to Robert Wellman, President of the Faculty Senate, "Dr. Gage essentially dismissed the question, saying there was really no hazard imminent." Wellman became involved when the problem was recently re-raised in the Senate, and says the situation is "grave and serious" and that "it is inexcusable that this was not dealt with at an earlier date."

The major problem is that the high-rise elevators are activated by heat; a fire would immediately call the elevator to the floor of the fire, thus trapping any persons on the elevator.

In 1971, Charles Shafner, one of the spokesmen for the International Conference on Fire Safety in High-Rise Buildings, reported that "in every fire we've had in New York City in the last year or two, all of the elevators have gone to the floor of the fire. Fortunately, nobody has been in them. But if each elevator were packed you would have had a catastrophe."

Gleason, commenting on this, said that to his knowledge there has only been two major high-rise fires in New York City last year on which this evidence was based. It is his opinion that other reasons besides the heat of the fire may have called the elevator.

SW Plans Drug Workshops

Room-to-Move in its continuing program to reach people with personal problems is working with the staff of the Resource Center in Hampden Dining Commons. Room-to-Move's primary concern in Southwest is drugs. R-to-M will be sponsoring introductory educational workshops in the use and abuse of psychedelics, heroin, barbituates, quaaludes, amphetamines and alcohol.

An additional group of introductory workshops are available. They have been designed for people who are interested in their own personal growth, spiritual or otherwise, a chance to experience different ways of being. Among the workshops being offered are Kundalini Yoga; an evening of chanting and meditation, fantasy workshops which will enable the participants to experience and express fantasies in a creative way, workshops in Altered States of Consciousness which will work to give an experimental view of different levels of consciousness, Movement and Body Awareness, and Bio-Energetics.

Interested groups or individuals can contact the C.R.C. at 6-2416 or 6-2892 for more information. Sign-up sheets for each workshop will be posted individually in the hope that enough people can be gathered to form a group for each workshop.

Ed. Center Planned

By CHRIS ROSSOMANDO

A rationale to establish a Student Center for Educational Research will be submitted for approval tonight to the Student Senate by the Academic Affairs Committee.

Marshall Spriggs, coordinator pro-tem of the group presenting the proposals, explained the proposed center at a meeting of the Academic Affairs Committee last night. The center would conduct research, develop proposals, and lobby for their implementation in the areas of Academic Affairs and Rents and Fees. The latter two are areas where the SGA "has needed extensive research and sound alternative proposals." according to an outline of the proposal.

According to Spriggs, the center will be a "Student-run, professionally staffed organization which will be as self-governing as possible, yet still remain responsive to the Student Senate's research wishes."

In other business, the committee moved to provide $200 to the Black Science Society, a group which provides guidance to minorities in the areas of the hard sciences.

James Park, spokesman for the Society, said, "the group was formed last semester to help answer the "need to increase the number of minority people in the hard sciences and to help them once they're here."

In other business, a committee was created to discuss students' rights under faculty unionization. This was in response to a report submitted by Laura Emmons, chairperson of the Personnel Policies Subcommittee.

Rent Hike: How High?

By SHARON HUGHES

The Rents and Fees Committee of the Student Senate continued their battle to keep a rent increase expected this fall as low as possible in a meeting with Vice Chancellors Thomas Campion of Administrative Services and Robert W. Gage of Student Affairs last night.

The committee maintained that no expenditures for educational programs or supplies should be taken from rent monies. "We feel it is the responsibility of the state to provide educational supplies and the responsibility of the dormitories to provide shelter and recreational facilities", said chairperson Mike Gregory. Gage replied that the state may be reluctant to support dormitory courses because commuters would not benefit.

The committee stated they are not against the idea of educational programs but the problem is "to find an alternate source of funding".

Additional recommendations include the publication of how rent monies are being utilized and state responsibility for expenses of the office of Environmental Concerns.

Budget Review

By BRIAN COYNE

The Student Senate Budgets Committee continued its review of rationales last night of student groups under recently adopted funding criteria.

Groups receiving funding included Afro-American Student Society, Juvenile Opportunity Extentions (JOE), and SWAP. The Young Socialist Alliance, and The Black Student Psychological Association were refused recommendations for funding.

Ahora, an organization for the Spanish-speaking community, received an appropriation of $8,555 from the committee. Activities planned with this money include a bilingual newspaper, speakers, recruitment of students to the University, concerts and possibly a regional conference hosted by UMass.

The committee advised the Black Student Psychological Association to seek affiliation with the CCEBS Academic Affairs Committee, enabling it to receive funding. The group plans to give counseling service, seminars and services for pre-school age children.

Changing Campuses?

Students attending or who have attended the Amherst Campus as full-time degree candidates and desiring to change to the Boston Campus must submit a change application.

Applications may be obtained at the Admissions Office, Room 255, Whitmore Hall.

This year the submission deadline for September '73 campus change request is March 15, 1973. Candidates submitting applications after March 15 cannot be guaranteed an opportunity of campus change.

"Nothing Was Getting Done..."

Senate: Still No 3rd World

By STEPHEN FINE

A new effort is being made in the Student Senate to include minority groups as student senators.

When the Student Senate voted early last semester to guarantee 15 seats to the Third World Community, sponsors hoped that this move would encourage Third World participation.

Supporters of the measure had claimed the few hundred blacks on campus were scattered around so that when they were elected they had no constituency but rather were representing white students. Furthermore, they claimed, the few blacks elected had withdrawn after a few weeks because they felt powerless in a largely white organization.

A meeting was held Monday between Student Senate officers and Third World representatives to discuss the Third World Election District, and how to make it work better than it did last semester.

Denise Magnell, a senator who attended the meeting Monday, said discussion developed that some of the Third World senators had not attended Senate meetings this semester because they thought elections for their seats occurred every semester.

Senate elections occur at the beginning of the school term in September.

The principal outcome of the meeting was to allow those senators who had left to return to hold elections for those Third World senators who are not returning and to have informal classes on how to deal with the parliamentary procedure and laws used in the Senate.

Rodney Burkes, a spokesman for the Third World senators, said that of the 15 senators, only four will return. "Three of the others have medical excuses, two I can't get in touch with, and the other seats will be up for election," he added.

He told MDC that most of the 15 senators are freshmen who had thought the Senate life was 'glamorous', but when they saw 'glamorous', but when they saw nothing came about of their work, they left.

"At first we caucused and took attendance ourselves to make sure people came," Burkes reported. He said, however, after seven weeks, people became bored with the parliamentary procedure used when nothing was getting done.

Burkes said he will go back into the Senate if he can get three credits for working on the Senate and two for working on its committees. At present, nobody gets credits.

"Right now, I'm taking a class on Wednesday nights which is more constructive than sitting around four hours and getting nothing done," Burkes said in an interview.

He also said that John Hogan's resignation as Speaker of the Senate confirmed his beliefs about the body.

Hogan had blamed "ineffectiveness" of the Senate as one of his reasons for resignation.

"Logistically speaking, the problem was their not knowing about the election procedure," Ms. Magnell said.

"The real problem, however, is being a minority group and being burdened with coping with the rules that they've never benefitted by."

Ms. Magnell, who says that she has been in the Senate longer than anyone she knows of, said she knew of one black senator who had stayed two years.

She said, however, that the "white atmosphere" that dominates the body, pinpoints minority groups immediately when they don't show up.

"There is approximately a 30 per cent turnover of students in the Senate, but no one ever says anything when white kids are alienated by the system and don't show up," she stated.

This feeling was confirmed by Burkes, one of the senators who said he didn't go because of ignorance of the election procedure.

V.C. Ask U.S. To Mediate

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP)—The Viet Cong claimed Tuesday that the United States shares responsibility for resolving an impasse over the exchange of Vietnamese prisoners and asked it to intervene with the Saigon government.

In a letter to Maj. Gen. Gilbert H. Woodward, the senior U.S. representative to the four-party Joint Military Commission, the Viet Cong accused Saigon of failing to carry out provisions of the peace agreement concerning the release of Vietnamese civilian and military personnel.

The Viet Cong letter said this "incorrect attitude . . . has seriously hindered not only all projects related to the release of military and civilian personnel detained by the two South Vietnamese parties, but has also paralyzed all of the activities of the four-party Joint Military Commission."

The Viet Cong appeal to Washington was disclosed at about the same time Secretary of State William P. Rogers told Congress he expected the controversy over Vietnamese prisoners to be settled soon.

"I'm satisfied it is going to be worked out in the very near future," he told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in Washington.

Bui Tin, spokesman for the North Vietnamese delegation, had said earlier that Hanoi's Le Duc Tho and U.S. presidential adviser Henry A. Kissinger had an understanding that the United States would do everything it could to resolve the question of civilian prisoners.

The deadline for repatriation of all U.S. and Vietnamese military prisoners and prisoners of other foreign countries as well as American and foreign civilian prisoners is March 28, as set forth in the Paris agreement.

The Viet Cong and North Vietnamese delegation have vowed to boycott meetings of the Joint Military Commission and its subcommission on prisoners until the dispute over the number of prisoners to be exchanged is resolved.

Rogers Doubts Political Settlement For Vietnam

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Secretary of State William P. Rogers told the House Foreign Affairs Committee Tuesday he is confident a military peace can be maintained in Vietnam but said prospects for a political settlement are questionable.

Testifying about the internationsal agreement to support the cease-fire in Vietnam, Rogers said: "I do not expect there will be any major military engagements in that area. I hope I'm right."

The secretary, under persistent questioning, said he thought the opposing factions in Vietnam had decided war was not going to solve the problems of Indochina. Therefore, Rogers continued, "there are going to be political problems."

On this score, he described himself as "hopeful, but realistic."

On another matter, Rogers assured the committee that any assistance program for North Vietnam would require prior congressional approval.

"There will be no attempt to hide anything from Congress," he said in the face of some evident hostility.

One committee member, Rep Wayne Hays, D-Ohio, told Rogers: "I'm not going to accept money for North Vietnam when there is no money for housing for the elderly." Hays also threatened to stall his subcommittee's review of the State Department budget and said he might sponsor an amendment to bar any funds for Hanoi without direct approval of Congress.

Rep. H. R. Gross, R-Iowa, said bluntly: "I would not give North Vietnam one cockeyed dime for reparations."

Rogers agreed. He said "No one in the administration would give them one cockeyed dime for reparations." But he said a rehabilitation program was another matter and the administration probably will unveil its proposal in a month.

"We will come to Congress to ask for authority for such a program," he added.

Antiwar Statements Made Under 'Duress'

By FRANK N. HAWKINS JR.
Associated Press Writer

CLARK AIR BASE, Philippines (AP)—Most American war prisoners who signed anti-war statements during captivity did so under extreme duress or because of torture, military informants said Tuesday.

The sources said one prisoner told them the North Vietnamese frequently used a minor grievance as an excuse to bear down on one man in an attempt to break him.

In one case, they reported, an American prisoner was forced to sit in a cell on a small wooden stool for days at a time without sleep. Others were put in stocks like Pilgrim sinners.

"After a period of time they would tell someone anything they wanted to hear," an official said.

The war prisoners returned to Clark this week have discussed life in their Communist jails. But military authorities say they do not want any details of their story told because they fear for the 286 Americans still in captivity.

As a result, the scenes described by military officers remain short on detail. The prisoners themselves are forbidden to discuss their captivity with newsmen except in the most general terms.

In addition to physical abuse that included beatings, cigarette burns and suspension from the ceiling by the hands, the military sources said many men spent long periods in solitary confinement.

This included terms of 19 months to 2-1/2 years. In some cases prisoners were shackled and forced to kneel on a concrete floor, the sources added, and those put into old-fashioned stocks were freed only for brief periods to go to the toilet or eat.

The sources said the POWs generally agreed no one willingly gave antiwar statements.

"Some of the guys were actually very hostile to the North Vietnamese," an official said.

One POW reportedly was asked by his captors what he would do if he were released.

"I'd return to the United States, learn how to fly and come back and bomb you bastards ," he was reported to have replied.

In one case after a man was subjected to severe treatment, he signed a document as the Communists demanded. Then he reportedly told them: "Now you have your statement, but you haven't won."

Despite the abuse and hardships, the level of defiance among the POWs is reported to have remained high.

One prisoner said he believed regular physical exercise was the key to staying alive. At one point, he is reported to have said, one group appeared to be weakening badly. The POW advised them to begin exercising. Those who did eventually gained their strength back. One man who did not died.

In the early years, the North Vietnamese apparently did as much as possible to block communication among the POWs and prevent any strong prison organization. The POWs were kept apart, permitted to speak only with their cell mates.

To pass messages and news from one cell or group to another, the POWs devised a code system never cracked by the North Vietnamese. This included hand signals and tapping on the walls.

News also was passed around as men were transferred through the five camps where military prisoners were generally held.

These were the infamous Hanoi Hilton, a former French prison in downtown Hanoi; Dogpatch, in the mountains north of Hanoi; the Zoo, about 12 blocks from the Hilton; the Briarpatch on the outskirts of Hanoi, also known as the Country Club, and Plantation Gardens, near Gia Lam airport.

Indians May Halt Cease-Fire

By JAMES F. WILSON
Associated Press Writer

WOUNDED KNEE, S.D. (AP) — The Indians holding Wounded Knee threatened to call off their cease-fire with federal marshals Tuesday night unless the Interior Department intervenes immediately in a tribal dispute among the Oglala Sioux.

Lawyers representing the 200 Indians who seized Wounded Knee a week ago held brief talks with an Interior Department official and said there must be an immediate suspension of the tribal constitution and a referendum to hold new elections.

American Indian Movement (AIM) leaders in Wounded Knee demand the immediate removal from office of Richard Wilson, president of the 13,000-member tribe. They also want protection from what they allege will be Wilson's strong-arm tactics against persons involved in the Wounded Knee action.

Charles G. Soller, an Interior spokesman, said the commissioner of Indian affairs would not go to Wounded Knee until the village is abandoned by the militants and the incident ended.

Raymond Roubideaux, the AIM negotiator, told Soller, "Asking them to lay down their arms is asking them to commit suicide."

Vernon Long, a tribal civil rights leader, told Soller, "We cannot wait for two weeks. If you can't help us, we're not going to wait. We're going to get it over today."

Soller replied, "I have no suggestions to alleviate this problem." He told Indian leaders he would confer with Washington and report back later Tuesday.

Meanwhile Dennis Banks, a leader of the militant Indians, told his followers in Wounded Knee, "We all know we're in a war and we're beginning to feel the first pangs of war--pangs of hunger and pangs of cold. We know they're going to try to starve us out or freeze us out. But this is our kind of war. We've been fighting hunger and cold all our lives."

Banks warned his people things could get worse. "What's most important is that we are not doing this for ourselves, but for our children and our unborn," Banks said.

William Clayton, U.S. district attorney from Sioux Falls and a government negotiator, said he had been waiting at the roadblock near Wounded Knee all morning for a call to meet in the tepee where the talks have taken place.

HHH Calls Nixon Cuts Illegal

By DON McLEOD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey said Tuesday that President Nixon violated the law in cutting domestic spending, and he urged Congress to insure funds for the nation's problems.

At the same time, House Democratic leaders joined in sponsoring legislation against what they called Nixon's "unwarranted invasion of the legislative process" by impounding money Congress authorized to be spent.

Five mayors, here for a joint meeting of the National League of Cities and the United States Conference of Mayors, asked Congress to buoy manpower programs despite Nixon's cutbacks.

"This administration wishes the problems of our cities were over," San Francisco Mayor Joseph Alioto told the Senate subcommittee on Manpower and Employment. "But no amount of rhetoric is going to cure the reality of people without jobs."

At the White House, Republican leaders of Congress met with President Nixon. Rep. Gerald Ford, R-Mich., said the main purpose was to pledge the support of congressional Republicans in resisting efforts which he said Democrats were making to force loose impounded funds.

Sen. Hugh Scott, R-Pa., said "Expecting Democrats to hold down spending is like having an alcoholic to be your bartender."

Humphrey's attack on Nixon centered on the cuts in domestic spending, particularly impoundment of $6 billion appropriated by Congress to fight water pollution.

"Mr. President, you violated the law," Humphrey said in a speech to the municipal leaders. "You cut that law in half by presidential edict. I consider that a violation of the law, and it is."

Humphrey, D-Minn., introduced legislation in the Senate calling for cutting "the fat from a bloated, overgrown military budget" and reforming the tax structure, with the savings going to domestic problems.

The Senate was asked to "devote an estimated $10 billion to $14 billion saved and earned to the pressing needs of our nation—employment, health care, urban rehabilitation, rural economic development, housing, education, pollution control and other constructive national and local programs."

Under the House bill, the President would be required to notify Congress within 10 days after impounding specific funds. Congress would have 60 days to study the action. If it took no action, the impoundment would be approved.

Gray Against Revealing More Watergate Info

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—L. Patrick Gray III warned senators Tuesday they run the risk of drying up FBI sources if they continue to spread details of the Watergate investigation on the public record.

He also said he would have preferred that White House counsel John Dean III not be present while FBI agents interviewed White House personnel in the Watergate case but that he acceeded because the information was needed.

Gray said the senators, members of the Judiciary Committee, had reached the point in his confirmation hearing for director of the FBI where "I may be impacting upon national security, constitutional due process and the right to privacy as I respond to questions."

Gray, who has served as acting FBI director since May 3 last year, asked the committee's guidance "in order that matters of national security are not discussed in the public forum."

"People will talk to the FBI," he said. "The proof is here in this Watergate investigation. They will and they did furnish information one-on-one with our agents at their own request, but they will not continue to do so if we continue to spread this information on the public record."

FBI summaries submitted to the committee while it was in recess Monday showed that Dean sat in on interviews which the FBI had with White House personnel about the bugging of Democratic party headquarters at the Watergate last year.

At the White House, deputy press secretary Gerald L. Warren said the White House staff "completely and thoroughly co-operated" with the FBI investigation. He pictured Dean as having been helpful to the FBI in expediting scheduling of interviews.

Dean headed a White House probe of the Watergate affair.

The FBI summary of the first month of inquiry, made public Monday, mentioned the Nixon campaign committee. It quoted an unidentified source from within the Committee for the re-election of the President as telling agents that campaign officials "were sending FBI agents on fishing expeditions to keep them from getting the truth."

Company Trims Use Of Germ Killer

By G. DAVID WALLACE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—The manufacturer of a widely used substitute for hexachlorophene has told cosmetic makers the company no longer will provide the germ-killing substitute for use in vaginal deodorants.

But it still may be used in other deodorant products such as soaps and antiperspirants.

The germ killer, triclosan, is one of five antibacterial agents whose safety has been questioned by a government appointed panel of doctors. Triclosan's manufacturer, Ciba-Geigy, contends it is safe for certain uses.

The germ killer has found increasingly widespread use since the Food and Drug Administration virtually banned hexaclorophene last September.

Triclosan replaced hexachlorophene in Right Guard and Arrid deodorants as well as FDS feminine hygiene deodorant spray. It is used also in Irish Spring deodorant soap.

Ciba-Geigy, which markets triclosan exclusively under the trade name Ingrasan DP 300, began notifying customers in the past few weeks of its restriction, but is continuing to supply the germ killer for soaps, surgical scrubs, underarm deodorants and antiperspirants.

"We have found nothing hazardous or untoward or effective about Irgasan," said a spokesman for Ciba-Geigy. The company has conducted safety tests for use of the agent in other deodorant products, but not for vaginal deodorants, the spokesman said.

Before the Bagels, Moses ate Pita

Pita (Sahara or Syrian bread) is just one of the new and different items to be found in MUNCHYS' developing line of Jewish and Kosher foods. Here's a new suggestion for filling this ancient bread....and your stomach:

2-7 ounce cans of tuna
2 hard boiled eggs
1/3 cup lemon juice
1/4 cup chopped olives
1/4 teaspoon thyme, salt, coriander, oregano, and chilipepper to taste

Flake tuna and chop eggs. Combine all ingredients in a bowl. Fill the Pita pockets with the filling and add tomatoes, cucumbers, and pickles. Serves six hungry people.

This grinder-like creation goes great with a tall, frosty, coke. Finally, finish your culinary coup d'etat with some of Kasanof's delicious pastries.

All of the above ingredients (with the exception of the spices) can be easily found in the Franklin, Hampden, or Worcester MUNCHYS Mini-markets. Open from 9:00am to 10:00pm daily.

Bus Service Planned For Belchertown School

By MARK VOGLER

Residents of the Belchertown State School may be using the new University of Massachusetts Student Senate Transit Service according to project director William P. Goss.

Goss, a mechanics and aero engineering professor at the University, said this week that he had received a request from Dr. Benjamin Ricci of Amherst, president of the Belchertown State School Friends Assn. about the likelihood of a stop being established for residents.

"Since we are working according to a policy established by the federal government, and since the bus is public and available to anyone, we told them it's alright to ride it--providing the residents walk up to the center of town," Goss said.

However, Goss said a special stop at the state school could not be arranged at this time since the routes and time tables have already been established to be researched for the federal government.

The operation, which began three weeks ago, is receiving $475,000 from the federal government for the period of April of last year until April of 1974.

Goss said that it is very possible that a stop will be established at the state school after the federal grant expires. Other money being used for the operation includes an additional $157,000 from the University administration and $30,000 from the Student Senate.

Dr. Willis Jones, superintendent of Belchertown State School, said that residents would be allowed to use the facility "only under adequate supervision".

"We would like to see the service available to those who are ready to re-enter the community; and we must assure ourselves that each of the people who use it are adequate to accept the responsibility," Jones said.

Jones also said that the facility would be used by those residents of the rehabilitation unit "as part of their orientation for community living", adding that "not just any resident would be allowed to use it."

Mrs. Barbara Valier, unit director in charge of the vocation and rehabilitation unit, called the new facility "fantastic".

"It's just great. Belchertown can't really offer the residents much in terms of bus transportation, and this service really suits their need."

Mrs. Valier is in charge of 78 of the more progressed patients at the school who are being prepared to go back to the community. Some are vocationally employed.

She said the residents under her care were informed of the facility last Wednesday but so far nobody has used the transit system.

She said that residents who want to take the bus will be supervised the first few times by a staff member "until they are taught how to do it on their own."

"It's a learning experience for these residents we mustn't forget, so that means these residents must be trained how to do it for awhile," she said.

Mrs. Valier also said that a buddy system would be in order. It was her opinion that the facility should not be used only by the members of her unit, but by anyone from the state school who desires to use it.

"However," she cautioned, "nobody's going to be put on that bus who's incapable."

Students Have Concerto Date

The University music department will present a program of concerto music featuring student soloists from the University Symphony Orchestra.

The concert, the first of its kind in the area, will be performed on March 15 at 8:30 p.m. in Memorial Hall Auditorium. It will be open to the public, free of charge.

Featured will be Franceschini's "Concerto for Two Trumpets", with student soloists Sylvia Gaviglio and Vincent Monaco, "Cello Concerto" by Boccherini, performed by C. Fredrick Hood, III, and Vaughn Williams' "Oboe Concerto", featuring Karen Barch.

Also included in the program will be "Concerto pour Batterie et Petit Orchestre" by Milhaud, with soloist James Barnes, Rogers' "Soliloquy for Flute and Strings", featuring Barbara Rohnert, and Mozart's "Clarinet Concerto", performed by Russell Scott.

Zaj To Present An 'Etcetera' Here

An avant-garde group from Madrid called Zaj will offer one of its famous "etceteras", or concert/happenings March 16 when the group visits UMass. A single performance will be at 8 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium, under auspices of the UMass Fine Arts Council.

Zaj (pronounced "zach") has no meaning in itself and it may become "zej", "zig", "zoj", according to personal preference.

"Dada" (another word with no meaning in itself) was once described as the revolt of non-believers against mis-believers, and this may also be a description for Zaj. Its members believe in the objectivity of chance, one of the principal techniques of dada, and their concerts, or etceteras, are experimentations to make chance a part of art. Zaj compositions are simple notations of directions which open up, provoke possibilities, and provide images within which the performer might work.

Although Zaj members Juan Hidalgo and Walter Marchetti are skilled composers, their work cannot be described in musical terms only. Zaj does not divide things into musical and non-musical events. Material for Zaj action-music may be: silences, movements, gestures, words, places, people, the interaction of spectators and performers. Some Zaj publications will be on view in the University Art Gallery (125 Herter Hall) during the group's visit to UMass.

Tickets are available at $1 for UMass undergraduates and $1.50 for all others, and may be obtained from the Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall, Amherst, telephone (413) 545-0202. Remaining tickets will be available at Mahar Auditorium one hour before the group's performance.

Mardi Gras!!

By BILL CRIDER
Associated Press Writer

NEW ORLEANS (AP)—The hard-drinking celebration of Mardi Gras whooped onward Tuesday despite a pall of rain clouds and rumors of trouble and strife.

The forecast said rain. Heavy weather loomed in the west. But though gray clouds hung low there were glimmers of sunshine as Rex, the socialite King of Carnival, took over New Orleans.

Rumors persisting over official denials were that Mardi Gras was the target date of another sniping episode, like the one at a downtown hotel here Jan. 7 which saw eight persons slain.

"Yeah, we heard all that," laughed Neil Gordon of Baton Rouge, La., who wore a polka-dot clown's suit and a cherry red nose. "But I can't think of a better day to die."

"Sure I heard that stuff," said Marvin Hamm of San Francisco, who was promenading in the trim suit of lights worn by bullfighters. "But the only way I die today is if I run into a bull."

"It almost kept us home," said Dennis Rousse of New Orleans, an Indian towing a pretty squaw along crowded Bourbon Street. "But I said, what a way to go."

The crowd, which gets up to a million strong, was way down during the morning. It swelled rapidly as skies held off and streets dried.

It had rained all day Monday, forcing cancellation of the Mardi-Gras-eve parade of Proteus, god of the sea, keeping tourists indoors and soaking the padless "street people" lurking around the French Quarter. But the rain stopped before dawn.

Senators

"Parliamentary procedure is very immature. The atmosphere is very phoney in the Senate when people get up just to hear themselves talk," he said.

Larry Ladd, Student Government Assn. President, who attended the meeting, agreed that procedure used in the Senate was alienating.

"The initial apportionment plan was instituted to stop racism, but didn't go far enough. Fundamentally the system used in the Senate is based on white values and not open to any other kind of styles," he said.

Ladd believes that to survive in the Senate a person must have knowledge of parliamenta.y procedure, must have ··kills developed in writing memos, rhetorical skills and a high tolerance in general.

"The Senate freaks out anybody who goes for the first time," he maintained.

Ladd sees white students as having acquired these skills in high schools during their participation in extracurricular activities, while the inner city schools that blacks attend didn't put the same emphasis on these.

Who's Handicapped?

By KRIS FLETCHER

(Editor's Note: This is the first in a series of articles dealing with the problems of handicapped veterans at UMass.)

Imagine yourself as a double amputee returning home from duty in Vietnam; once a very agile person, fun loving and ambitious, faced with a long life ahead, only now missing two once strong and healthy legs. Pretty grim story? That's not the half of it. According to U.S. News & World Report, in the 11 years and one month of fighting in Vietnam, 303,622 American servicemen were wounded, a very large number were left permanently disabled.

These men have a disability, but it is the rest of us who make them handicapped. The disabled learn to live with their disability. They become stronger in many other ways. For instance, how many push ups do you think you could do in a wheelchair? Try 250 at one time, then increase by 10 tomorrow. The disabled learn to adapt their activities of daily living. They DO continue, and THEY do a good job of it. The problem lies when WE create barriers for them—and more often than not we do it unconsciously. They face physical barriers which we take for granted. Have you ever tried to fit a wheelchair into a bathroom stall? How about putting a dime into a pay phone while sitting down? Or try this one: wheel yourself cut of our Health Center down the 27 degree incline. The legal limit is 18 degrees. Watch out!!!

Aside from the physical barriers, these disabled people must face our social barriers, too. For example, have you ever caught yourself raising your voice and even shouting at a disabled person? Just because he may be a paraplegic doesn't mean he's deaf. We've got to stop thinking like this. The disabled are just like the rest of us except they have an unfortunate loss. Let's not double their loss. Respect the disabled as you would any other person. Give the disabled the chances and choices they are entitled to as human beings.

Participation

A referendum to determine the method of electing next year's Student Government Association President goes before students today. There are three available options.

1) The system which is currently in use, by which Student Senate members elect the President;

2) a system by which an electoral college (composed of area governments, Commuter Assembly Executive Council, Greek Council, and the Student Senate, with the Senate getting half the total electoral votes) chooses the SGA President;

3) a system by which all undergraduates elect the SGA President.

The first system can be immediately ruled out, simply because the SGA President is the leader of all UMass students, not just the Student Senate. The second system is a poor compromise between the first and third systems, mainly because it again gives too much weight to the Senate (48 out of 96 electoral votes).

The third system has many advantages. For one, it is by far the most democratic, and allows for more student participation in campus governance. The candidates and issues will become more public, and directed toward the people they affect.

For the referendum to be binding, at least 25% of all undergraduate students must vote today.

Use your vote to give yourself a voice in electing the SGA President.

Weak Legal Reasoning

The battle over abortion has been raging for nearly a decade, and the recent Supreme Court decisions in Roe v Wade and Doe v Bolton have done little to stem the tide of public debate over the question of whether a woman should have the right to "control her own body". It is as unlikely that the issue of abortion will now disappear from the realm of public discourse as it would have been for the issue of school desegregation to have been solved by Brown v Board of Education, particularly in view of the fact that several states have enacted recent legislation which flies directly in the face of the Supreme Court rulings. The purpose of this article is not to contribute another tract to the already voluminous stack of literature concerning the morality or immorality of abortion, though my personal views are inclined toward the latter view, but rather to examine the propriety of the Supreme Court ruling itself.

There is a long standing disagreement over whether the Supreme Court should make public policy or should exercise what is known as judicial self-restraint, and there are persuasive arguments on both sides. On one hand, it is virtually impossible for the Supreme Court to avoid making public policy due to the nature of the Constitution. Whenever the Court renders a decision it must subsume the minute particularities of the case at hand, under the broad generalities contained in the Constitution. Since the Constitution has absolutely nothing to say about many of the issues which now face the country, the Supreme Court can not avoid making public policy to some extent. On the other hand, however, it may be argued that if certain issues are inherently non-judiciable (that is, too far afield from questions of constitutional import), they should be left to the two democratically elected branches of government. While the dividing line between judiciable and non-judiciable issues is usually a thin one, abortion, in my view, falls into the latter of these two categories. The Constitution is simply not specific enough to allow for a legal decision on abortion and the Court was unwise to attempt such a decision.

While the Supreme Court should have stayed away from the issue of abortion, it compounded its error by handing down a weak decision. Essentially, the Court found that a woman's right to have an abortion during the first six months of fourteenth amendment, and that the fetus' right to life is not protected under the same amendment because the Constitution nowhere suggests that its use of the word "person" encompasses prenatal life. At the same time, the Court ruled that the state may prohibit abortions during the last three months of pregnancy because during this time the fetus is capable of sustaining its own life outside the womb and is "viable". But this seems to be an arbitrary medical distinction since during the first two trimesters, the fetus not only produces its own means of sustenance but is in a position to attain its third trimester "viability". Thus, it is impossible to determine at what time the fetus becomes a person by any empirically conclusive means, and the Supreme Court's attempt to do so constituted weak legal reasoning.

The one beneficial effect which the Supreme Court's ruling will have, will be to draw the focus of the abortion debate away from the irrelevant question of whether a woman has the right to control her own body and toward the more substantative question of whether (and, if so, at what point) the fetus is a human being. It should be remembered, however, that this is a question of morality and not of science or law.

UMess

This place is a pig sty. Yup, a real garbage pit and that's what I feel like bitching about this week. If my mother could see this campus as it is now, she'd probably faint from all the crap that's around here. Look at this place. It is filthy and dirty and it is all our fault because, let's face it, kiddies, we are all incredible slobs.

Slobs? Where? Here? Who? Me? Yeah you, and me, and the rest of the people who are even remotely involved with this University. We are all responsible for the filthy conditions that surround us. Now I'm not speaking about the difference in air pollution levels between North Pleasant and Lincoln Streets, (although that is kind of an interesting story in itself). Nor am I referring to the fact that our beloved Campus Pond should have a sign reading, "Warning: this water may be hazardous to your health." So if I'm not complaining about the air and/or water pollution situation what am I trying to say? How can UMass, which is located in the middle of a rural, farm country-type area be dirty? Well, walk down a dormitory corridor some Sunday morning, or strut through the Hatch just after lunch time and you'll see what I mean.

Outside my door, the corridor which I call home usually looks like a sanitation engineer's latest fantasy. This morning I found the ever present cigarette butts (a fairly commong plague around this campus) crushed into the beer-stained carpet, just as many used matches, a wide assortment of beer bottle tops and some unrolled miniature toilet paper samples. And I have to live amidst this garbage, mind you.

In one of the bathrooms in Gorman, each sink was clogged with either food scraps or shaving remnants. This truly makes washing your hands a whole new sensation. And sitting down for a snack in the Hatch with someone's used Kleenex hanging on the side of the table is really aesthetically pleasing, to a cockroach maybe.

Alright, maybe dropping paper on the floor in the Campus Center keeps my friend George from losing his job sweeping it up, but then again, paper is not dirt. Used coffee cups left behind on a table is. Are we that lazy that we can't drag our garbage to the baskets on the way out of the Coffee Shop? They are suspiciously located right outside the doors, in case you missed the ones inside the Hatch. Or are we that spoiled that we automatically assume that someone at sometime when we least expect it will clean up after us? I realize that the bulk of all the books that we carry sometimes makes it quite difficult to throw out a chewed-up popsicle stick, but let's make an honest attempt anyway. OK? Pick up your junk, yell at someone who hasn't. Try and sit near an ash tray and/or carry your own. Let's keep this place neat and clean so it won't become, as a Project 10 Heavy once named it, "The University of Messsotwoshits."

Balance Theory

By HOWARD BLOOM

It's supper time, and Johnny and his friends have just finished loading their trays with plenty of good dining commons food, and have entered the main dining room to look for a table to enjoy their meal at. As they walk in their search, Johnny trips over the leg of a chair and drops his tray of goodies on the floor, following it himself to the ground.

The dining room is in an uproar now, everyone having a good laugh at Johnny's expense. Tom, Johnny's friend, walks up beside his fallen friend, and urges him to make haste in picking himself up off the floor.

"You look like a real clod sprawled out down there with food all over your clothes. And what the hell are you smiling about?"

"This is fantastic. Just great. We're gonna win!"

"Win? Win what? Get up, you're embarrassing me."

"The big game is this Saturday, and now we're gonna win!"

Strange exchange, wouldn't you gree? It wouldn't seem quite so unusual if you knew that our Johnny is an advocate of what I will call "balance theory", the belief that all bad or unpleasant occurrences in one's life are eventually balanced off by positive experiences.

Haven't you ever had a stretch of bad luck that went on for a number of days, but through it all you knew that eventually, something good would happen to end the streak? If you have, and most people know the feeling, then you are a believer in balance theory. But some adherents take it one step further. Let's return to Johnny, picking up his grades at registration this time.

"Johnny, how'd you do?"

"Oh no! I knew this would happen if I studied. A 3.5! What am I gonna do? There's no way we'll win the championship now."

Johnny is a balance theory fanatic. He also believes that when something good happens to him, eventually something bad is going to occur to balance it off.

Among the adherents to balance theory, there are the optimists and the pessimists. The optimist believes that when something good happens to him, it is balancing something bad that happened in the past. When something bad happens to him, he believes there will be something good happening to him in the future. The pessimist, on the other hand, thinks that when something positive happens to him, a future negative experience will occur to balance that, and when something bad happens, it is merely balancing off a positive experience he had in the past.

There are rules to the balance theory game. The most important one says that a person cannot wilfully try to change his fate. For example, Johnny could not have deliberately tried to drop his tray back there in the hope of balancing it off with a win for his team. Or, more realistically, one cannot try to do poorly on an exam on purpose in the hope that he and his girlfriend will settle their differences.

Balance theory keeps the optimist going, obviously. If he splits up with his girlfriend, he keeps from getting depressed because he knows that he's in for a treat sometime in the future. So, ah...break a leg.

Letters To The Editor

She's Faithful, Dilligent, Competent...

To The Editor:

A critical situation exists here on Orchard Hill concerning Orchard Hill Area Government. As everyone knows, Orchard Hill is now under assessment by Whitmore concerning its value, effectiveness, and essence as a residential college. If Orchard Hill is to remain as a residential college, it has to show the administration that we are an important, functioning, valuable resource that can be tapped to offer students a rewarding residential learning experience, one not available anywhere else on campus. To really have on Orchard Hill a positive interaction between students, their living area, and their educational growth and maturity, Orchard Hill must make a situation and environment conducive to this type of interaction.

Also necessary is communication to solve conflicts between student groups on the Hill. This attempt at solving our problems between groups through communication cannot succeed if the communicative process is one in which one faction tries to tell the other what to do. This is not positive communication at all. The interaction between students, their living area, and their educational growth and maturity is analogous to a chemical reaction. A positive reaction producing a more aware, open and intellectually probing individual is not possible on Orchard Hill without O.H.A.G. serving as a catalyst.

Tonight there is an election to elect the president and vice-president of Orchard Hill area Government. One person running for the position of president is capable of seeing that O.H.A.G. is the catalyst needed for the educational interaction mentioned. This person is Cindy McGrath. She has very faithfully, diligently, and competently served Orchard Hill in many areas. Most importantly, she has served as O.H.A.G. secretary for the past year. For the past six months she has constantly and diligently been preparing herself for the very demanding job of president of O.H.A.G. She knows the Hill and is much more able than anyone I know to best utilize this knowledge and serve the Hill. As a counselor, is her opponent able or willing to spend the fifty or sixty hours a week necessary to fill the position of O.H.A.G. president? Cincy McGrath is willing and able.

In all my dealings concerning the Hill, I have been Grayson House president and a member of O.H.A.G. I have had her fullest cooperation and assistance. Her advice has never failed me. I have the strongest belief that O.H.A.G. could at this time have no better president than Cindy McGrath.

Tonight, get out and vote in an election that could very well determine the future of Orchard Hill as a residential college. As you, in your way as a concerned Hill voter, take that ballot and ask, "Who is best for the future of Orchard Hill", the answer is, Cindy McGrath.

Brad Hulme

...Experienced...

To The Editor:

It's not the first time nor the last time we will be bombarded with the usual pre-election dribble, but it is both fortunate and refreshing when a candidate emerges who has a history of creativity and competence. Cindy McGrath is such a candidate. In what now has become the most full-blown campaign in a popular election ever to appear on the UMass campus a few factors have been overlooked.

The past few years have seen student government develop into something more than material for yearbook biographies or a "vital sheet generator." It has always provided opportunities for leadership, but more recently it has become exceedingly sophisticated—incredibly complex bureaucratic procedures have enabled it to interact with and intelligently influence a modern university administration. Becoming sensitive to community needs and becoming able to act on them require skills which can only be acquired through the kind of experience Cindy McGrath possesses. Student government is no longer merely a hobby horse to prepare one for the business world.

As the present president of Orchard Hill, I have worked closely with Cindy McGrath for two years and I know she has both the sensitivity and capability to further develop Orchard Hill Area Government. Not only is Cindy familiar with Orchard Hill's progress, she has been to a large extent responsible for it.

Its fine and dandy to have healthy competition for the position as long as everyone realizes that being an "interested party", "non-voting member", or "member of an advisory committee to this or that administrator" means little more than a casual acquaintance with the matter at hand. This is all the opponents can claim. In an election as serious as this, electing someone other than Cindy McGrath to the position of Orchard Hill President would be both unrewarding and disasterous for everyone involved.

Roy Perdue
President, OHAG

...And Forceful!

To The Editor:

Today, Orchard Hill shall be electing a new president. Cindy McGrath is without question the only candidate with the qualifications to do the job.

Student government on this campus has grown increasingly complex and powerful. Those who seek leadership positions must have experience or they will be lost, wasting a substantial portion of their terms merely learning how the University operates. I don't think that Orchard Hill can afford to wait while a new president learns the ropes.

Cindy McGrath has served as an active officer of the Orchard Hill Area Government, sponsoring a host of legislation designed to benefit the student community. I have been particularly impressed with her ability to influence the decisions of the Student Senate. If she wins, she will be among the most forceful area government presidents the Senate has yet faced, and will be a significant leader in the decentralization of the SGA.

To me, experience and proven commitment are the crucial factors. I urge everyone on the hill to vote for Cindy.

Buildings do sink, but the Alumni Stadium and the new library tower are not among them. However, someone told us that they heard the Southwest towers will be buried by the year 2100. At least we won't be around then to worry about it.

Hitchhiking In Amherst

To The Editor:

The Amherst Board of Selectmen recently received a Report completed by a Committee apointed to make recommendations on ways of controlling Hitchhiking in the Town of Amherst. The Committee recommended the establishment of Courtesy Pickup Stations as one method. The Board therefore, is establishing a Courtesy Pickup Station, on a trial basis, for students wishing to travel south. The station will be located on South Pleasant Street in the vicinity of Walnut Street. We encourage all students to take full advantage of this location.

The Committee also recommended that Hitchhiking in the Central Business District of Amherst be discouraged. We have had numerous complaints and have witnessed the hazards of Hitchhiking in this area. With the advent of the new bus system there appears little justification for Hitchhiking in this area and we want to discourage this practice. We ask you cooperation in bringing these two actions of the Board of Selectmen to the attention of your Student Body. We feel through mutual cooperation the problems associated with Hitchhiking for the pedestrian and the motorist will be alleviated.

Allow Women To Decide

To The Editor:

The recent plethora of anti-abortion letters to the editor has prompted this letter and this question–What right do we men have that enables us to make a value judgement concerning an uterus that does not belong to us?

We, the male of the species, are not really in a position where the decision about abortion is ours to make. You see, we are not the ones who have to carry a growing mass of cells in our bodies for nine months, nor are we the ones who must go through labor with the pain, the agony, and the thought of the complications involved in even the simplest delivery, nor my moralistic friends are we the ones upon whom the eventual responsibility of rearing the child will fall. I find it hard to reason why a law was ever passed in our land of individual freedom which prohibits an individual from making a decision concerning her own body.

So in conclusion I would ask the men to keep their mouths closed and allow the women to make their own choice their own decision. They are capable of it, you know.

Equal Time For WONAAC

To The Editor:

I read in Friday's Collegian that the self-appointed guardian of the unborn, David Kuzmeski, hopes to have the Student Senate vote his newly formed Anti-Abortion Coalition a Recognized Student Organization. I ask the Senate to consider one thing before it votes: WONAAC also wishes funding, and if the Anti-Abortion Coalition gets RSO status, WONAAC deserves equal status. If WONAAC is refused funds, so should the Anti-Abortion Coalition be denied funds. These two organizations represent the two sides of a controversial issue, and I feel the Student Senate will be making a grave error if they fund one without funding the other. I realize Kuzmeski and crew would like nothing better than to have his Coalition funded and have WONAAC left out in the cold. But just as Margaret Molloy refuses to have part of her student activities fee support WONAAC, I will not tolerate my money going to fund an Anti-Abortion Coalition whose professed goal is to take away the one thing many have fought for for so long: the right of the female to make her OWN decision about her OWN fetus in her OWN body without the dictations of some outside force.

Divine Light Club

To The Editor:

I am a first semester freshman at UMass, and have recently started a "Divine Light Club" with about 15 other people. The purpose of the club is to inform people that there is a 15-year-old boy named Guru Maharaj Ji, who is giving "peace" to all people who sincerely want it.

Divine Light Club is now having programs every Thursday evening at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. These programs are to help clear up some of the skepticism that people have concerning Guru Maharaj Ji. Anyone interested is welcome.

Golda Meir Celebrates With Brandeis University

By GINNY PITT
Associated Press Writer

WALTHAM (AP)—Israeli Prime Minister Golda Meir helped celebrate the 25th anniversary of America's only Jewish- sponsored secular university on Tuesday with a call for cooperation as the only road to peace in the Middle East.

Mrs. Meir, speaking at a Brandeis University convocation which also noted Israel's 25th birthday, said cooperation between Jews and Arabs was the only tenable road to peace.

"Our neighbors must know the only real solution to the problem—theirs and ours—is to live in peace and cooperation," Mrs. Meir told an audience of 800 on the tightly guarded campus.

"Our neighbors together with us can make out of the Middle East an area of life . . . and the dignity of the human being."

Security was extremely heavy at Brandeis as about 500 young people, both pro and anti-Israeli, demonstrated on the campus. However, all the demonstrators dispersed by the time Mrs. Meir arrived, 40 minutes behind schedule.

Bishop Tries to Control Walpole

WALPOLE (AP)—A new warden—the fourth in little more than a year—tried to gain control of troubled Walpole prison Tuesday.

Kenneth Bishop spent most of his second day at the prison meeting with inmates and guards, heading off a threatened strike by guards and trying to calm inmates who refused to do anything until the last warden was gone.

The status of that last warden—Raymond Porelle—remained in doubt Tuesday as meetings continued with members of Gov. Francis W Sargent's staff.

Porelle verbally resigned his job last Friday night in a telephone conversation with Correction Commissioner John O. Boone, but Boone asked him to take several days leave and think about it.

Since Monday Porelle has been discussing the situation with correction officials and members of Sargent's staff, but in the meantime Bishop was appointed acting commissioner.

On Tuesday Bishop was reported to be restoring inmates privileges of having night visitors and telephone calls and reopening the prison canteen.

Bishop also said there would be no more "skin shakedowns" of visitors during daylight hours and said inmates would be allowed to purchase televisions and radios.

The restoration of the various privileges reversed policies instituted by Porelle last December when a five-week lockup of the prison began simultaneously with a search for contraband.

Me. Senate Defeats Equal Rights Amendment

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP)—The Maine Senate refused by a single vote to ratify the Equal Rights Amendment Tuesday, sending it back to the House for what could be a death blow.

Approximately 100 women pressed into the small Senate chamber to witness the outcome of what some veteran lawmakers called a lobbying campaign unsurpassed in the history of the legislature.

A low hiss emanated from the crowd when the 17-16 balloting was over, and a few proponents left the chamber crying.

The House could insist on its former action, which would keep the matter alive or it could vote to concur with the Senate which would kill the measure.

The amendment passed in the House by a 10 votes margin.

$200,000 Buried In Recluses' Home

By HOWARD ULMAN
Associated Press Writer

CRANSTON, R.I. (AP)—Police maintained an around-the-clock guard Tuesday on a trash-filled house that has yielded the bodies of an elderly couple and reportedly at least $200,000 in uncashed checks, bank books and stock certificates.

An attorney for a nephew of the dead couple said Tuesday huge piles of rubbish have not been cleared from the house and "It would be surprising to me if they didn't find something" else.

The dead couple, Raymond and Marie Stickney, were described by neighbors as recluses who lived on the same street for approximately 40 years. Both were said to have been commercial artists.

Stickney's body was found by police and firemen last Friday, wrapped in a blanket in a pile of trash. He was said to have been about 80 years old.

The body of his wife, 76, was discovered the next day under another pile of trash in the kitchen, after police and highway crews removed five truckloads of trash from the five-room house.

Authorities said both Stickneys died several weeks ago of natural causes.

A source close to the case said he was told by the attorney general's office, which is holding the valuables discovered so far, that they were worth about $200,000.

Atty. Gen. Richard J. Israel said it was his department's policy not to disclose the worth of personal possessions received in such cases. He said an administrator or some other person to handle the estate probably would be named within two weeks and might reveal the exact value of the items.

The search for the bodies began when a mailman told police mail he delivered to the house was uncollected for several days. An oil delivery man told police he got no answer at the house. And neighbors said they had not seen either of the Stickneys for at least five weeks.

This Pulitzer-Prize winning play, called a "black-black comedy" by its author Charles Gordone, explores the hard times and satirical twists of ghetto life. After a two-year run at the Promenade Theatre, the play has since been presented by two national touring companies in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Chicago and Boston.

Summer Studies Offered In Cairo

Summer Studies in Cairo, Egypt are available through the University of Texas at Austin which is co-ordinating the program. UMass Prof. David Biddle has details of the program which will run from May 28 to August 8.

The program has a two-fold aim. First, through the study of the culture and history of the city of Cairo, the student will become familiar with the civilization of the Middle East in its most remarkable, best preserved, and largest, urban center. Second, through systematic analysis of the urban and growth problems of the city, and comparative reference to other cities, the program will develop a core of students interested in the problems of urbanization on a world-wide scale. Graduate and upper level undergraduate students in Middle East Studies, Urban Studies, or related fields at American universities who are U.S. citizens and permanent U.S. residents are eligible to apply for a fellowship. A knowledge of Arabic is not required but is preferred. The fellowship will cover round-trip air transportation, in-country transportation, enrollment costs, room and board for the duration of the program, and health and accident insurance for the same period.

Interested students should contact Prof. Biddle in 707 Herter Hall for an application form.

Downing Wins

In Monday night's town elections in Belchertown, a sometimes bitter campaign between two UMass students came to a decision.

Paul F. Downing defeated John P. Bay in the Board of Health race, 615 to 367 votes. There was only one seat to be filled.

Precinct 5 Voters To Meet

Sunday, March 11, there will be an information meeting in Precinct 5 at the East Street School from 2:00 to 4:00 p.m. to discuss the warrant for the town meeting on March 12.

All residents of Precinct 5 are invited to attend to meet with their representatives and to express their views.

Dinner To Aid Vietnamese

A "Dinner for the Benefit of the People of Vietnam and their Hospitals" will be held from 5 to 7 p.m. Sunday at the Merrill Science Center Commons, Amherst College.

Organized by Boltwood House, an Amherst College service organization, the dinner will feature a variety of Vietnamese foods. Musicians, with a repertoire of both traditional and modern Vietnamese folk songs, will perform throughout the evening.

Proceeds from the dinner will be administered for hospital reconstruction in North and South Vietnam by the American Friends Service Committee in Cambridge, Mass. Many hospitals have been destroyed in the past 10 years of war, and accordingly, medical facilities and care are at a premium. Boltwood House hopes to help ease this situation by raising $500.

Tickets are a minimum donation of $3 for adults and $2 for children under 12. Reservations and further information can be obtained by calling Boltwood House, 256-6823.

Got To Be An Easier Way

By TONY GRANITE

ADD CRUSADING CAMPUS EDITORS: the newspaper at Indiana is trying to get the local administration "to conform with the Indiana Public Disclosure law by putting a detailed 1972-73 budget, including employe salaries, in a convenient location, such as the library" for the scrutiny of all interested persons.

The Indiana Daily Student says it published a partial lisst of 1971-72 faculty salaries, last summer, after an enterprising reporter devoted 30 hours to digging the information out of the Board of Accounts files in the state capitol.

If the administration won't come through with a complete list of the latest information, IDS editorializes "We're going to go through the time-consuming process of copying them by hand (in Indianapolis). And we're going to print them..."

There's got to be an easier way. How about Xerox?

CAMPUS COPS at USoFla-Tampa have a mandate from their Chief to make "sporadic traffic checks whenever they can," according to a recent Oracle revelation.

And it seems that they chose a recent Monday to spot-check cars and issue four citations and six warnings, to the dismay of Oracle editors, who devoted almost half their editorial page to comment under the banner headline: "Spot checks? They out of tickets? Coffee shop closed?"

After commenting on the better uses of the officers time that are available, the editors wrote that "if the force's taste for these checks is not stopped, we can with a little imagination envision the day when the procedure is expanded to include classrooms (they already spend a lot of time in the coffee shops).

" 'Just a few minutes of your time, professor, we need to check on fee cards. They're all supposed to carry them, you know. Oh, could you hold my gun and belt? I don't fit in these tiny seats with all my life-support systems on'."

WEATHER REPORTS are taking on a new climate of words in the Indiana Daily Student, as indicated by this one, titled, "Sun Snuffed."

"Wednesday's brief appearance of the sun will be snuffed out by increasing cloudiness, today, but at least it will be somewhat warmer. Today's high will be in the mid-30s, tonight's low near 25 and Friday's high in the 40s.

BC Advances to Div I Q-Finals

NEWTON, Mass. (AP) — Ed Penty scored two goals leading Boston College in a 4-2 victory over New Hampshire in the ECAC Division I Hockey quarterfinals Tuesday night.

The Eagles stacked up a quick two goal lead, saw it cut to a 2-1 early in the third period on a goal by the Wildcats' Ed Freni before Penty uncorked his first marker.

New Hampshire cut the lead to one point again on a marker by Bill Beaney, but with 26 seconds left in the game, Penty poked in his final goal into an open net, giving him a tie for the school record of 76 goals in a season.

The game ended New Hampshire's season at 16-10-e.

BC moves on to the semifinals Friday with a 20-5-1 mark.

Desautels Takes Fourth

By MIKE ELLIOTT

On March 3rd the New England Intercollegiate Fencing Conference Championship competition was held at W.P.I. Fencers representing UMass were: Art Stacy-B foil; Jim Rose-B sabre; Tom Ebitz-B epee; and Bernie Desautels-A foil. Stacy, Rose, and Ebitz were eliminated in the first round. Desautels advanced to the finals with a 7-3 record. In a very stiff, competitive final, Bernie tied for third place with the M.I.T. fencer but lost it on indicators and finished fourth. First place went to Brandeis, and second went to Holy Cross.

In the team event, M.I.T. beat out Brandeis for the first place trophy. UMass placed tenth--the major reason being that they did not have enough fencers to fill the team roster. UMass lacked one fencer in both the epee and sabre divisions.

The UCLA Bruins have one more regular season test--against Southern California Saturday--before they go into the NCAA Championship and stake a claim to their seventh straight national college basketball title.

The strain of a 70-game winning streak is beginning to show and there is always the shadow of North Carolina State, close behind with a similar 25-0 record for the season and a thirst for the No. 1 position in the rankings.

UCLA maintained its strong grip at the top of The Associated Press poll this week despite a scare in the game with the Stanford Indians, who led at the half and put up a tough defensive battle before bowing 51-45. Southern Cal., a traditional rival, can be expected to be twice as fired up.

UMass Athletics Is Big Business

By DON GLICKSTEIN

(Editor's Note: The following is the third of a series of articles about the Athletic Department and athletics at UMass.)

UMass athletics is expense accounts, wining and dining, Howard Johnsons, cigars, politics, luncheons and sports.

It is big business.

It means more than a half-million dollars raised from student athletic fees plus coaching and administrative salaries plus athletic scholarships plus capital outlay plus maintenance and operation.

Cigars

Indicative of the big business approach to athletics are purchases of 50 Master Corona and 50 El Producto cigars by former Physical Education Dean Warren McGuirk for the New England Patriots coaching staff two years ago. This money came from student athletic fees.

Financial Manager Aloysius Rufe admitted yesterday that the cigars were purchased for "public relations". The Patriots, who train at UMass, bring approximately $45,000 a year to UMass, according to Rufe. Ex-Patriot General Manager Upton Bell was "not enthusiastic about returning" to UMass last summer, said Rufe, but the coaches, impressed by conditions at UMass, wished to return. The Patriots returned.

Images

Being business-like the Athletic Department has not been adverse to spending money on its image.

It has used student funds to send its administrators to testimonial dinners.

"This is not a unique thing", explained Rufe. He said that it was done only when the people involved had known each other on a "business basis", and that any administrator or coach who goes is representing the entire UMass Athletic Department.

Student athletic fees pay for business luncheons and dinners.

In fiscal 1972, the Athletic Department spent $289 at the Lord Jeffery Inn in Amherst. It's business took it to the Jolly Bull in Hadley, the Mill Valley Grist Mill of South Amherst, Boraschis in Boston, and Marriott Motor Inns.

The business that occurred in these restaurants resulted from faculty and athlete recruitment, press luncheons, and other meetings. Participants at some of the meals included former Dean McGuirk, ex-Chancellor Oswald Tippo, ex-Student Senate President Lee Sandwen, P. E. Dean David Bischoff, and Asst. Athletic Director Robert O'Connell.

Tickets

In the name of public relations, the Athletic Department is generous with its tickets to sports events. Football tickets totaling $36 were given to a Parking Office and a Dining Commons administrator in 1971. A campus chaplain received 4 season tickets totaling $64 that year, and $128 of tickets for the BU game for the "personal use" of Dean McGuirk were taken from student funds.

If a football game is "not a sellout and not going to be a sellout", Asst. Athletic Director Robert O'Connell said, up to 1273 tickets are given away to groups such as the Northampton Veterans Hospital, the Belchertown State School, the Boy Scouts, and high school football teams.

Sport team captains receive 4 complimentary tickets for each game, seniors 3, and other team members 2 apiece. The Athletic Department also honors University administration requests and requests from the sports publicity office.

There has been a "decided decrease since 1968" in the sales of football seasons tickets, said Sports Promotion Director Vic Fusia earlier this week. He said that the decrease was evident even in Ivy League schools.

Confidential Conferences

In the fall of last school year, the Athletic Department spent $222 of student athletic fees for the rental of conference rooms at the Hadley Howard Johnson's Motor Lodge.

This writer, because of a deadline, was unable to reach Asst. Athletic Director O'Connell for an explanation, but Financial Manager Rufe said that he believed the rooms were rented to the Athletic Director Search Committee.

Rufe said that Howard Johnson's was used rather than the Campus Center because the off-campus location would insure the anonymity of the Director candidates.

Campus Center records show that conference rooms were available for the same dates. The rooms would have cost nothing for a group such as the Director Search Committee.

Recruitment

The Athletic Department spent $14,900 for 1971-72 recruitment in baseball, basketball, football, and hockey alone. This money came from student athletic fees.

The head coach of each sport decides who goes on what recruiting trip where. There is no Yankee Conference rule that recruiting must be done in-state.

Trustees OK Land Transfer

By BILL DENSMORE

The UMass Board of Trustees yesterday approved the sharing of the cost of two pump and ladder trucks with the town of Amherst, and the temporary transfer of 47 acres from UMass to the state Department of Public Works for the construction of a North Pleasant St. bypass.

In other action at the monthly trustees' meeting, held in Ashland, the trustees also approved a fiscal 1974 capital outlay request of 12.2 million dollars for the Amherst campus.

Capital outlay funds, submitted to the legislature with the UMass budget, are used for construction and maintenance costs for UMass properties. Amherst Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery indicated much of the Amherst capital funds would be used for building renovations and safety improvements on campus.

Also approved was the donation of a track of land near the Sylvan dormitories to be used as a fire sub-station. The land transferred for the construction of the bypass will eventually be returned to the town of Amherst, after which Amherst will give UMass the land North Pleasant St. runs on, and North Pleasant St. will be closed to automobile traffic.

UMass President Robert C. Wood urged the legislature and Governor Francis W. Sargent to set up a 25 million dollar aid program to help offset the "total cost of attendance" at the University, instead of just tuition.

Wood also attacked President Richard M. Nixon's proposed federal budget cuts, saying they would "seriously restrict" financial aid to all UMass campuses.

Frederick S. Troy, chairman of the Committee on Faculty and Educational Policy, reported that graduate enrollments at UMass will be reduced by 200 students next year, to adjust for budgetary restrictions. Troy also said vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs Robert W. Gluckstern was making up "specific attempts to attract teaching assistants from minority groups."

He also said a full report of the status of minorities in graduate programs would be forthcoming at the May trustees' meeting.

Troy commended School of Education Dean Dwight Allen for running a "lively and spirited operation", but said Allen had not discussed the job market for teachers with Troy's committee.

Troy also said he was concerned about the future of the School of Education, in the face of upcoming financial cutbacks.

Radical Women's Council To Meet

A group called the Radical Women's Council has been formed to serve the needs of revolutionary feminists at the University. The group is comprised of women who see sexism, racism, and imperialism as inherent evils which perpetuate the capitalist system. The Radical Women's Council finds these problems to be interrelated and reinforced within our society. The Council feels these problems call for a change in the political and economic structure of the nation.

The Radical Women's Council was also formed to facilitate an alliance with third world women, and is further seeking concrete ways to aid working women. The Council hopes to increase the number of welfare mothers and older women in the part-time degree program, to increase financial aid, to equalize the pay scale for staff members, and to review the admissions policy at the University.
